The pith and marrow of the life-bringing gospel of the Son of God, that demands and obligates us to deny ourselves, take up our cross daily and follow Christ, and to reckon ourselves "dead indeed unto sin," and "alive unto God," if ever mentioned, is only in a modified sense, and that to blur and blind, and by a fine spun exhibition of grandiloquent, metaphysical argument, prove it was to be understood in a metaphysical sense, and did not mean "the soul that sinneth it shall die." "Whosoever committeth sin trangresseth also the law." "He that committeth sin is of the devil." On the negative their natural appetites are well plied with opiates drawn from the Scriptures, such as these:

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." "There is none that doeth good, no, not one." "For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do." Let us look at the affirmative: "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death." "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Then, I ask, what is left? "Let not sin, therefore, reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. . . . Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Finally, it is declared, "And thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."

It is no wonder God withholds his blessed presence and Spirit from the present formal mass of religionists. Present to the majority a plain "thus saith the Lord," and if it clashes with an indoctrinated opinion, they will cling to an error with the tenacity of life, and defend it with the zeal of a Tetzel, or an Eck in the palmy days of Papacy,—as Solomon declared, "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done." It is even so. Hear the weeping prophet Jeremiah concerning the church in his day: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophecy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?" The people professing to love God loved error in the days of the prophet, and it is even so now. Prove from the word of God by the evidences declared therein to precede the coming of Jesus, and they will reject them. Show conclusively that in the last days iniquity was to abound; read from the words of Jesus that the tares and the wheat are to "grow together until the harvest"; and the "harvest is the end of the world," and they will love the false prophecy of a temporal millennium, a conversion of the world,—turned away from the truth unto fables.

We are led to inquire in the next place, what agency has produced such a prodigious antagonism to the simplicity, beauty and saving power of the gospel? I answer, it is twofold in its character. In our day, as in the days of the prophet, the priests by reason of their influence enforce rule over the people, and while Jeremiah denounced judgment upon them for their sins, the false teachers preached smooth things, which their carnal hearts desired. They loved to have it so, and it is precisely so in our day. The ministry have been applauded, caressed, and paid just in proportion as their abilities and well educated talents have enabled them to weave a web of learned and eloquent sophistry around the consciences of their hearers, who have admired the man more than the searching truths of the gospel he did not preach, and loved him the more and the better as he made out the gospel to be just what it was not; and by this process of sowing to the flesh, they are soon to reap corruption.

The seventh state of the apocalyptic dispensational church is now manifest. And that the Laodicean church is symbolic of the present state of the churches, cannot be doubted from the description of the Revelator. Hear him: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and BLIND, and naked." Such is not the description of a primitive church in the apostolic age; but of one when the "Judge standeth at the door,"—a church that is living when all the signs are past, and, as Jesus said, "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that (I) am near, even at the doors."

Reader, mark well this sentence, addressed to the same church,—"Behold! I stand at the door and knock." Behold, look, see all things bespeak it. I am knocking by all the signs in the past, the condition of the world at this present day. Present the plain Scripture arguments on this glorious subject. Prove the words of Jesus taught to his disciples,—"Thy kingdom come,"—are virtually a desire for his return, and it manifests an opposition on their part. Read the apostle's anticipated joy at the return of his Lord and his reunion with his brethren: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy." "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

To the present church the above words are a torment. The reply frequently to the evidences of the Lord's coming is, We are now just prepared to convert the world. Our splendid institutions of learning, with able professors, our splendid places of worship,—we are not in want of any thing that can add to our ability in diffusing our doctrines. Our missionaries are now encompassing sea and land. If this is not a literal filling up of the apocalyptic mould of the Laodicean church, it seems to me it never will be done. And the reason they do not see it, is clearly specified by our Lord,—"Thou art blind." A blind person cannot see. Place him amidst the beauties of nature. It is all chaos. Place him on the verge of a precipice. He discerns not his danger. Apply the figure. The Laodicean is in the midst of the fulfillment of prophecy. He cannot see it. He is on the verge of the judgment. He cannot discern it. Why? The cause is plainly stated. Hear the Lord Jesus speak;—"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thy eyes with eye-salve that thou mayest see."

It will cost an entire compliance with the word of God to buy this gold and this white raiment; and then the eye-salve will enable any one to see the meaning of the above description. The Lord enable thee to buy it, if thou hast not obtained it. Soon the Master of the house will rise up and "shut to the door." S. S. BREWER.

Trav'ler, yonder is the city
You so long have tried to gain,
Soon your brow 'll be crowned with beauty,
And with Jesus you will reign.

The tree of life is blooming,
The leaves the nations heal,
Life's river is there flowing,
Immortal life we'll feel

Cheer up, then, weary trav'ler,
We soon shall gain that rest,
And with our glorious Savior
Shall be forever blest.

Profit and Loss.

In all well regulated business, where the proprietors are desirous of knowing how their money schemes of the past six or twelve months have worked, it is important first that a detailed account of the entire stock of the concern be taken; this with other accounts is placed so as to show at a glance whether the profit or loss is the greater. The greatest care is necessary on the part of the book-keeper that all accounts should be correctly "posted," so that none or but few errors should appear at this time; and in order that the book-keeper be proficient in his business, he received an education in accordance.

"But," says one, "what has book-keeping to do with salvation? it's about this we want to read and hear." Hold on a little, my friend, and we 'll talk a little about the GREAT subject of "Profit and Loss." By nature, you and I are the children of wrath. On account of the disobedience of one, many were made sinners; and by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation. Under the sentence, "dust thou art," we were all going back to our original earthy condition; and had not God interposed in behalf of mankind, the account would always have stood—loss—loss—loss.

The Scriptures set forth the matter of profit and loss in a manner so clear, so unmistakably plain, that you have only to look into them there to discover how the business stands. The precise language on this subject is recorded by the accountant, Mark 8th chap., 36th verse. Thus it reads, taking the 35th verse as the connection,—"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. For what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matthew also records the same truth in 16th chap., 25th and 26th verses; Luke in 9: 24, and John in 12: 25. Now I have carefully examined these writings, as I have all the writings of the same men, and while I discover much said about soul, life, mind, I do not find a solitary nor accompanied sentence that intimates in the smallest degree that soul, life or mind are immortal.

What then is the conclusion? It is, if you wish your account to stand on the profit side, you must show your willingness to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ; you must be willing to endure the cross, despising the shame, if you want to live and reign with Christ. You must speak uprightly, walk righteously, and despise the gain of oppressions. You must shake your hands from the holding of bribes, stop your ears from hearing of blood, and shut your eyes from seeing evil. If ye do these things, ye shall never fail; for you shall dwell on high,—not in the sense of dwelling "beyond the bounds of time and space," and calling that "high," for it may just as well be low. And above and beyond all this you shall see the King in his beauty, and be made like him. You shall inherit substance, and dwell in the land forever. Now this is dwelling on high, this is being exalted to inherit the land.

Many are the good things promised; abundant is the testimony of God on this delightful subject; and yet, ah! yet will men sooner delight in the vain traditions of dead men's writings and living ones' words, than accept the clear teachings of the Holy Spirit. I ask, in all candor and sincerity of heart, will God hold such guiltless who have had the same Bible we have, and have taught the fables of heathenism and called it the word of God? I trow not; and the reason why I doubt His holding such guiltless is, he will "not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain." Moreover, God has said, "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? . . . Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. I have heard what the prophets said that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? Yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart; which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbor. . . . The prophet that hath a dream let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord."

All this I offer to show the necessity of prudential care and use of the means placed in your hands, so that, in the day when the books are opened and your account comes to be "balanced," it may appear on the profit side.

The contrary side is soon told. Presuming we have done our utmost to gain the whole world; that we have fretted and worried ourselves and families, neighbors and acquaintances, in order to gain that which at best will pass from our grasp (presuming we have grasped it), what shall it profit us? We may have added house to house, field to field; had our ships traversing the mighty deep, bringing to us all that gratifies every sense we have, pouring into our lap the bright gold that glitters to deceive, and filling our houses with all the luxuries of ease and elegance;—we may have been what the world call great (Alexander the great, the mightiest warrior of ancient times, after having led his tens of thousands to the field of blood, could not reflect with pleasure; and at one time it is said of him, he wished he were Diogenes);—we may have held the world of nations in such a position as that the shaking of our finger or the nodding of our head would raise or cause such to fall;—thousands, aye, tens of thousands may have hung breathlessly on our words. The carping politician, in order to make capital, schools himself; studiously does he plod in a given line for the gaining of such information as shall best qualify him to hold electrically the minds of those to whom he eloquently pours forth his classic lore. The minister of God, forgetful of his calling, seeks the bubble "popularity"; he gains it, he delights in it, and the result is he would sooner be popular than tell the whole truth. What has he gained? What the warrior, the monarch, the politician, the rich man? Gained! not so; lost, this is the word, and it may also be said, "Verily they have their reward"; but it is a sorry one,—it is death; and this is the reward of the fools who for the purpose of self-gratification will say, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." But God says, Not so; "Fool, this night thy soul (life) shall be required of thee; then whose shall these things be that thou hast provided?"

Having offered reasons for both sides, what is the conclusion of the matter?

The profit side shows great gain to the christian; he may have worked hard, suffered privations, have been a slave of men, endured the galling yoke of bondage, suffered the scornful reproach of men, and finally made to die for his faith; yet great is his reward. It is endless life; freedom from the cruel task-master; deliverance from the bondage of corruption; it is eternal joy.

The loss side is pleasure, pride, vain glory, selfishness. It is the good will of the world. It is the present. It ends, and has its reward in death; for "the wages of sin is death." And now, after all done and said, what does it amount to if we lay not these things to heart? Has God spoken, and shall we stop our ears? Has he called, and shall we disobey the call? Has he demanded our obedience, and shall we still refuse? Will it be well or ill with us in "that day"? Shall it be said to us, "Come up higher," or, "Depart, ye cursed"? "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men" to seek life that you may gain it, and thus be constituted a joy and rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

The Wanderer's Return.

AIR—"Annie Lyle."

Down from the bending willows
Now my harp I'll take,
And from strings so long neglected
Heavenly themes awake.
From this land of death I'll hasten
To my Savior's side;
By these dark and sickly waters
I'll no more abide.

CHORUS.—Bending willows, land of darkness,
Babel's stream, farewell!
Thoughts of Zion, lovely Zion,
Now my bosom swell!

Gone has been all heavenly comfort,
Gone my Savior's smile;
Nought of earth could give me pleasure,
Nought my grief beguile.
Mocking foes would often chide me,
Saying, "why so sad?"
But, when I remembered Zion,
How could I be glad?

CHO.—Bending willows, etc.

Now my Savior comes to meet me,
With a smile of love;
Pilgrims, too, with welcome greet me
As I homeward rove.
Angels look with joy to see me
In the narrow way,
And one kindly comes to guard me,
Lest again I stray.

CHO.—Bending willows, etc.

Now, as onward still I'm gazing,
Rises to my sight
My long looked for, lovely city,
Gemmed with heavenly light;
Tones of sweet, seraphic music
Floating on the air,
Charm me on with hastening footsteps,—
Soon I shall be there.

The Seven Year Theory.

It is well known that physiologists hold, extensively if not generally, that the particles of the human body, by the various processes of digestion, secretion, excretion (including perspiration,) also inspiration and respiration, are constantly changing and giving way to other particles, so that after a certain period, probably about seven years, all will have been exchanged for others. According to this view the body, after seven years, may have none of the particles it now has, unless some shall come round again to us during the period.

Whether this theory is correct or not is not now the question. But as all people and all things should have their dues, I may correct what seems to me a misapprehension of the theory itself. It has been interpreted as if, at the beginning of each seven years, the body must be young, formed of fresh particles, then passing through its vigor and maturity, until, grown old after seven years, it is suddenly renewed by an instantaneous exchange of all its particles.

The absurdities that would follow would suffice to refute any theory. But the real import of the theory in question is quite different. Let us illustrate.

The average duration of human life is found to be about thirty or thirty-three years. So we call this period a generation. But we do not mean that each successive generation of mankind consists of persons of the same age; or that it begins with a race of infants, who all grow up to the age of thirty or thirty-three years, to be instantly replaced by a new race of infants. No such thing is intended by the doctrine of so many years for a generation. But such an interpretation of the doctrine would be equivalent to the above version of the seven year theory, and the absurdities involved would be quite as conclusive against it. But as in the present generation there are persons of all ages, under a certain age, so by the seven year theory is meant that in the body and particles that have belonged to it for all periods under seven years. The change is supposed to be gradual and constant, not sudden. The change from infancy to old age is made, not by one of these periods,—which are no more distinctly marked than the successive generations,—but by the combined effect of all of them. The seven year theory may be true or not. Any well read physician can refer to the observations and experiments by which it is supposed to be proven. But nothing is gained by misunderstanding the theory. By its own import, and before the facts that may be within reach, let it stand or fall. C. F. H.

FAITH AND WORKS.—It is an unhappy division that has been made between faith and works. Though in my intellect I may divide them, just as in the candle I know there is both light and heat; yet put out the candle and they are both gone—one remains not without the other; so is it with faith and works.—Selden.

The Scriptures.

It seems there has existed from time almost immemorial a class of persons who delight to make it appear that there is something particularly occult and mysterious with regard to the Scriptures, and therefore but few can comprehend their meaning. Well, the declaration of the wise man that "there is no new thing under the sun," particularly applies to this case. The records of history show that the Jews at a very early period imbibed the idea that the Scriptures contained some hidden meaning—something which did not appear on the face of the Word. Hence the introduction of the cabalistic (mysterious) science, so called, the understanding of which they maintained enabled them to explain this secret knowledge, which must be obtained of this favored few. The Cabalists maintained that every letter, word and number in the law contained a mystery explainable only by themselves; in fine, "they were the people" only that could understand Scripture!

From this time we come down a little later and find the cabalistic science existing under another name. One man within the walls of the seven-hilled city claims the prerogative of the cabalistic science. Indeed his fame was so great it was deemed quite proper for him to place a sign on the most conspicuous part of his person. The word "MYSTERY" was worn on the front of the Pope's mitre or cap until the great reformer, Martin Luther, pointed him out as the character of Rev. 17: 5, since which time he has taken off this sign, but with the understanding that he remains alone capable of explaining all Scripture and elucidating all spiritual mysteries and difficulties. Now when the Protestants broke away from this old Mother of Harlots, it is quite apparent they brought away with them some vestiges of this science: e. g., when a plain, positive "thus saith the Lord" is reiterated from the sacred volume, and professed ministers of Jesus Christ declare unblushingly "it does not mean what it says," but themselves must explain it so as to make it mean something entirely different from what it says, which proves of course (if this be true) there is something extremely mysterious about the Scriptures. When God says the "very day" it goes dies his "thoughts perish," these cabalists say nay;—the rich mines of thought just begin to expand, now that he has dropped this cumbrous clay; and that instead of not knowing "any thing," as soon as dead they immediately mount up to the heights of angelic wisdom! And when Christ told his disciples, "Whither I go ye cannot come," they think this should certainly be turned topsy-turvy, and then gravely quote the language of the apostle relative to the incarnation of Jesus Christ: "Great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh," etc. 1 Tim. 3: 16. How many have tried to screen themselves with this passage of Scripture when God's word militated against their creed; but it has no reference to the understanding of the Scriptures whatever, but the mystery of Divinity, being linked with humanity, and dying on the cross for our sins. God says, "If ANY,"—that is, rich, poor, learned or unlearned, black or white, noble or ignoble,—"If ANY of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to ALL men liberally, . . . and it SHALL be given him."

But the Spirit of God is very necessary to make us understand the Scriptures. I have heard of some (thank God I do not often meet such an one) who disclaim the Spirit's agency to help our infirmities, and declare the Word is all the help we shall have while passing through this vale of tears. Did our Master think thus? I think not. I understand him to teach his disciples that the Spirit was more necessary for them than his personal presence. Hear him: "Nevertheless, I tell you the truth: it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." But after the Spirit was given on the day of Pentecost, did it not fulfill that promise, so that we have no right to expect help from that agent? Peter did not think so. Hear him on the occasion of his great harvest sermon: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Then if the Lord has not ceased to call, we may still expect the Spirit's agency.

How do men know who shall preach, if the Spirit does not direct in this matter? The Word does not say that Miles Grant at a certain time again shall preach, or that H. L. H. shall do so at the age of seventeen years. Then how did they know unless the Spirit taught them that the Lord would have them do so? Yet I presume no one doubts but they are called of God to preach, as well as many others. Well, how did God call them? Not by his word so they could understand that it meant them, unless the Spirit had set it home to their hearts. It is astonishing to hear those who make any pretensions to a belief in the Scriptures declare that "the Word is all the Spirit there is." Are they so blind as not to see that the Spirit existed prior to the Scriptures, and was the great agent in producing the Bible? Did not the Spirit move holy men to write the Word? So says Peter. Then it was not written by the "will" or fancy of men, but God saw fit to use two agents to produce the Word, and the great moving agent was the Spirit! Christ tells us that this Spirit will convict the ungodly of sin, and comfort and enlighten his disciples. Why do not worldly wise men understand the Scriptures? Because "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

Is it not in keeping with our own observation that the simple literati do not know and understand most about the Scriptures? It is true that God calls some learned men to preach his Gospel. Paul seems to have been of this class, but most of the apostles were so ignorant and unlearned that it marked their personal appearance. Acts 4: 13. But were they efficient preachers? What helped them to preach so successfully? Aye, methinks it was the "Spirit" that helped their infirmities. Rom. 8: 26. Not Cabalism or worldly wisdom; but that Spirit which Christ says proceedeth from his Father. John 15: 26.

Speaking of the godly who search very diligently by the aid of the Spirit's influence possessing an understanding of the Scriptures superior to the mere literati, brings to mind a historical fact, published by Grant Thorburn, the substance of which I will give.

"The witty Earl of Rochester being in company with King Charles II., his majesty, the chaplain, and some ministers of state, after they had been discoursing on business, the king suddenly exclaimed, 'Let our thoughts be unbended from the cares of state, and give us a generous glass of wine, that cheereth, as the Scripture saith, both God and man.' The queen, hearing this, modestly said she thought there could be no such text in the Scriptures, and that it was but little else than blasphemy. The king replied that he was not prepared to turn to chapter and verse, but was sure he had met with it in his Scripture reading. The chaplain was applied to, and he was of the queen's opinion. Rochester, suspecting the king was right, slipped out of the room to inquire for a Bible among the servants. None of them could read but David, the Scotch cook, and he, they said, always carried a Bible about him. David being called, recollected both the text and where to find it. David, on being introduced to the royal company, read the text as he was requested. It was found in Judges 9 : 13,—'And the vine said unto them, Should I leave my wine, which cheereth God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?'

The king smiled, the queen asked pardon, the chaplain blushed. Rochester then asked this doctor of divinity if he could interpret the text now it was produced? The chaplain was mute. The Earl therefore applied to David for the exposition. He then begged leave to say that under the Old Testament dispensation there were meat offerings, and drink offerings; the latter consisted of wine, which was typical of the blood of the Mediator, which by a metaphor was said to cheer God, as he was well pleased in the way of salvation, that he had appointed, whereby his justice was satisfied, his law fulfilled, his mercy reigned, his grace triumphed, all his perfections harmonized, the sinner was saved, and God in Christ glorified. The king looked astonished, the queen shed tears. Rochester, after some very severe reflections upon the chaplain, gravely moved that his majesty would be pleased to send the chaplain into the kitchen to turn cook, and that he would make this cook his chaplain."

Now who does not believe this poor servant had the assistance of the Spirit to enlighten his mind and lead him into truth? Let us then live so that our bodies may be the temple for the Holy Spirit to dwell in.

B. MATHEWSON.

Sandy Hill, N. Y., July, '62.

Prov. 25 : 11.

"A word fitly spoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

This imagery denotes the preciousness of a word "spoken in due season." We are continually hearing, reading, or experiencing, how good such words are. God has blessed them in the strengthening of weak hands, the comforting of the mourner, the reclaiming of the wanderer, and the conversion of souls. Their efficacy is not often apparent at the time, they may even be uttered in weakness and discouragement, and the speaker may never be apprised of their effect till "the day of the Lord shall reveal it." "Take no thought what ye shall speak," said our Savior to those whom he commissioned to go before rulers and kings to declare his gospel. His Spirit was to be their dependence, to impart to them all necessary wisdom, and give their words potency.

His influence is still needful, if we would have his blessing accompany our words. If winged by the prayer of faith, the words of the humblest christian may reach the heart, and be "as nails fastened in a sure place."

How often have the inadvertent words of a little child aroused the conscience of a parent, and led him to the Savior. With these encouragements, can we be backward in speaking a word for Jesus? But let us bear in mind that our words must be in season—not ill-timed, lest we bring reproach upon the cause we love; beware also of "darkening counsel by words without knowledge." If we "lack wisdom," let us ask it of God.

"A word to the wise is sufficient," we're told,
And the words of the wise like apples of gold.
"A word in due season our pilgrimage cheers,"
It awaketh our hopes, and allayeth our fears.
A word to the sinner in kindness, may win
His feet from the paths of destruction and sin.
A word to the toil-worn may aid him to bear
His cross till the crown of the victor he wear.
Let one "fitly spoken" the aged one cheer,
And youth hear the words by experience dear.
Sow broadcast good seed, well watered by prayer,
Then trust it in faith to the Husbandman's care.

For the Crisis.

Scatter Tracts.

It seems to me that our brethren are almost asleep in regard to buying and distributing tracts and books among the people. The world is dead asleep in regard to what is coming on the earth. Now it is our duty as christians to warn the world of what is coming. Dear brethren and sisters, let me appeal to you—you who love Christ and your neighbor. You see the danger ahead; you know unless something is done, your neighbors and friends must perish. You cannot go and tell every one personally what you would like to have them know; but you can send and buy one, two or five dollars worth of tracts and books, and give them to your friends, and those books will tell them all about what is coming much better than some of us can. Now it costs a preacher ten dollars, perhaps, to go on the cars and return home, and while he is gone he preaches five or six sermons—it may be more and it may be less. You see that when he is gone they have not got his sermon to read, but if they have those books and tracts in the house they will be preaching to them every day.

I do think that there is a great responsibility resting upon us who know the truth, to do all in our power to get others to see it. Dear brethren, in the name of high Heaven let us wake up to this matter. What is done must be done quickly. Jesus is coming! Let us be awake to our duty! The Lord has called us into his vineyard to work. Remember, if we get the penny we must work and not be idle. May the Lord help us to see our duty, and then do it with all our might.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 6, 1862.

☞ PLEASE REMEMBER to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—G.

☞ BE PARTICULAR, when quoting Scripture, to give it word for word, as it reads in the Bible. We have made this request several times, but still some do not observe it. Never allow yourself to quote from memory. Every one should have Cruden's Concordance at hand, and always turn to the passage, and see that you neither add to the Scripture, or take from it. Many errors are sustained by misquoted passages from the Bible.

If you omit any words in the text, put in several periods in their place; thus, "The wages . . . . is death."—Rom. 6 : 23. In this quotation we have left out the words, "of sin," and put the dots in their place. Whatever is quoted accurately from the Bible, or any other book, should have two commas with their stems turned upward at the commencement of the quotation, and two stems, called apostrophes, downward, at the close; except when one quotation is included in another; then the included one should have but one inverted comma at its commencement, and one apostrophe at its close; thus, In the Scriptures we find the following: "Jesus answered the Jews, 'Is it not written in your law—I said, ye are gods?'"

Now, do not forget to quote Scripture accurately, when you use it in articles for the Crisis.—G.

BILLS.—We purpose to send bills, next week, to all who will be owing $2.00, or over, at the close of the present Vol., which will be about the middle of next September.—G.

☞ We hope those who have not paid for the present volume of the Crisis, will send the money soon as they can. Let the motto be, "Owe no man anything, but to love one another."—G.

Our Country's Future.

Every day the opening scenes are darker in relation to the future of our country. Men, who said a year since that the rebellion would be "crushed out in three months," have changed their minds, and now see nothing but ruin for the entire nation, unless there should soon be a favorable turn. They have become satisfied that boasting will not do the work. "The tug of war" is upon us. Says the Independent, "The nation is at its very utmost pinch of peril."

The following from the Herald of Gospel Liberty shows how discerning men are looking at things:

"We have spent a year in organizing and marshaling our armies. We have offered up millions of treasure, and, at the lowest estimate, one hundred thousand lives upon the altar of the Union within that time. The "grand army of the Potomac" was our pet and pride. With it we fondly hoped to annihilate the rebels. We were going to march straight into Richmand. We sat out full of hope and courage. We arrive within four miles of the doomed city, when suddenly an army of two hundred thousand strong is hurled, like a thunder-bolt upon us, and after seven days' desperate, bloody and unparalleled fighting we find ourselves some twenty miles further from Richmond than when the fight began. We are minus a large quantity of valuable stores, numbers of guns and twenty thousand men. The result of the whole is, tersely, "McClellan is saved, and Richmond too." We are at present cooped up on the James River, under the wing of our gunboats, too weak to advance, too strong to retreat. And we are now called upon to send three hundred thousand more of our sons, brothers, husbands, fathers, to die by the sword, bullet, poison and pestilence of Southern fiends. How long before this hecatomb will be slaughtered upon the reeking altar of insatiate demon War, and another, and yet others, demanded, God only knows. Well may men pause and ask themselves, 'What shall be the end of these things?' 'Cui bono,' (what good will it do?) is a most fitting question at this juncture. We fail to see how, by any possibility, the old status of things can be restored. Such violent and radical changes have taken place, such bitter and undying hostilities have been engendered during the progress of the war that, at present, the reconstruction of the old Union seems utterly impossible. The war must become a war of extermination."

Says the New York Independent of July 24th:

"In the beginning of this great struggle, the question among loyal men was, how shall we save this nation? One year of fighting and the question is, whether we can save it? That is the question of to-day. . . . We are not so near a settlement as we were at the beginning. The South, with all her losses, and under difficulties that would have disheartened any common people, is more united, has a larger army in the field,—more comfortably provided for, and better managed,—than she had a year ago.

The South is more formidable to-day than she was when she beleaguered Washington, held Tennessee, Missouri, and half of Kentucky. She is united; while every day the leaven of old malignant political parties is working disaffection, at the bottom, in the North. . . .

Under such circumstances, we hold:

That it was unwise to call for 300,000 volunteers. The day has gone by for that. The Administration should have drafted half-a-million men for instant service, and half-a-million more as reserves. It will waste months of time and spend millions of money, and encourage growing discontent, and expend precious popular enthusiasm—and then, be obliged to draft."

The following petition, we learn, is about to be presented to Gov. Andrew, of Mass:

To His Excellency, John A. Andrew, and to the Honorable Council:

"The undersigned citizens of Marlboro, in view of the threatening aspects of our national and foreign affairs, respectfully petition your Excellency to convene at as early a day as possible an extra session of the Legislature, to take into consideration the condition of the State Militia, and if possible either revive the old militia laws of our fathers, or to enact some new law which shall organize some more general, effectual State militia than we now possess, to wit: to revive or inaugurate a system that shall oblige all able-bodied men in the State to organize and drill."

We think people will soon understand more fully the saying of our Savior, when giving the last signs of his second coming, —"Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." It may well be said to this generatian, "Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" It is alarming to see the blindness of the people. The professed church seems as blind as the world; and the reason is apparent,—she has become conformed to the world, and is led by it in her spirit and manner. If the world invites her to parties of pleasure, she is ready to go; if the world says march to the battle field and bathe in human blood, she is ready to respond, with sword in hand. With such a spirit, how can she be otherwise than blind. May the Lord give courage to those who, by the aid of prophetic light, see the danger, and help them to sound a bold alarm.—G.

The Pope's Troubles.

The Pope is somewhat sensible that he is in a critical situation, but like a timid boy going past a grave-yard in a dark night, he tries to keep up good courage; while, at the same time, he startles at every new sight or sound. The 17th of last June was the anniversary of his election to the Pontificate. On that day there was an important gathering of Archbishops, Bishops, and Prelates, at the Sixtine Chapel, in Rome. The Catholic, when speaking of the meeting, says:—

"The Holy Father, in returning thanks, alluded to the difficulties and dangers which had surrounded and threatened the Papacy from the commencement of his reign; and said, with emotion, that the past obstacles and perils were as nothing in comparison with those which would soon have to be encountered."

We think the dark hour for Papacy is not far in the future, and that the Pope expressed the truth when he said, "The past obstacles and perils were as nothing in comparison with those which would soon have to be encountered." His is no enviable position.

The Catholic Mirror says—

"The holy and beneficent high-priest of the Catholic Church has apparently all the powers of the earth against him; he is ruthlessly robbed of his possessions, and the world applauds the robberies; what remains of his temporal power is held apparently by a thread, which the Fates may cut at any moment. The powers of darkness rejoice; the gates of hell expect a speedy triumph. Open enemies without, and secret enemies, traitors, within the citadel, conspire to make the successor of Peter bite the dust."

Truly, "his temporal power" hangs by a brittle thread, which must soon be broken for ever. The Mirror goes on to say—

"The enemies of the Holy Father have encompassed, and surrounded him with snares, while they keep him 'in his day of tribulation, menaced with overthrow, and half broken-hearted.'"

It is evident that the "woman" on the seven hills must soon drink her "cup" of "sorrow." Yet she tries to believe a brighter day will come, because she has arisen from former trials. She does not see that she has had her last triumph, and is protected by her last husband, who will soon leave her to the mercy of her enemies. Yet she still boasts,—"I sit a queen, and am no widow."

The Mirror remarks still further:—

"Not yet, then, is the Sovereign Pontiff the victim of his enemies. Nor will he be. It must be remembered that 'the Pope never dies.' Our present venerable chief Bishop may indeed be driven to die far away from his See, and from the throne of his predecessors, in which he will but share the fate of many of them; but his successor will come back to the throne of the Vatican, and St. Peter's will ring again with the grateful and glorious peals of Te Deum Laudamus. Nor can the Pope die in exile, because, as was most happily said to a predecessor of his, of illustrious memory, 'Vicar of Christ, in exile thou canst not die; thou hast received the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possessions.'

Ambition and malice have combined, under various shallow pretexts, to dethrone the Holy Father and reduce him to a subject condition; to dependency on some political master. Catholic Christendom protests, and all wise and good men should protest, against these machinations.

As a matter of right, justice, and expediency, the chief Bishop of the Christian Church must be a sovereign and not a subject. . . . The 'Gentiles will rage,' and persecutions will flourish to the end; but the Papacy will flourish also, in spite of the Gentiles and of persecutions."

It is hard for the harlot woman to believe she must die, but she is already beyond help. She is struck with death.—G.

Sound Words.

Words are symbols of thought. As, therefore, the exact thoughts inspiration designed to convey to us are communicated through the medium of words fitly chosen; and as in the choice of words, of a different meaning, a different understanding would be conveyed, therefore the obvious importance of holding fast the chosen words of inspiration. Hence it is that in accordance with the injunction of our text, the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures is held in inviolable sanctity by the Church. Her Scripture was "given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." And again, as saith St. Peter: "No prophecy of Scripture is of any private interpretation: for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

And it is also to be believed that the Apostle, filled with the illumination of the Holy Ghost, clearly foresaw the falling away and grievous departures from the truth that would be made in the Church, and, in the language of our text, intended to forewarn us of the imminent and great danger that would always exist of being moved from the steadfastness of the Gospel. And once removed from the essential faith and hope of the Gospel, we are again in the darkness of this world, and, like a ship tossed with a tempest, without chart and compass, all is lost. "If the light that is in you become darkness, how great is that darkness!"

But a more comprehensive view of the text is that which leads us to believe St. Paul designs in these words to urge the importance of holding steadfastly the doctrines and teachings, as well as the specific words, of the Holy Scriptures. The holding fast the form of sound words implies then the holding the truth as a whole: not merely truths in a fragmentary form, but all truths.

Every individual truth possesses qualities peculiar to itself—each of greater or less importance; and yet there is such a relative importance existing between one truth and another, that the real value of a single truth can never be made to appear if isolated from others. True, there is a class of doctrines, lying at the very basis of the Christian system, which, though separately, yet if faithfully held, may ultimate in a man's salvation: this is particularly true when, by reason of circumstances, he is fairly hindered from that larger understanding of divine things which those placed in more favorable positions enjoy. But the amount of injury that has accrued to the Christian world by reason of the ex parte, or one sided views that men have taken of divine things, is incalculable. Angry disputations, lacerations and rendings of the mystical body of Christ, spiritual lawlessness, with the jeers and scoffs of a godless world, have come on the one hand, and out and out infidelity on the other. It may become us to touch lightly this theme, because to err is human, and fallibility is common to our race; nevertheless the facts are before us, and the reasons are obvious. What Christian does not lament the divided and broken condition of the Christian world! True, there are men who assume to be particularly liberal, and say such is doubtless for the best: or may be they will very honestly attempt to show that on this wise the various classes of community may be more effectually reached by the Gospel. But the fallacy of such reasoning immediately appears, when we consider that instead of many faiths, there is but "one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." That instead of many bodies, it is written, "There is one body, and one spirit." To show the contrary, is much like showing that a man can better perform the functions of a man after being placed on the dissecting table, and having his limbs amputated from his body. And yet it may be asked, how could it be otherwise, while men true to the idiosyncrasies of their nature, seize those portions of divine truth that most favorably impress them, and magnify those truths to the disparagement of others. Or it may be, not clearly perceiving the true character or importance of one class, are satisfied with only a part of what is needed to their perfection. To this our answer is, that these difficulties may be obviated by paying good heed to such Scripture as we have selected for our text, "Hold fast the form of sound words," because the soundness of the very doctrines which they teach, depends much upon those doctrines maintaining their true position in the divine economy.

Let us notice: a correct Christian faith and practice must have for its basis a comprehensive understanding of the cardinal doctrines of Holy Scripture; which doctrines must be held in their purity by an obedient faith. Such a faith will be found suited to the highest and noblest development of our entire being. Every known law of nature will be found in harmony with it; and in the largest manner possible man will be found co-operating with his Creator in promoting the highest well-being of the universe.

But supposing a less comprehensive faith is entertained? In the same ratio the man's soul is hampered; faith's wings are in so much pinioned; his soul is less large, and the joy of a complete faith he cannot have. While at the same time the chances of falling into inextricable difficulties are neither few nor small. Indeed it is more than probable that many of the lamentable backslidings we hear of, are occasioned on this wise. Who does not know that a peculiarity of our fallen race is the ability to perceive an evil sooner than a good? like noxious weeds that spontaneously grow in our gardens; while the most assiduous care is necessary to the growing of our choice plants. The humble, unostentatious good man may live a life-time by the side of a neighbor without ever occasioning a remark concerning his goodness; whereas the slightest deviation from the exact teachings of christianity will call forth the attention of an entire community. So also a system of doctrine, if not complete in itself, is sure to be condemned. The deficiency, whether real or apparent, is enough to the unbelieving heart to insure the condemnation of the whole,—the old adage being in this case true, that a poor excuse is better than none.

But such imperfection does not appertain to christianity, properly apprehended. As a system it is complete without systematizing, and rational without rationalism,—the defects that apparently appertain to christianity being not to christianity, but to christians; the defects are in the men, and not in the doctrines, rightly understood; for christianity, properly presented, is the "sound speech that cannot be condemned," as saith St. Paul.

Let us observe, for example: The doctrine that teaches the fall and consequent depravity of man, not only serves to explain in the only rational manner the origin of evil and a thousand facts in our world, but is indispensable to a right understanding of the doctrine of Atonement by our Lord Jesus Christ. In these two doctrines we have the cause of evil and its cure. In the doctrines of faith and repentance, with the ordinances and ministries of the church, we have set forth the manner of applying the cure. In the doctrines of a Second Advent, a resurrection of the dead, and day of judgment, we have revealed the time and manner in which the cure will be consummated. But let us suppose mankind to be lacking one of the doctrines we have mentioned, and how sensible of the lack is every discerning mind! For instance—if the depravity of mankind is not to be explained by the understanding that they have fallen from their integrity to God, and so justly exposed themselves to his condemnation—to a penalty sanctioned by eternal justice—then how can men understand the necessity of so great a sacrifice as that made by our Lord Jesus Christ? Why would not faith in the law, and repentance, or reformation of character, suffice without the coming of Christ into our world? Why is it that there is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved? Why is he set above "every name that is named, not only in this world but also in that which is to come"?—M.

My Journal.

TOUR IN CANADA EAST.

Waterloo, June 12, 1862. Attended the Conference of Adventists, embracing C. E., and Northern Vt. This body has come up in the last ten years from three individuals—among whom were Bro. R. Hutchinson of Waterloo, and Eld. J. Porter of Danville, C. E.—and now constitutes one of the largest and best of our conferences. I had not met with them for many years, and found a warm and kind reception as an old fellow-laborer in the Advent cause. The business was conducted with harmony and good feeling throughout. Differences of opinion on questions that agitate the great body of Advent believers exist here, but did not disturb the peace of the body. This is as it should be. The "watchmen may not be expected to see eye to eye," till we rise to the perfect state in the kingdom, when all darkness and error will pass away, and we shall "see as we are seen, and know as we are known." Till then we will have to bear with each other in our differences, our bond of union being the "love of Christ's appearing," connected with the proofs of sincerity, which will be manifest in lives of upright and holy living before all men. Such will lead "a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty."

The preaching was practical and edifying. Elder Bosworth gave one discourse, from Joel 3 : 14;—"Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near, in the valley of decision"; which was timely and stirring. It was in harmony with my most radical views on the near coming of the Lord. As I remained over the Sabbath, I gave in all nine lectures, practical and prophetical. I enjoyed the fullest freedom of utterance on the doctrine of entire consecration, and the evidence of the speedy coming of Christ, and of what I meant by the phrase, "speedy coming," in the termination of the periods in 1867 and 8. While I was heard with candor, I do not suppose that many were converted to either the doctrine of full and entire consecration, and instant readiness for the coming of Christ, or to the time of the event. But I was assured from many testimonies that this labor of love was not in vain in the Lord. Some are becoming deeply interested in both the above views. And if I am right, we may expect all the Lord's people to wake up, and trim their lamps, and be ready and waiting for the Bridegroom. God's people will be ready when Christ comes, because they will know the time, and prepare.

Our Sabbath service, the last day of the conference, was a precious day to us all. It was the largest and the best meeting we ever held in Waterloo. The chapel was crowded in every part, with aisles and pulpit. I gave three discourses. It was a day of good cheer to the church and society who have so liberally poured out their substance to provide a place of worship, and sustain a position. It must have been a day of joy to Elders Hutchinson and Orrock, and their fellow-laborers, to witness the success of their long toils for the cause here. Eld. Orrock has taken the pastoral charge, with every prospect of good, in the thriving village of Waterloo. Bro. Hutchinson goes to England this season, to visit his relatives, and to preach the gospel of the kingdom as the door may open. Blessings attend them all.

Monday evening, June 16th, I closed my labors in Waterloo, with a sermon on "how to live," showing that those who seek to attain to the "higher life," must pay some attention to the manner of their living; that they must avoid all stimulating foods and drinks, as well as drugs and narcotics, —abstinence from all poisons, and temperance in the good and wholesome things of God, given for the health and life of the body, and the good cheer of the soul. There was some fluttering among those whose habits of eating and drinking were at variance with this standard of reform; but I had the conscience of those who complained on the side of reform, and so my work was done. The least I can hope is, that christians who heard me will be awakened to look at this question, and, on examination, will at least modify their habits of living, so as to eat and drink more to the "glory of God."

Tuesday, June 17th, took leave of Bro. Hutchinson and the friends in W., and Bro. Orrock took me to the Outlet, twenty miles in a scorching sun, and much of the way through the woods of smoke and flame. The whole country is suffering with a drouth, and fires are spreading and raging in all the region. Unless there is rain soon, there will be no food for man or beast. We arrived at the Outlet at three o'clock P. M., and were welcomed by Bro. Johnson and Dr. Somers. Here I found a sick house, a hospital. Sister Somers is still confined to her bed, where she has lain many years, patient and heroic in the endurance of suffering, in the hope of deliverance when Jesus comes.

Here, too, I found our much loved Sister Helen M. Johnson, the poetess, sister of Mrs. Somers, still confined to her couch; suffering much of the time with severe pains. She, too, has been confined to her bed for many years. But the blessed hope is the stay and comfort of the soul. Her hope is in the land, and with the blessed ones, "where the inhabitants will not say they are sick." And yet another sick room opened to me, and here was the mother of Sister Somers and Johnson, whose unfailing health for long years has enabled her to watch over her sick ones, and wait on them day and night;—by a severe fall she is disabled for some time to come. But in all this it was good to see the power of christian faith and hope. Our dear Bro. Johnson and his son-in-law, Dr. Somers, have much care and sorrow, in the continued sickness of their families; but they are patient and submissive to these dark dispensations, and cherish the blessed hope of soon seeing the land where health and immortality will be the portion of God's people. I trust these afflicted friends will have the prayers of the faithful, waiting ones. We are one family. Let us love and pray for each other. I preached in the evening to a very good audience on Rev. 16 : 15. Our cause here is low, but the few are living for the kingdom.

Wednesday, June 18. Rose at 4 A. M., and took leave of Bro. and Sr. Orrock and Johnson, and rode seventeen miles by stage to Sherbrooke, where I took breakfast with Eld. Buckingham, formerly of Burlington, Vt. Bro. and Sr. B. received me very joyfully, and ministered to my wants. He stands almost alone here as to his faith and hope. Yet he is much respected as a christian man. He feels the need of sympathy. May the Lord open his way and give him success in his work. After a visit about the town for a couple of hours, I took the cars for Melbourne, Eld. B. kindly accompanying me to the depot, where we parted at 10 A. M. At noon, I was in Richmond, where Bro. Gilman met and took me to his house and home for the rest of the week. Here I am to give a course of lectures, afternoon and evening, and over the Sabbath.

While at the conference at Waterloo, Bro. A. Newton, one of the oldest and most valuable of the early friends and believers in the Advent faith taught by Father Miller, and a subscriber to the "Her." for many years, called my attention to an article from the "Christian Witness," copied into the Herald of June 7th, page 178, signed "H.," on the "Coming Kingdom," referring to the time. He says:—"We may not be able to set the precise time; it may be unwise to name the year, for mistakes are possible, and when they occur they increase the infidels and scoffers. A vast amount of injury was done by Mr. Miller, in this respect. Yet because he was mistaken, and the excitement by his views have repelled many from the subject, let us not blind our eyes to the truth." Bro. Newton wished me to say, that he thought it was quite bad enough for our enemies to publish such things with a view to bring the time of our Savior's coming into disrepute, without its being given in the Advent Herald, without note or comment. I told him I was of the same opinion. But the article being copied from another paper, perhaps the item was overlooked. I have no sympathy with the cry about the terrible evils consequent on the publication of the specific time. But for the publication of the time, the church and world both would be in darkness as to the nearness of the event; and more, the doctrines connected with it, such as the personal reign, the first resurrection, the restitution of all things, would have been ignored, and the spiritual reign, and a temporal millennium substituted. And the church and world both would have been slumbering even now on the threshold of the judgment. Even the writer, "H.," who repudiates the preaching of the time by Mr. Miller, would probably never have been awakened to see the subject as he now sees it, but for Mr. Miller, and Dr. Tyng, to whom he refers, with others proclaiming the time. It is not the failure of time, of man's calculation, that makes scoffers. It is quite a different thing. It is the fact that divine revelation teaches the coming of Christ, and the consummation of the earth by fire, and the introduction of New Heavens and New Earth, that the scoffers scoff at. 2 Pet. 3 : 2–4. And the proclamation of its imminence stirs them up, to scoff at what God has revealed.

From Eld. Wm. Sheldon.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just returned home, after a two months tour. All things considered, I deem it the most interesting tour of the kind in my experience. With one or two exceptions, we have had our groves filled with large congregations, who have listened to the word of truth with remarkable eagerness. Never have I witnessed better attention, or better results from these day meetings, both upon the community and the churches, than during this series of general meetings. We have generally had a large representation of brethren from abroad, many of them coming on foot from fifty to seventy miles, others coming over an hundred miles in their own conveyances. I cannot now speak of these meetings separately; but to say nothing of my poor preaching, which has nearly worn me out, it would have done your heart good to have been present at many of our warm prayer meetings, and melting love-feasts, in which the saints were so affected as to freely weep and shout. It seemed like the beginning of good times for the great West. And oh! what heart-melting times we have witnessed in partaking of the Lord's supper, in the evening, around the table!

During these meetings, a goodly number who have never before heard a sermon on our faith, have been fully convinced, and intend soon to send for the Crisis, some of them obtaining the reading of the paper for the time being of neighboring subscribers. Very many have been almost led into the truth, and are investigating. On this tour I have found four brethren, who were Methodist preachers less than a year ago, (three of them were circuit preachers,) all now preaching our faith, having left that denomination. I have also formed the acquaintance of others in the same denomination, who are getting hold of our faith, and are becoming favorable.

I have also become acquainted with six young men who have informed me that they feel it their solemn duty to preach this last message to a sleeping world, and have wished me to lead them into the field. With all my heart will I do it. Well do I remember my own feelings upon this subject, when but a bashful boy, and well do I remember the time when Bro. D. T. Taylor led me out into the field, giving me a little advice, perhaps half doubtful in himself whether I was really called of the Lord. But that little help, received about fourteen years ago, when I was but a boy, will never be forgotten. Remembering my own case, I can joyfully help young ministers. Have assisted in the ordination of three ministers, on this tour, and have used my influence to have the ordination of three others deferred. We must be cautious in this particular, and, "lay hands suddenly on no man." It will not injure a good man to wait, while it may injure the cause to be hasty. Brethren, do remember this. Have met over some twenty-five of our ministers on this tour, and have received aid from them in the meetings. I have had all of the preaching to do,—three sermons a day, day after day,—so that I am now well worn down. I find that speaking in the open air, so constantly, for two long months, is fatigueing. I see that I am now obliged to rest awhile. Hope I shall soon get recruited, and be able to preach constantly, God's last message to the world. It is like fire shut up in my bones. I could not bear the thought of being permanently laid aside from the field. While my friends are predicting that I shall "soon fall like Bro. Howell," as the result of my constant toil, my heart rebels at the thought. I love to preach, and when so few are alive in this great cause, so few preaching this solemn message, how can I be quiet? "Lord, send forth more laborers into thy vineyard," who can preach "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." Amen.

W. Sheldon.

From Bro. M. Batchelor.

To the church of God scattered abroad.
Dear Brethren:

We are living in times of peril, and I believe the perils of "the last days." It becomes us to be upon our watch. The enemy is endeavoring to draw us from our steadfastness, and to get us into the snare with the wicked world. The heathen are raging, the kingdoms are being moved. God will soon utter his voice. Psalm 46: 6. Joel 3: 16. Then the awful cry in Rev. 6: 15. Let us so live that we shall be prepared to say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him," &c. Isa. 25: 9. The spirit of revenge is prevalent, connected with despair. Awful scenes are before us. Our only hope is in keeping ourselves "in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life." Jude 20–21. Peace be with all that love our Lord Jesus Christ.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, July 23, our dearly beloved Sister Huldah, wife of Prosper Howard of Thorndike, Palmer, and daughter of the late Seth J. Patten, aged fifty-three years.

Sister Howard's life was a living comment on our blessed gospel hope which maketh not ashamed, ever ready to testify to the goodness of God and her blessed prospect of eternal life when the Life-giver shall appear. Her prayers, exhortations and singing were always peculiarly spiritual, felt as well as heard. She was well known and tenderly loved by the waiting church in this vicinity, and by our ministering brethren who have labored in the gospel in this part of the vineyard, as her house was the way-worn pilgrim's welcome home; where she ever delighted to cheer and serve them. Their house was also the place of worship for the little band in T. for several years past. We all feel that indeed another mother in Israel has fallen under the power of the enemy.

Bro. and Sr. H., with their daughter Susanna Achors and her husband, had mingled with our pleasant gatherings at our house the two Fourths of July last past, and we anticipated a pleasant gathering with them in the consecrated grove at W. on the last Fourth. But alas! fell disease had marked her for his victim, and laid her low. Instead of meeting her on the camp ground on the Fourth, we were called to leave our friends there, and mingle our tears with the bereaved circle in Thorndike, and take our last look of the loved sister till we behold her, radiant with immortal glory, risen in the likeness of her Lord. Bro. Wendell improved the occasion by the words of comfort left to the bereaved church in 1 Thess. 4: 18, and was listened to by a large congregation in the Congregational church.

Her disease was inflammation of the bowels, producing obstinate stoppage. During the first seven days she suffered much, but God in his great goodness heard prayer in her behalf, and relieved her sufferings and symptoms, so that we fondly hoped she might yet be spared to us. Her mind seemed clear and calm, wholly resigned to the will of God. On the evening of the tenth day her sufferings became so intensified that she exclaimed, "Relieve, oh Lord, in any way!" and in two minutes she ceased to breathe.

She's free from pain, from grief and sorrow,
She sleeps to wake on a blest to-morrow.

S. J. H.

Died, in Greenfield, Sauk Co., Wis., July 1st, 1862, Bro. Mason Protheroe, aged forty-two years, one month and one day.

I first became acquainted with Bro. P. while holding a protracted meeting in his neighborhood two years ago last winter. He attended every meeting for a week. He became interested in the truths of the Bible and in the cause of religion. Two years ago next month, I led him and his companion down into the liquid grave, and buried them in the likeness of Christ's death. Since then Bro. Prothero's seat has always been filled at meeting when it was possible to get there, and he generally brought a two horse wagon load with him.

His house has been a home for the pilgrim; and often when I have traveled over one of the Wisconsin bluffs on foot, alone, without money, and without price, to preach Christ to a lost world, I have found on top of the bluff, at Bro. Prothero's house, a home where I could stop and rest my weary limbs, be refreshed from his table, and converse about things relative to the coming and kingdom of Christ.

Bro. P. was an active christian while in health, and upon his sick bed, though suffering great pain, he faithfully warned his neighbors and friends to flee from the wrath to come; and told them he should soon be at rest. His work is done.

In his death, his wife has lost a good husband, his six children a good father, his aged father and mother a good son, his ten brothers and sisters a good brother, his neighbors a good neighbor, and the little church of twenty-nine members has lost one of its best men. But we "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope; for . . . we believe that" those that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." The funeral sermon was preached by the writer, from Heb. 9: 27, 28.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamship Australian brings advices from Liverpool July 19th, Queenstown 20th.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Liverpool Post says: "Although the feeling of the English people is decidedly with the Confederates, it must be admitted that they are getting completely weary of the war. There is nothing particularly startling in it to reconcile them to the slaughter of fellow creatures, the good to be arrived at by no means compensating for the evils to be endured. The evils extend beyond the battle field, and they are experienced with sufficient severity in Lancashire to make every one wish that the wicked folly beyond the Atlantic was at an end."

England is evidently alarmed at the new relations between France and Russia, for it is believed that the alliance effected between these two powers will affect the Continent in all questions of policy, although it purports to relate only to the affairs of the Christians of the East. The Paris Patrie makes the following important statements, which are regarded as semi-official:

"We have reason to believe that the negotiations between the governments of France and Russia have had a favorable result, and produced a general understanding between the two powers.

The principal points as to which this understanding has been effected are said to be these: France and Russia have come to an agreement as to the mode of inquiring into and solving the questions that refer to the position and interests of the Christians of the East, France stipulating on behalf of the Roman Catholics, and Russia, on the part of the members of the other churches, have, by mutual concessions, arrived at a complete harmony of views on this point.

The two powers have also arrived at an identical appreciation of the affairs of Italy; while admitting the necessity of recognizing existing facts, they have come to an understanding as to the manner in which it is desirable that the Cabinet of Turin should enter on the subject of questions that still remain unsettled, principally with the object of avoiding every act from which difficulties for Europe might arise, and dangers for Italy herself.

Finally, the understanding between France and Russia extends to the settlement of the dispute that has so long existed between Denmark and the German powers. We do not wish to give these statements more importance than they perhaps really possess, but it seems to us difficult not to see, in their general bearing, the indications of an alliance between the two governments."

In the House of Commons on the 18th, Mr. Lindsey introduced his motion declaring that the confederates have shown such determination and ability to maintain their independence that the propriety of offering mediation with a view to the termination of hostilities is worthy of the serious and immediate consideration of the government.

The Daily News and Star applaud Lord Palmerston's views, and contend that the time for mediation has not arrived.

During a debate in the House of Lords on colonial military expenditure, the Canadians were reproached for negligence in not providing a strong militia force.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald again asserts that the Emperor Napoleon is about to offer the mediation of France to America, and says the drift of public opinion is in favor of such a course.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Cairo, July 28. A heavy skirmish occurred at Bolivar, Tennessee, between our forces stationed there and a body of rebels yesterday. It is reported that our forces have evacuated Grand Junction and the place is now occupied by the rebels, and it is also reported that they have possession of all that portion of the Memphis and Charleston railroad between Memphis and Corinth.

The New York Post's Washington letter of Monday says:

"There is unusual anxiety at the War Department to-day. Generals Halleck, Burnside and Pope have been with the President and Secretaries Stanton and Seward nearly all day. It is considered certain that the rebels will bend their whole energies to one of two objects—possibly to both—the blockade of the James river, or the capture of Washington. The army under Gen. McClellan cannot stand idle much longer. It is in the power of the rebels to make the James river a very uncertain source of supplies to the army, and security does not lie half so much in fortifications as in sudden and brilliant movement against the enemy."

Fortress Monroe, July 28. The opinion continues to prevail that the rebels are in strong force between Richmond and the Appomattox river, and that they are still sending forces in that direction.

Jefferson City, Mo., July 29. Col. Gunter, of the 9th Missouri regiment and the 3d Iowa cavalry, 650 strong, were attacked at Mooner's Mills, seven miles east of Fulton yesterday, by the rebels under Porter and Cobb, 900 strong, and after fighting from one to four P. M., the latter were completely routed, with the loss of 75 or 100 killed and wounded.

Col. Gunter reports the loss of 45 killed and wounded. He captured large quantities of arms, ammunition, baggage, &c. His officers and men behaved splendidly. The rebel Cobb is reported to be killed. Col. Gunter resumed pursuit last night, and will follow the rebels over the Jordan.

Fortress Monroe, July 29. The mail boat from Harrison's Landing has arrived. Passengers state that a move of some kind is hourly expected from the army. Yesterday Gen. McClellan issued orders to the army for every man to be ready for action at a moment's notice. An attack from Jackson is expected at any time. Gen. McClellan is ready no matter from what quarter they approach.

Washington, July 30. The steamer Mount Washington arrived at the Navy Yard at an early hour this morning. Her commander, Capt. Germain, says there is a rumor in Norfolk that Merrimac No. 2 and a new ram, which the rebels have at Richmond, intend to run through our fleet in the James river, attack the Minnesota and other vessels at Norfolk and take the city.

Cairo, July 30. The steamer Platte Valley, from Memphis, brings the news of the capture of the dispatch boat Sallie Wood by the rebels, 150 miles above Vicksburg. They took quite a number of prisoners and destroyed the boat. The Queen of the West was also fired into on her way up. Two or three were killed and several were wounded.

New York, July 30. A special dispatch to the Herald, from Nashville, says a rebel mail from Chattanooga had been captured by Unionists. The letters contained valuable information. Beauregard has resigned and gone to the springs in Alabama. Bragg is at Vicksburg with 26,000 men, but scarce of horses.

The rebels are reported to have evacuated Lebanon with the intention to mass their troops at a given point for a sudden dash on Nashville.

Fortress Monroe, July 30. Between fifty and sixty rebel prisoners have arrived here from Baltimore en route for Richmond. Fifteen of them, viz: three officers and twelve privates of Winchester will return to Baltimore. The officers deserted the rebel service, and prefer to serve in the Federal ranks. They are afraid of being shot if they go to Richmond.

New York, July 31. It is stated that the New York committee proposed to the President to pay no bounties after the 18th of August, and if the State quota was not then filled, to instantly draft. The President assented to the proposition, and gave the committee a letter to the War Department recommending the issuing of orders to this effect. With the consent of Gov. Morgan all the recruiting offices in this city are to be broken up and one rendezvous formed, the recruit to be given the choice of regiment.

Philadelphia, July 31. During yesterday afternoon, between 400 and 500 rebel prisoners confined at Fort Delaware took the oath of allegiance.

New York, July 31. The Times' army correspondent says there is little doubt that the enemy is concentrating a considerable force at a point between City Point and Petersburg, near the latter place. A strong picket guard only is at City Point. The rebel pickets extend along the banks of the river, from City Point to Fort Powhatan. It is feared we shall have some difficulty at Fort Powhatan in a day or two, as the rebels have lately appeared there in large numbers, to harass our transports and, if possible, cut off our communication with Fortress Monroe, which continued to be the favorite scheme of the enemy.

The Times' Washington dispatch says surgeons and others who have reached Washington under the new rule for exchange of prisoners are unanimous in stating that the rebel government is gathering an enormous military force at Richmond. They are bringing reinforcements in day and night from every accessible point of the South, and our returned prisoners are confident that they have near 300,000 men in and around Richmond.

All talk of rebel demonstrations in other directions are feints meant to conceal their real designs, which is to capture or destroy Gen. McClellan's army, and then march against the North. Everything conspires to show the necessity to fill up the old regiments of the armies before Richmond without an hour's delay. The whole power of the rebellion is gathering there for a final blow.

Headquarters of the army of the Potomac, Aug. 1. About 12 o'clock last night the rebels opened fire from the opposite side of the river with two batteries of light artillery. Their fire was principally directed to the mail boat landing at the headquarters of Col. Ingalls and the shipping and encampments of Westover. The rebel pieces were handled well and fired with great rapidity. Four men were killed and some five or six wounded. Several horses also were killed. The rebels had it all their own way for some time, as our troops did not anticipate an attack, but the 32 pounders stationed at the headquarters of Col. Ingalls soon silenced their guns after they opened. A few of our men were struck, but no serious damage was sustained by any of them. With this exception nothing has occurred worth mentioning.

New York, Aug. 4. At a meeting of the Common Council to-day, Mayor Opdyke sent in a message urging immediate steps to co-operate with the Federal Government in perfecting the defences of this harbor, and recommending an appropriation of one million dollars for constructing iron-plated batteries and ships.

Washington, Aug. 4. The following order calling for militia from the several States has just been issued:

War Department,
Washington, D. C., Aug. 4, '62.

Ordered, First. That a draft of 300,000 militia be immediately called under the service of the United States to serve nine months unless sooner discharged. The Secretary of War will assign the quotas to the State and establish regulations for the draft.

Second. That if any State shall not by the 15th of August furnish its quota of the additional 300,000 volunteers authorized by law, the deficiency of volunteers for that State will also be made up by a special draft from the militia. The Secretary of War will establish the regulations for this purpose.

Third. The regulations will be prepared by the War Department and presented to the President, with the object of securing the promotion of officers of the army and volunteers for meritorious and distinguished services, and of preventing the nomination and appointment in the military service of incompetent or unworthy officers. The regulations will also provide for ridding the service of such incompetent persons as now hold commissions. By order of the President,

(Signed) Edwin M. Stanton,
Secretary of War.

During the summer a force will be maintained in Tennessee and Kentucky, and in the centre and north of Virginia, chiefly for the purpose of making it necessary for the United States government to keep a large number of troops in those States, in order to protect Cincinnati, Ohio and Indiana from invasion.

GENERAL CAMPMEETING AT Wilbraham, Mass.

Providence permitting, a general campmeeting will commence at Wilbraham, on the old ground upon the hill, Monday, August 25th, and continue one week.

Ample accommodations will be provided for board and horse keeping. Board at 50 cents per day. Single meal,—breakfast or supper,—20 cents; dinner 25 cents. The boarding department this year is under the charge of the Committee, and any profits accruing from the same, will go to the support of the meeting. The fare is reduced to half price on the Western R. R., which will be $2 50 from Boston, for both ways. From Worcester $1.30. Fare is also reduced one half on the Vt., Mass. and Conn. River R. R., from Brattleboro, South Vernon, and intermediate stations. Campmeeting tickets should be called for at the above stations, which will be good for both ways.

Arrangements have been made with the Eastern R. R. Co., by which those taking the cars from Portsmouth and intermediate places for Boston, paying full fares at the ticket offices, can have free return passes by application to Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass., when they purchase their Western tickets for the camp ground. Those coming from Albany will pay full fare to the camp ground, and receive free return passes from the Campmeeting Committee. Those coming from North Adams, Pittsfild, and intermediate places, also from Worcester, and intermediate stations, will call for campmeeting tickets at the ticket office.

N. B. All who wish to take the cars from Boston for the campmeeting, should remember that they can obtain their tickets only of Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover street, where they may be obtained any day during the meeting. Cars which stop at the camp ground, leave the Boston and Worcester depot in Boston at 7.15 o'clock, A. M., and at 1-30 P. M.

The cars leave Springfield for the camp ground at 7.15 and 10 1-2 A. M., and 5 P. M.

F. H. Berick, Miles Grant, Geo. T. Adams, } Committee of Arrangements.

The camp ground at Wilbraham is pleasantly located in a neighborhood noted for sustaining good order, and for acts of kindness towards those who assemble there from year to year to worship the God of our fathers. We hope to see a goodly number of the Lord's dear children, and that much good will be accomplished. Those who were present last year will remember that the great object of the meeting was for the salvation of sinners and the comfort of saints, and that the effort was greatly blessed. We hope that our brethren and sisters will come again this year, strong in the Lord, and bring their unconverted children and neighbors, for the purpose of persuading them to be christians.

All who believe in Christ as our Savior, and are willing to labor for the salvation of sinners, are invited to take part in the meetings. We would earnestly request all to make this meeting a subject of special prayer, that many wanderers may be reclaimed, the saints greatly strengthened, and the name of the Lord magnified among the people.

Great Campmeeting in Maine.

On account of the lateness of the season, the Committee have deemed it best to change the time of our campmeeting at Corinna, Me., from the first to the second week in September, giving them one week longer to complete their harvest labors.

We would say to the brethren, one and all, rally again to the standard of truth, and enjoy the privilege of attending one more meeting, if the Lord will, before he shall return. We are happy to say we have obtained the best ground this year for our meeting that we ever have had, and the conveniences outside are far better than formerly. The grounds are situated in the west part of the town, on Mr. Weston Nutter's place, being two miles from Moor's Mills, so called, and six miles from Newport, a point on the Penobscot and Kennebec R. R., where brethren coming from the west by railroad, or to Bangor by boat, will stop. Those brethren who would like conveyance from Newport to the camp ground, will be accommodated if they will inform either of the Committee what time to meet them there.

Conveniences for the Lord's poor will be ample, and we wish none to stay away on account of their not having the means. There will be a commodious boarding tent on the ground, where brethren not having tents, but who have means, will be accommodated reasonably. Come one, come all, and let us have the greatest meeting of the kind ever yet held in Maine.

B. C. Moore, Albert Dook, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Iowa, Minn. and Wis. Conference.

When this conference was organized, our numbers were very few, and our territory consequently large. At its organization, it was understood that as soon as we were sufficiently strong, we would divide. At our recent special conference, July 5th, 1862, the following resolutions were passed:—

Resolved, That the Iowa, Minn and Wis. Christian Conference shall be divided into two Conferences, the one to be known as the Wisconsin Christian Conference, and the other as the Iowa and Minn. Christian Conference.

Resolved, That the next annual conferences in these sections shall be appointed by the Conference Evangelist, or Evangelists, residing within the respective territories. Let churches correspond with P. S. W. Deyo as to where they wish the next annual meeting of the Iowa and Minn. Conference held; and with Bro Sheldon, concerning where it will be best to have our next annual Conference in Wisconsin. We separated with good feelings and many regrets. May our infant conferences be prospered of God.

Wm. Sheldon, President.
P. S. W. Deyo, Clerk.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind., commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over the Sabbath following. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be present (Brn. Sevirs and I. Damman are expected) to preach the word of life. We hope to see a good attendance at this meeting. Come, brethren and sisters, come praying that we may have a good, old-fashioned meeting at Union Mills. This is a time of trouble, and we should not forsake "the assembling of ourselves together," but exhort "one another; and so much the more as" we "see the day approaching."

By request of the Church,
A. Freeman, Jr.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Bowdoinham, Lancaster school-house, commencing Thursday, August 28th, at 6 o'clock, P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad can call on Brn. Ebenezer Lancaster, E. Densmore, S. Graves, E. Hatch, J. Dickerson. May God display his power there in converting sinners.

H. B. Sevey, Chairman.
H. G. Smiley, Secretary.

Notices of Eld. J. V. Himes.

Tuesday, Aug. 12th, Sandy Hill, N. Y., in the evening.

Friday, Aug. 15th, commence a campmeeting at Perry's Mills, N. Y., to continue from the 15th to the 24th.

Tuesday, Aug. 26th, will be at the Wilbraham campmeeting, to continue through the week.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Daniel T. Taylor, Chairman.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

Note. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. Taylor, President.
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Note. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented. They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Poultney, Vt., till Aug. 18th, after that to Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Advent Campmeeting.

A general campmeeting for Northern New York, Vermont and Canada East, will be holden in Perry's Mills, N. Y., near the depot of the Ogdensburg Railroad in that place, six miles from Rouses Point, N. Y.

The Adventists in the entire region, with all classes and persuasions of christians, are most cordially invited to attend, and take an earnest and active part in the objects of the meeting. All who have tents will bring them. And friends in the vicinity are invited to put up cheap lumber tents, or others, for themselves and strangers. Board and lodging will be provided on reasonable terms, also pasture for horses. Every thing will be done by the brethren and friends in the vicinity to make the people comfortable. Our tried and faithful brethren, Dr. E. M. Loomis of Perry's Mills, N. Y., and Alvah Loomis of Champlain, N. Y., may be addressed by any who wish accommodation, or any further information about the meeting. The meeting will commence on Friday, August 15th, at 4 o'clock, P. M., and be continued every day over two Sabbaths, to the 24th. The meeting is located in a grove, on the farm of Fry Clark, one-fourth of a mile from the depot at Perry's Mills. Water for man and beast, and lumber for tents in close proximity.

Ministers of God, brethren, sisters, friends, one and all, come up to the feast. There never was a time when the door was opened so wide and effectual as now, for the Adventists to speak and work for God and a doomed world. Many too among us have left their first love, and have need of help. Many in our families are out of the ark of safety, and shall we not do something to rescue them before the storm of vengeance falls? Can we endure to see the destruction of our kindred? The community too are looking to us for light on the coming kingdom. Shall we not give it? Can we withhold and be innocent in the day of the Lord? We have light on the time, and the signs of the Advent of the King of kings. Shall we not give it? Why hesitate to give the trump a certain sound? Rome is falling, the False Prophet is tottering, and Armageddon, with its strife and slaughter, is just upon us!

Come, then, ye veterans of the Advent faith; come, ye young with the old soldiers, let us shake off the dust of sloth and indolence, and gird on the armor of God. Let us seek and possess full redemption, and do what we can to multiply the number who shall stand with us on Mount Zion in the day of the Lord.

Joshua V. Himes.

Boston, July 14, 1862.

General Meeting.

The brethren in New Hampshire, believing in gospel order, and the gifts as given to a New Testament church, have concluded to commence a meeting on New Durham Ridge August 21st, and hold it over the following Sunday, for the investigation of the word, and to seek the divine blessing. Bro. J. Billings and others will be present to preach the word. All are invited.

In behalf of the brethren, J. G. Smith.

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich., on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug. 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters; come with your tents and provisions; come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others; come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P. S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly. The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting.

In behalf of the church,
A. N. Seymour.

Conference Notice.

The Illinois conference of Adventists will hold their quarterly meeting with the church near New Rutland, Lasalle Co., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Those coming from the East or West will take the Burlington and Quincy R. R., connecting with the Central at Mendota, or the Rock Island R. R. connecting with the Central at Lasalle, stopping at New Rutland, on the Central R. R., where conveyances will be provided to the place of meeting. Preaching brethren in the conference are expected to be there. It will be held in the New England Mission Tent.

H. G. McCulloch, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

Eld. M. Batchelor is expected to hold a grove meeting in the grove of I. A. Lawton, at Hauppauge, Islip, L. I., to begin Friday, Aug. 8th, and hold over the following Sunday.

A Fragment.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, . . . a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness."—Zeph. 1: 14-15.

"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief."—1 Thess. 5: 4.

"Exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

As near as I can now remember, about two years since, while meditating on the above passages, I wrote the following verses, and laid them away. A few days since my eye fell on them.

Wo! wo! to tyrants all,
When down-crushed men arise,
Your fate, your doom and fall
Are blazoned on the skies.
The blood of slaughtered saints
To God for vengeance cries,
He hath heard their sad complaints,
In vengeance soon he'll rise.

Europe begins to rock,
And fears the coming blow;
Columbia dreads the shock
Of pent-up wrath and wo.
The bondman's groans and prayers,
Beneath the tyrant's rod,
Have burthened long the ears
Of a sin-avenging God.

Tyrants are bold, and swear
They'll whip, and crush and kill,
In sight of God declare
To rule with iron will.
The Sodomites of old
Did not possess less fear,
Their crimes were not more bold
Than sinners now appear.

It is mid hour of night,
The time to watch and pray,
To keep the armor bright,
And cast the world away.
Deliverance is near,—
It truly seems to me
The Lord must soon appear
In all his majesty.

The coming great event
Its shadows cast before,
Mercy is almost spent,
Dark clouds are gathering o'er.
Oh God! the storm is near,
The muttering thunders break,
The day of wrath is near,
The dead will soon awake.

What you Say.

Not when you speak to your wife, your children, your neighbors, your animals merely, although it may be well for you to ponder well even that; but what you say when "forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." "The manner of some is" to-day, especially in these summer days, what it was in the apostle's day, to "forsake our meetings," as Murdock translates the Syriac; and perhaps you who are reading this word of exhortation are among the "some" thus charged with neglect. You may not have been at the social prayer meeting for a long time, and the last time when there have had nothing to say.

Never mind that hackneyed excuse just now forcing its way up against a good conscience,—I mean that excuse about "busy time," "tired out," "short evenings," etc. We know it well. "Short evenings?" Of course they are when worldly ambition makes the day last till eight o'clock P. M. "Tired out?" Don't wonder at it—mammon has stolen your hours of prayer, sealed up your Bible, choked holy meditations, left ungathered in the morning your portion of heavenly manna, and kept you in his service of slavish toil several hours after God had bidden you retire and rest with his people as they met for prayer. "Busy time?" More need of blessing, then. Shall we worship God only when we find nothing else to do? Farewell, then, circle of prayer. Satan will certainly keep us busy if prayer must wait for leisure. When God commanded "the assembling of ourselves," did he not know of "busy times"? Yet he urges it "so much the more." If business will excuse our constant neglect, then the altar of prayer may ever want a sacrifice. Hush, then, every vain excuse, till you consider what you say when you forsake the circle of prayer.

Our lives speak, and it is truthfully said, "Actions speak louder than words." This act of neglect therefore must have its own impressive language. By it you say, "I am not anxious about my own salvation." Like the impenitent around you, you have no fears, although you neglect so great salvation. The prophet Malachi, when speaking of times which we may easily recognize as our own, says, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." That is, those who realized their danger of being overcome by the surrounding apostasy, and appreciated the blessings of God, "spake often one to another." Had you a similar fear, would you not do the same? Amid "perilous times" you feel secure without exertion. The shores of time are lined with "wrecks of faith," whose first departure from God was a neglect of social prayer. That very hour of neglect was an hour of temptation. They fell. The place of prayer would have shielded them. Satan spreads his snares all along the path of life, not in it but on either side of it, that those who step aside may fall; yet you feel safe while treading where a numerous host have fallen.

Enoch walked with God. Abel offered continually an "acceptable sacrifice." Moses "forsook Egypt," choosing affliction with the people of God. Abraham went out, not knowing whither he went, and withheld not Isaac. Noah, "moved by fear," labored for a century preparing an ark "to the saving of his house." Millions have "resisted unto blood," "striving against sin," and the innumerable host of the sealed ones from "all nations, and kindred, and people, and tongues," "came out of great tribulation," and serve God day and night in his holy temple; and yet of these it is written, "scarcely are saved." What! such piety as this barely saved, and you, buried in worldly mire, in no danger? They barely safe with their diligence, and you without anxiety amid grievous neglect? Had the apostle no reason to say, "Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it?" Did he mean simply "having merchandise, or a trade, or a farm; let us fear lest we come short of food and raiment?" Yet this is what you say when you forsake "the assembling of ourselves together," and plead as an excuse the "cares of this life."

By this neglect you say again, "My brethren and sisters in Christ have but little place in my sympathies and desires." Are you a member of Christ's body? Can a member be separated from the body, however small the member may be, and the whole body not suffer from it? If a foot, a hand, a finger, or even a muscle be disabled upon the body, does not the whole body suffer? Still you, a member, separate yourself from the exercise of the body, and care not for the pain you cause it. The church of Christ is compared to a house. Can we remove a timber, even a pin from the frame, without weakening the structure? Have you not thus weakened the church by your neglect of duty? If so, have you loved it as you ought? Do you forget that the place of social prayer is the hospital of the church, where the wounded are nursed, the bruised anointed with Gilead's balm, the broken bound up, the sin-sick healed? Have you no Samaritan sympathy? Oftentimes the fainting one comes, the sorely tempted draw near; the absence of your help may leave them to fall. Have you no exhortation? Must they fall? Have you no anxiety? Yet this is what you say when you forsake "the assembling of ourselves together."

I know you have not intended to say such things; but this is but a beginning of the many "stout words" your neglect has spoken against God. They are all I can now refer to. They are sufficient to admonish you. Think of them. Think of them, lest, when the harvest is past, you be found ungathered among the sheaves of God. Think of them, lest, besides your own loss, the blood of many be found upon your skirts who might have been encouraged by your presence, strengthened by your counsels, cheered by your songs, and saved by your prayers. Think of them till, hasting away from worldly cares at the appointed times, you assemble with such as speak "often one to another," for of such only is it written, "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts."—Mal. 3: 17. Think of them till, with the poet, you can heartily sing—

"I love thy church, O God," and with him solemnly resolve—

"For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my cares and toils be giv'n
Till toils and cares shall end."

Rev. 17: 6.

"Drunken with the blood of the saints."

Charles IX. of France, a Roman Catholic prince, laid a snare for the destruction of the Protestants by offering his sister in marriage to a Huguenot, a Protestant prince of Navarre. All the chief men of the Huguenots were assembled in Paris at the nuptials; when on the eve of St. Bartholomew's day, Aug. 21, 1572, at the ringing of a bell, the massacre commenced. An unparalleled scene of horror ensued. The Roman Catholics rushed upon the defenceless Protestants. Above five hundred men of distinction, and about one thousand others, that night slept in Paris the sleep of death. A general destruction was immediately ordered throughout France, and a horrid carnage was soon witnessed at Rouen, Lyons, Orleans and other cities. Sixty thousand perished. When the news of this event reached Rome, Pope Gregory XIII. instituted the most solemn rejoicing, giving thanks to Almighty God for this glorious victory over the heretics. Two hundred thousand suffered death in seven years under Pope Julian. No less than one hundred thousand were massacred by the French in the space of three months. The Waldenses who perished amounted to one million. Within thirty years the Jesuits destroyed seven hundred thousand. Under the Duke of Alva, thirty thousand were executed by the common hangman. One hundred and fifty thousand perished in the Inquisition. In the O'Neill's rebellion, Oct. 23, 1641, upwards of thirty thousand British were killed in the commencement of this rebellion. In the first two or three days, fifty thousand Protestants were destroyed. Before the rebellion was suppressed, one hundred and fifty-four thousand Protestants were massacred; besides the vast number upon the world could never be particularly informed who were proscribed, banished, starved, burned, buried alive, smothered, drowned, assassinated, chained to the galleys for life, or immured within the horrid walls of the Bastile. The best authority estimates the whole number of persons massacred since the rise of Papacy at fifty millions!

And shall they not live again? John saw them who had come up "out of great tribulation, and (had) washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." And shall we not reign with them? "It is a faithful saying: for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him. If we deny him, he also will deny us." May we be wise, and "turn many to righteousness," and so "shine as the stars forever and ever."

C. G. Carre.

Blackstone, Mass.

Speak Kindly.

Speak kindly, speak kindly; ye know not the power
Of a kind and gentle word,
As its tones in a sad and weary hour
By the troubled heart are heard.
Ye know not how often it falls to bless
The stranger in his weariness;
How many a blessing is round thee thrown
By the magic spell of a soft, low tone.
Speak kindly, then, kindly, there's nothing lost
By gentle words; to the heart and ear
Of the sad and lonely they're dear, how dear,
And they nothing cost.

Speak kindly to childhood; oh, do not fling
A cloud o'er life's troubled sky;
But cherish it well—a holy thing
Is the heart in its purity.
Enough of sorrow the cold world hath,
Enough of care in its later path,
And ye do wrong if ye seek to throw
O'er the fresh young spirit a shade of woe.
Speak kindly, then, kindly, there's nothing lost
By gentle words; to the heart and ear
Of joyous childhood they're dear, how dear,
And they nothing cost.

Speak kindly to age—a weary way
Is the rough and toilsome road of life,
As one by one its joys decay,
And its hopes go out mid its lengthened strife.
How often the word that is kindly spoken,
Will bind up the heart that is well nigh broken;
Then pass not the feeble and aged one
With a cold, and careless, and slighting tone;
But kindly, speak kindly, there's nothing lost
By gentle words; to the heart and ear
Of the care-worn and weary they're dear, how dear,
And they nothing cost.

Speak kindly to those who are haughty and proud;
Ye know not the thoughts that are dwelling there,
Ye know not the feelings that struggle untold,—
Oh! every heart hath its burden of care,
And the curl of the lip and the scorn of the eye
Are often a bitter mockery.
When a bursting heart its grief would hide
From the eye of the world 'neath a vail of pride,
Speak kindly, then, kindly, there's nothing lost
By gentle words; to the heart and ear
Of the proud and haughty they are often dear,
And they nothing cost.

Speak kindly ever—ah! cherish well
The light of a gentle tone,
It will fling round thy pathway a magic spell,
A charm that is all its own.
But see that it springs from a gentle heart,
That it needs not the hollow aid of art,
Let it gush in its joyous purity
From its home in the heart all glad and free.
Speak kindly, then, kindly, there's nothing lost
By gentle words to the heart and ear
Of all who hear them; they're dear, how dear,
And they nothing cost.

Reflections on the Fourth of July.

This is to the people of this country a day of memorial. It is celebrated as the birth-day of this nation, and revered as the dawn of liberty after oppression. Patriots love this day as they love this nation; and they love it because their home and treasure are here, and because the interests of their all depend upon the prosperity of this nation. Hence they will devote their time, talents and substance to the maintenance of the interests of this government. They endeavor to induce a loyalty to its interests, and an increase of its adherents; and whether at home or abroad the devotion of the true citizen is equally manifest. Hence Americans in Europe love to show themselves Americans still. Hence a Train in London is an American, as much as if on this side of the water.

All this is very natural and consistent with the interests and proper claims of one who has his home and treasure so dependent upon a worldly government. But if he is a pilgrim and stranger here, having his home and treasure in the world to come, he cannot take a particular interest in these matters, having essentially no interests involved. Hence Paul says, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." The follower of Christ is commanded to set his affections upon things above, not on things on the earth. He is to love not the world, neither things that are in the world. But can we love any worldly government as a patriot, and not love this world? Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this world." May we as followers of Christ say that ours is? He says, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." May we answer, "We have one already"? When our Master went away "to receive for himself a kingdom and to return," he gave to his servants the charge, "Occupy till I come." Did not this mean, "devote yourselves to the interests of my kingdom till I return with it"? Can we serve two masters? No more can we be citizens of two kingdoms. When the laws of man conflict with God's law, we are to "obey God rather than men." And where they are agreed, still we are to obey as unto God and not unto man. Hence our loyalty should be unto the law and kingdom of God.

We should see to it that our loyalty to this kingdom is unimpeachable. We have great responsibilities resting upon us here. We are entrusted with the interests of this kingdom, the proclamation of the virtues of its King and subordinate rulers, the righteousness of its laws, its rich blessings to its subjects, and its splendor and glory. In this work we are expected to occupy till our absent King returns to take possession of his kingdom.

The kingdom is now in the hands of rebels. Six thousand years ago, when the kingdom had got fairly started as it seemed; when its subjects were happy in innocence, purity and love; when peace and loyalty reigned, and everything was pronounced "very good", an usurper entered and sowed the seeds of distrust and disloyalty. Through the subtlety of this usurper they were induced to rebel against the laws of their rightful sovereign. When they had thrown off their allegiance and become victims of this usurper, ruin and desolation followed them and has continued its ravages upon their posterity to the present day. Still this kingdom is in the hands of rebels; still its laws are defied and trampled under foot; still its proper subjects are despised, and looked upon with distrust and hatred; still the claims of the rightful owner of the the soil are met with scoffs and defiance, and nothing will enrage them more than to tell them that he is soon coming to claim and take possession of that which is his own.

And shall we countenance this rebellion? As those who claim to be the heirs of the rightful kingdom, shall we join in league with the rebels' kingdom. Shall we join with them in their common cry concerning the proper King, "Stay away! stay away"? Should we not rather pray as he has taught us, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth"? As this kingdom will surely come, we should allow no opposing interests to distract our minds from occupying till our King comes. He has said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown." He has admonished us, let "no man take thy crown." He is soon to appear and reckon with his servants. How shall we stand the test of faithfulness? Do we rejoice in the prospect, or do we fear the day of reckoning? If faithful to the interests of his kingdom, we shall love his appearing, and work with more joy and zeal in view of its nearness. We shall have need to ask for patience to wait in view of our intense anxiety.

Thank the Lord that the kingdom is soon coming,—that the glad relief is soon to be ours,—that we are soon to get home—

Home, amid sweet Eden's bowers,
Home, where love shall reign supreme,
Rich with fruit, and gay with flowers—
Home, "sweet home," shall be my theme.

My heart is gladdened while I contemplate our future prospects. The "blessed hope" is a balm for the sorrows and difficulties we have to encounter here. And though men may despise us, and set us at nought, I would rather be set at nought by men now, than by our heavenly Father when Jesus comes in a little from this. Till then I will earnestly pray, "Thy kingdom come."

The Model Young Woman.

1. The model young woman takes care of her health by a proper observance of the laws of health in all ways, but especially with regard to diet, dress, and exercise. Her dress is so constructed as to keep her person warm—especially the lower extremities—and not to impede locomotion. She exercises frequently in the open air, thus bringing the flush of health to her cheek, and sending healthy life blood unhindered by tight lacing, to every part of her system.

2. She is modest. Modesty is "synonymous with chastity, or purity of manners." There is such a thing as affecting modesty sometimes seen among women; but wherever this is witnessed, it is the sure evidence that the genuine article is missing, for it is always unaffected and natural. "Unaffected modesty is the sweetest charm of female excellence, the richest gem in the diadem of their honor." Modesty is natural and may be preserved by cultivating only the sweetest and purest thoughts.

3. She has good taste. Taste is nice perception, or the power of perceiving and relishing excellence in human performances; it is the faculty of discerning beauty, order, congruity, proportion, symmetry or whatever constitutes excellence. It is not altogether natural, nor is it entirely acquired, but it may be cultivated highly.

Good taste will manifest itself in the dress, and conversation, and general appearance; and will regulate all her intercourse with others, especially those of the opposite sex. It will abash the vulgar and impure, and encourage and strengthen the good. Modesty and good taste will build around the possessor a strong tower of defence.

4. She is intelligent. She acquires intelligence in all suitable ways, especially by observation, reading and conversation. She looks upon the world around her as a great volume of facts wrought out by the Almighty Artificer and proper for her to study; and in the tiny leaflet or the granite boulder, she sees the work of God, and endeavors to understand it. She reads good books carefully and tries to make the facts and ideas contained therein her own. Her conversation is with the wise and good, and in it she is getting or giving truth. She knows but little about that which is called "small talk," and never practises it—such food is too frothy for her intellectual appetite.

5. She is emotional. As a well tuned harp will answer quickly and accurately the finest and most delicate touch of the player, so her heart feels deeply and acutely. The recital of the sorrows of another finds an answering chord in her heart, that echoes responsively the bitter wail. And the sight or sound of joy in others, makes her heart leap as leaps the bird which, rising from its lowly nest toward heaven, sings with quivering melody its song of praise and gladness.

6. She is self-sacrificing. She is always ready to make sacrifices of her time or labor, or any thing she can, for the good of those in whom she feels an interest. And this is no mark of weakness in her, but it is noble. Christ manifested the same spirit, and it is one of the noble traits in his character.

6. She is affectionate. She loves every loveable thing. Love is the mainspring of her actions. She labors for those whom she loves, because she loves them, and such is the intensity of her love, that no sacrifice can be demanded so great that she will not make it for them.

8. She is pious. Her soul is the abode of her Savior. In the light of religion, she walks as if treading upon a rock. Here she acquires her decision and strength to deny herself, and refuse to do wrong with as much firmness as she would do right with cheerfulness. This is the key-stone to the arch of her character, supporting and beautifying the whole—the crown of light and purity surmounting all the rest, and sitting there as the cloven tongues sat upon the disciples at the pentecostal baptism. The hindrances to the formation of such a character, are, bad company, bad books, and bad habits. Eschew these and take firm hold of their opposites, and any young woman of ordinary cultivation and under any ordinary circumstances can form and maintain the very character I have described above. Young woman, give this subject thought.

A Brief Discourse.

NOT BY HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Text.—"There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof," etc.

The simple truth taught by this simple passage of holy writ is—that he who thinks he is right, simply because he thinks he is, is a simpleton.

A few cases will make this truth luminous. It may seem right to a man to neglect paying his debts for the sake of speculating with his money, but the end thereof is the loss of public confidence.

It may seem right to a man to live beyond his income, but the end thereof is—poverty and wretchedness.

It may seem right to some to conform to every fashion, but the end thereof will be the conclusion—in the minds of all sensible people—that they belong to the ape genus, which is remarkable for its propensity to imitate.

It may seem right to some to live without labor, but the end thereof will be—life will be a curse, and not a blessing.

It may seem right to a man to borrow often of his friends, and never be willing to lend, but the end thereof will be—very unpleasant neighbors.

It may seem right to a man ever to be trumpeting his own fame, but the end thereof will be—he has no fame to be trumpeted by others.

It may seem right to a man to trouble himself about the business of others, but the end thereof will be—others will think he had better mind his own.

It may seem right to parents to allow their children to have their own way in every thing, but the end thereof will be—an unhappy family.

It may seem right to a man to delay till to-morrow what ought to be done to-day, but the end thereof will be,—life will end before life's work is finished.

It may seem right to try to please every body, but the end thereof will be,—we shall displease God, and die displeased with ourselves.

It may seem right to excel our neighbors in extravagance in our manner of living, but the end thereof will be,—the consciousness, when we come to die, that we have been great fools.

It may seem right to a man to say yes sir, to every thing another may say to him, but the end thereof will be,—the conclusion—in the minds of all sensible people,—that he has no mind of his own.

It may seem right to a lady to wear a dress so long that it shall trail upon the street, but the end thereof will be very likely to get badly soiled, and to be tread upon and torn, which may end in hard words by her,—all occasioned by her own folly. . . .

It would seem right to us to extend this discourse, if we did not think short sermons the most useful, so the end hereof is here.—Dental Mirror.

A Short Sermon.—Keep out of debt. Avoid it as you would war, pestilence, and famine. Hate it with a perfect hatred. Dig potatoes, break stones, peddle tin-ware, do any thing that is honest and useful, rather than run into debt. As you value good digestion, a healthy appetite, a placid temper, a smooth pillow, pleasant dreams and happy wakenings, keep out of debt. It is the hardest of all taskmasters, the most cruel of all oppressors. It is a millstone about the neck, an incubus on the heart. It spreads a cloud over the firmament of man's being. It furrows the forehead with premature wrinkles, plucks from the eye its light, drags all nobleness and kindness out of the port and bearing of man. It takes all the soul out of his laugh, and all stateliness out of his walk. Come not under its accursed dominion, nor ever be its slave. Owe no man anything.

Don't Write There.—"Don't write there," said one to a lad who was writing, with a diamond pin, on a pane of glass in the window of a hotel: "Why not?" was the reply. "Because you can't rub it out." There are other things which men should not do, because they cannot rub them out. A heart is aching for sympathy, and a cold, perhaps a heartless word is spoken. The impression may be more durable than that of the diamond upon the glass. The inscription on the glass may be destroyed by the fracture of the glass, but the impression on the heart may last forever. On many a mind and many a heart there are sad inscriptions, deeply engraved, which no effort can erase. We should be careful what we write on the minds of others.—Ex.

☞ The tasks set to children should be moderate. Over-exertion is hurtful, both physically and intellectually, and even morally. But it is of the utmost importance that they should be made to fulfill all their tasks correctly and punctually. This will train them for an exact, conscientious discharge of their duties in after life.

Scolding Persons.—A scolding person cannot govern. What makes people scold? Because they cannot govern themselves. How, then, can they govern others? Those who govern well are generally calm; they are prompt and resolute, but steady and mild.

Scalds and Burns.

In the Crisis of July 9th is an advertisement of a recipe for the cure of scalds and burns, taken from Hall's Journal of Health, which may be good; especially that part of it which recommends applying cold water to the part affected.

The best thing that I have ever seen applied, after the application of cold water, is the Golden Salve, made by Bro. C. P. Whitten, of Lowell, Mass. I have seen this applied in many cases, and in some of the very worst, with marked effect. It is very soothing and healing. In my view, nothing excels it; while it is far superior to most of the articles usually employed in such cases. It should be in the possession of every one.

Talks about Health.

BY DIO LEWIS, M. D.

The other day I met an intelligent medical man, just returned from Port Royal. He had lived much in hot climates. The health of our army deeply interested him. Several persons on their way to the South had asked him, "How can we preserve our health during the summer?" I listened with the deepest interest to his reply, and believing it full of sound practical wisdom, and applicable to this latitude during this present heated term, I give it publicity.

The doctor said, I will give you a few rules, which, faithfully observed, will protect you against the fevers, dysentery, and other diseases of hot climates.

1st. Don't touch a drop of alcoholic stimulus, and avoid the excessive use of ice water.

2d. Eat very little or no meat, but use freely coarse bread and the fruits of the country. Tea and coffee may be drank in small quantities, if made quite weak.

3d. Bathe all over, at least once a day; sleep in well-ventilated apartments; retire early, and sleep long. Straw makes the best bed. It is not well to sleep in the same garment, next the skin, which has been worn during the day.

4th. And most important of all, wear woolen next the skin! It may be hard to learn; you may, at first, be obliged to provide yourself with very thin, soft flannel, but you must persevere. If symptoms of bowel disease appear, wrap an extra piece of flannel around the bowels.

5th. You must keep up your exercise. Although it may increase your discomfort for the moment, it will greatly enhance your power to resist the heat. The farmer in the harvest-field suffers much less than the fine lady in her parlor, although his temperature may be thirty degrees higher. Brisk exercise of the right kind and amount is a wonderful protector against the influence of heat. No one so surely falls a victim to a hot climate as he who lives high, drinks brandy, and sits constantly in the shade, fanning himself.

When you reach the South, any number of persons will laugh at this advice, and urge you to drink brandy and keep quiet. They will tell you, "It will never do, sir, we have been here for years and know all about it. The water is bad, and will kill you; you must put in the brandy." Just ask them if the brandy removes or neutralizes the poison in the water? Ask them if the deleterious ingredients in the water are not all there, just the same, and the brandy is not simply an added mischief? But what will trouble them more; ask them if they ever tried the other plan. I am sure they will confess they never have. And then, so far as the argument is concerned, you will have them on the hip, if you bring forward the facts found in a report to the English Parliament from the military authorities in India, proving abundantly and most conclusively that alcoholic stimulus is a great enemy to the health of the army. Although the soldiers used it in small quantities, it invariably proved very mischievous. The regiments that abstained altogether, almost immediately reduced their cases of fever and dysentery more than fifty per cent. The total abstinence regiments could entirely outdo the drinkers in a fatiguing march.

I will add that I have no doubt the health of our army is seriously compromised by the spirit rations. I know several intelligent medical men who advised the moderate use of brandy during the cholera season of '49, but strictly prohibited such indulgence during '51. The experience of a single season had fully satisfied them that brandy was a poison, even in hot weather.

I hope the judgment is not severe; but I honestly believe that a love for brandy, a slavish acquiescence in a fashionable vice, or physiological ignorance, is the origin of all the brandy prescriptions in hot weather or for hot climates.

Health Items.

"Appetite," in midsummer, is necessarily and naturally weak. Some persons think they are sick when appetite "fails." But Nature, during the heated period, takes this method to give rest to the vital organs.

"Foods" for summer should be free from grease and sweets. Most people of weak digestion would be benefitted by eating slower and drinking almost nothing.

"Ablutions," or washing the whole body at least twice per week, are essential to your salvation from disease.

"Sun-Strokes" may be prevented by wearing a wet handkerchief in your hat.

"Erysipelas," which violently burns and irritates the surface of the body, can be relieved by making an ointment of pure lard and sumach berries. Or take the tincture of the sumach called Rhus, and bathe the afflicted parts lightly.

"Salt" is excellent in diphtheria. Dissolve it in water and gargle every hour, or more frequent if the symptoms are severe.

"Eyes" should not be strained by reading by artificial light. Moonlight is most dangerous to the eyes while reading. Never weary your eyes during the heat of summer. More persons lose their sight in this way than is generally supposed.

"Ice Water" is good for neuralgia. Ice will relieve severe pain. Pieces of ice put in the mouth of an epileptic will bring him out of the fit. Drinking ice water in hot weather should be seldom.

"Bile" may be kept out of the blood by eating plentifully of fruits and grains, drinking buttermilk, and rarely using anything from the animal kingdom.

"Drowned" persons may be resuscitated by filling the lungs with air by a bellows, or forcing your breath into the nostrils, and pressing the chest first downward and then upward until natural breathing is established. It is sometimes necessary to force the air into and out of the chest one hour before the patient will recover. Then wrap the body in warm blankets and keep the patient near a fire for two or three hours.

"Kidneys" are easily strengthened by the habitual morning application of cold water with the hand to the back and hips. The young should invariably practice such bathing. Laboring men and women would find great strength in this simple practice.

"Mineral Waters" for medical purposes are nearly worthless. Many persons, if they only get from home and its corroding cares, will recover from many ills. Mineral springs often get credit for doing what such "changes" more naturally effect.

"Dysentery," which is known by the bloody discharges, may be controlled by physical rest. Give the stomach light wheat flour puddings. Wintergreen essence in a little cold water occasionally. Keep the bowels cool and quiet by bandages of water and spirits of camphor.

"Earache" will yield to hot water compresses applied to the back of the neck. Take foot-bath, and then walk the room or in the open air.

"Mercury" is an excellent substance for thermometers, but as a medicine it is as injurious as old theology is false.

"Soda" is sometimes serviceable in liver diseases, but it is more likely to cause such diseases, if used often in pastries, bread, etc.

"Gastric Juice" is necessary to digestion. It cannot be substituted by any external fluid. Tobacco chewers waste much fluid that would make gastric juice and promote health.—Herald of Progress.

Bathing Infants.

I know some mothers who desire to bring up their children hygienically, who are in the habit of washing their infants all over in cold water—not icy cold, but that which is cold to a child's body—each morning and evening. This they do, I have no doubt, with the design of promoting, in some way, the health of the children. But if they were questioned closely as to the manner in which they suppose health is benefitted by such treatment, I think they would find it difficult to give an answer satisfactory to themselves even. They might say, perhaps, that water treatment is good, and of course must be good for their little ones. But they do not know that it is good, unless they know how it is good.

I cannot think of any benefit to be secured by bathing a perfectly healthy babe, except that of cleanliness; and once in twenty-four hours is abundantly often for this object. The skin of a child does not become dirty sooner than that of an adult; and most mothers do not consider themselves very dirty if they bathe as often as once in two or three days.

There is no reason why the water which is used to bathe children should be cold. Violent reactions do not promote cleanliness, or tend to any other desirable result. A temperature so mild as simply to feel pleasantly cool to the body of an infant, is much more beneficial than one, which by its feeling of coldness, gives a shock to nervous system.

There is no need of any great amount of rubbing in the bath of a child which is washed daily, or of coarse towel friction after it is taken out of the water.

The best hour in the day to bathe an infant is at ten or eleven o'clock in the forenoon. The water should always be prepared at a pleasant temperature in a tub. The child should be undressed, have its head and face wet in the water of the bath, and then be dipped in to its neck, taken out, laid upon a soft linen sheet upon its mother's lap, enveloped, and have the water gently and quickly dried from the surface; after which, there may be pleasant, gentle friction by the mother's hand, continued till she and her baby are satisfied.

Thus cleanliness is secured with the least possible wear and tear to the nervous system of the child. As the healthy glow comes to its skin after the bath, it will almost invariably manifest an inclination to go to sleep; which disposition should be established into a habit. When it wakes after its nap, it will be ready for its dinner, and to be good-natured for the rest of the day, provided it is well treated. When it is prepared for the night, every article of clothing which it has worn during the day should be removed, its little body should be gently rubbed all over by the hand, and have fresh garments put upon it.—Laws of Life.

Benefit of Trials.

Trials bring us joy and comfort,
Draw us near that heart of love
Flowing freely, ever flowing,
From our God who dwells above;—
Make his promises more precious,
Lead our weary souls to rest,
With a firm and blest assurance,
Closer still upon his breast.

As the flower emits more fragrance,
And looks brighter than before,
When the storm that laid it drooping
With his fury hath passed o'er;
So the heart doth rise in freshness,
Better fitted for his will,
When the winds and waves of sorrow,
That near laid it low, are still.

Trials bring us faith and patience,
Give an unction new to prayer,
Take us to the throne of mercy,
Lead us long to linger there;—
Make the hope of glory sweeter,
And the words of truth more bright,
Cause to fade all earthly visions,
Bringing heavenly ones to sight.

"Light afflictions but a moment,"
Working out for us most sure
"An eternal weight of glory"!
Who then cannot these endure?
He is faithful who hath promised,
Let us trust him evermore,
And give praise for every trial
Till our pilgrimage is o'er.

The Doom of the Wicked.

"Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile . . . For there is no respect of persons with God."—Rom. 2: 8, 9–11.

Fearful announcement this, to those who persist in sinning against a holy and just God. Although the great, leading principle of the gospel motive to induce rebellious man to return to God and obey his commands is "the love of God," "the goodness of God," yet this is by no means the only one. Man is possessed of the principle of fear. God has endowed him with this principle, that he may fear to do evil, because a fearful result follows. Consequently, while all the attracting and winning attributes of God are set forth in the Scriptures to gain the affections and win the obedience of the human heart; so, also, must the righteousness and justice of God be published to induce reverence, and fear, and confidence. Otherwise, there would be no sufficient ground of affection, reverence and confidence. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," says Paul. Why? asks one. Because he is holy, just, and righteous, "and will not at all acquit the wicked." But some men do not love to think of a God who deals in indignation and wrath. It does not look to them like love; they think that love is inconsistent with wrath. This leads me to think of a Sister, I once heard talk in meeting, who was so overcome by wild enthusiasm as to say she loved "every body, and every thing." "Yes," said she, "I even love the devil." Such love as this forbids our obeying God, who commands us to hate evil. He hates evil, and will destroy it. He "will early destroy all the wicked of the land."

But when will his indignation be manifested, and "tribulation and anguish" be experienced by the wicked? Paul answers this question. "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel."—Rom. 2: 16. What is the doctrine of Paul's gospel? "God . . . hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof (or the certainty of which) he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."—Acts 17: 31. How many will thus be judged? "Every man that worketh good." "Every . . . man that doeth evil, . . . Jews . . and Gentiles."—Rom. 2: 9. But does this agree with Christ's gospel? It does; and he who undertakes to pervert the teachings of Paul must also seek to overthrow or subvert Christ's teachings. Jesus declared that "the Father . . . hath given him authority to execute judgment"; and continues, "For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 29. No language can be plainer to express the fact that ALL who have done evil must come up from the grave, or resting-place of the dead, "unto the resurrection of damnation." They must receive "the wages of sin," which is the "second death." "Death and hell" (or hades) shall deliver "up the dead," "small and great," at the voice of Jesus Christ, and he will execute "tribulation and anguish" upon all who have lived and continued in sin. How long tribulation and anguish will continue to be experienced, it does not become me to speculate upon. It will end in death,—"the wages of sin,"—"the second death," experienced "in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," which the angel told John was "their part."

Dear readers, do not allow yourselves to be led away from the instructions of the Bible. Unbelief and skepticism are quite too prevalent now. Do not doubt the plain, simple statements of Scripture, which abound through the whole Bible, that the wicked must come forth from death to judgment, and die for their own sins. The angel told Daniel (chap. 12: 2) that when Michael shall stand up, some "who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake . . . to shame and everlasting contempt." I have only quoted a few of the multitude of proofs on this important subject. Do we believe them and feel as we ought in consideration of them? Let us so live by the faith of the Son of God, that we may be found at last among those who have part in "the resurrection of the just,"—"the first resurrection,"—"a better resurrection," and so live forever in the kingdom of God.

Fiery Trial.

If ever there was a time in the history of the church when she needed the most confident trust in God, it must be when her greatest deliverance is pending; and thus the tenor of Scripture teaches. Were we to look upon the past we should find the dubious and perplexing always preceding the light and confident. Thus it is in conversion: the mountains of sin always intercept our passage to the bright fields of hope. So with Israel in Egypt,—brick without straw and impending destruction, ere the Red Sea is past and deliverance is sung and danced on the other shore. Thus it has always been. The gallows must be prepared for Mordecai before Haman is hanged. A Christ must suffer before he can reign. "Arm yourselves likewise with the same mind," for it is upon us, and if we suffer with Him (that is, in the same cause), we shall reign with him. "Many shall be purified, made white and tried," saith the shining one to Daniel; and Peter, talking of the same thing, calls it a "fiery trial." Again he calls it a precious trial, yea, much "more precious than of gold." No wonder he supposed we should think strange of such a trial as that,—a kind of bitter-sweet, sorrowful gladness—tearful joyfulness,—like the wife whose husband, returning from over sea lands, looks saddened with smiles. "Fiery," "precious," "trial." Well, we are entering the hurlgate, and God only knows who of us will "be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

God is ruling among the nations; he will give those that are wicked to the sword. Now, brethren, if you would not be scorched with these "fiery trials," do not fix it up in your mind how this chastening should be administered. "Distress of nations with perplexity" is written for this generation. "And what is written is written." Can we see the golden streets of our blessed home through this dark war cloud that is only lined with darkness and tinged with despair to the world? Precious fiery trial. Are sons, husbands, or brothers enlisted in the bloody fight?

"Let faith arise and climb those hills,
And from afar descry
How distant are His chariot wheels,
And tell how fast they fly."

Are they soon to be drafted, to kill and mangle their fellow men and be killed and mangled in their turn? Tell Father all about it. Then—

"Oh! for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by many a foe."

How precious that faith that will stand the fiery trial! But may we not get a substitute? Just as well kill for yourselves as to hire somebody else to kill for you. But what would you do if you were drafted? I would "do violence to no man." But they would put you in prison. Then I would pray for the jailor, and fish for the prisoners. But if your son should go or be drafted, would you not get a substitute? Never! What would you do? I would tell Father, and trust in that God who saved from the fiery furnace to save me in the fiery trial. Trial of faith! No wonder the inquiry—"Who shall be able to stand?"

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto pened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."—1 Pet. 4: 12, 13.

Brotherly Love.

"That love was strong indeed
First felt for God and man;
Toward Jesus and his truth
Affection freely ran;
Joyful, yes, that love may be
Awaked to heavenly harmony."

Paul in his letter to the Hebrews (13: 1) says, "Let brotherly love continue." The apostle had no occasion to reprove them for the want of it, as he had in regard to some to whom he wrote; his object is to impress on them the importance of this virtue, and that there was danger of allowing themselves to become indifferent. Let us give heed to this exhortation of Paul, and see that brotherly love continues. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." Let us watch unto prayer, that we may not fail in this. May we remember love is the element of heaven. If this is wanting, all is wanting. "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother. For this is the message that we heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." 1 John 3: 10, 11. By this we may "know that we have passed from death unto life." How important this virtue. O! let us strive to walk in love as Christ also loved us, and put away "all bitterness, . . . and evil speaking," and be kind and forgiving to one another, "even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us." Eph. 4: 31, 32.

If we would have the peace of God, we must love one another as Jesus loved us. We must have that charity that is kind, long suffering, forbearing, not easily provoked, that thinketh no evil, and is not ready to speak of the faults of the brethren and sisters without going first to see them, as the word of God directs. Matt. 18: 15–17. Let us guard against this sin and abide in Christ. "He is our peace, who hath make both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us." Eph. 2: 14.

O! that the church of Christ would awake to this important duty of more love one for another. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Let us strive to have more of the mind of the blessed Savior, that when "he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Baptism "for the remission of Sins."

BY W. SHELDON.

"Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38.

Is baptism here set forth as a pre-requisite to the remission of sins? I answer in the negative. If it were, it would conflict with the general tone of revelation which makes repentance, or faith reduced to action, the only pre-requisite to the "remission of sins," and would make baptism an absurdity, when administered to Christ, to Cornelius, and to other holy men who had no sins to remit. It is nonsense to assert, without proof, that these cases are exceptions to the general rule, for christian baptism has never been used to the disparagement of its original design, by Divine sanction. Many instances, since the origin of baptism, are named in which sins were remitted without any connection with baptism.

Again: if sins cannot be remitted except in baptism, a man should be baptized every time he chances to sin; hence, instead of being written, "If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father," it should read, "If any man sin, we have a baptism for the remission of sins to be baptized with." If sins are ever remitted without baptism in this age, then they always are, or else the plan of Jehovah is a vacillating one. If sins are ever remitted by baptism, then they always are, or else God's plan is in opposition to itself. Since in other portions of the word, repentance (and not baptism) is made the pre-requisite to the "remission of sins," we may safely conclude that the same doctrine is taught by this text when rightly understood, and not a conflicting one. The truth is, this text presents two pre-requisites, and two results; not two pre-requisites to the attainment of one result. Repentance only is here, as elsewhere, held up as a pre-requisite to the "remission of sins;" while baptism is followed by the "gift of the Holy Ghost,"—a gift which is imparted in numerous instances at the discharge of a christian duty, and especially at baptism. The original Greek,—"Metanoeesate, kai baptistheeto ekastos humon epi to onomati Jeesou Kristou eis ophesin hamartion,"—is well translated in our version, but not well transposed to convey the idea clearly, and preserve a plain harmony with the other teachings of the Bible upon the only pre-requisite to the "remission of sins." Preserving our translation, and transposing the text in harmony with the great truths which it sets forth in harmony with other scriptures, it reads, "Repent for the remission of sins, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Thus repentance and not baptism is "for the remission of sins." This agrees with the whole Bible. We must be dead to sin, before being "buried with Christ in baptism," for we do not bury people to make them die, but after they are dead. And if we are dead to sin before being buried with Christ in baptism, we have no sins to be remitted in baptism; hence baptism is not "for the remission of sins." It is an outward sign of our freedom from sin: hence it was said to Paul, "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins," even after he had been "filled with the Holy Ghost," as Jesus told the man to offer for his cleansing the offering required by Moses, even though he was already cleansed. Paul was already free from sin, so was Cornelius, but they must submit to this sign of their freedom from sin or death to sin. Firstly die, and then be buried.

Nahum.

The prophet Nahum, to the people of God concerning the city of Nineveh. "God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth; the Lord revengeth and is furious; the Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies. . . . The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein." Here is evidently set forth the world's conflagration, as confirmed by other prophets. Mal. 4: 1,—"For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." 2 Pet. 3: 10,—"But the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." Nahum reasons upon it thus: "Who can stand before his indignation? And who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him." Then he exhorts Judah to keep her solemn feasts, for, saith he, "The wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly cut off." When is that day that the wicked shall no more pass through Judah because he is utterly cut off? Not yet. No. He is not yet cut off. When is that day? Let Nahum answer. He tells us (2: 3) by what sign we may know the day of his preparation; when he shall prepare to do these things. "The shield of his mighty men is made red [with blood], the valiant men are in scarlet [war coats]; the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken." The prophet undoubtedly foresaw the cars pass through some swamp of fir trees. "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings." What chariots but the cars were ever arranged so close as to "justle one against another?" This gives the idea of a train. What looks more like torches than the engine? What other chariots so run like lightning as the lightning trains? Wherefore we know, as railroads were not until this day, but have appeared in our day, this is the day of the Lord's "preparation." Preparation for what? for the overthrow of Nineveh? Does Nineveh now exist? Not the great ancient city. We know not even the place where it stood. But the wicked world, as seen at verse 5th, is compared to the wicked city. And this shall the Lord overthrow. This is not when the wicked are cut off, but "the day of his preparation;" wherefore that day shall follow. And we know that it is to be in our day, because they are railroad days.

But you may ask, may not railroads last many years? The prophet evidently would not give as a sign of the day of preparation, a thing which had been long in existence. It could be no sign except it were a new thing. Then we know, if cars run, the day of the Lord's vengeance is at hand. But if the world is to be burned "and all that dwell therein," what will become of the righteous? Paul tells us, when speaking of the church: "We which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 17. "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." 2 Pet. 3: 11–14. MINER CAWKINS.

An Apostolic Preacher.

The poet Cowper thus describes an apostolic preacher:—

I venerate the man whose heart is warm,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof
That he is honest in the sacred cause.
To such I render more than mere respect,
Whose actions say they respect themselves.
Would I describe a preacher, such as Paul,
Were he on earth, would hear, approve, and own,
Paul should himself direct me. I would trace
His master-strokes, and draw from his design.
I would express him simple, grave, sincere;
In doctrine uncorrupt; in language plain;
And plain in manner. Decent, solemn, chaste,
And natural in gesture. Much impressed
Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
And anxious mainly that the flock he feeds
May feel it too. Affectionate in look,
And tender in address, as well becomes
A messenger of grace to guilty men.

THE DANDY PREACHER.

Behold the picture! Is it like? Like whom?
The things that mount the rostrum with a skip,
And then skip down again. Pronounce a text,
Cry hem; and, reading what they never wrote
Just fifteen minutes, huddle up their work,
And, with a well-bred whisper, close the scene!

In man or woman, but far most in man,
And most of all in man that ministers
And serves the altar, in my soul I loathe
All affectation. 'Tis my perfect scorn;
Object of my implacable disgust.
What! will a man play tricks, will he indulge
A silly, fond conceit of his fair form
And just proportions, fashionable mien,
And pretty face, in presence of his God?
Or will he seek to dazzle me with tropes,
As with the diamond on his lily hand,
And play his brilliant parts before my eyes,
When I am hungry for the bread of life?
He mocks his Maker, prostitutes and shames
His noble office, and, instead of truth,
Displaying his own beauty, starves his flock.
Therefore, avaunt! all attitude and stare,
And start theatric, practised at the glass.
I seek divine simplicity in him
Who handles things divine; and all beside,
Though learned with labor, and though much admired
By curious eyes, and judgments ill-informed,
To me is odious as the nasal twang
Conventicle heard, where worthy men,
Misled by custom, stain celestial themes
Through the pressed nostrils, spectacle bestrid.

THE SOBER PREACHER.

He that negotiates between God and man,
As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful
To court a grin, when you should woo a soul;
To break a jest, when pity would inspire
Pathetic exhortation; and t' address
The skittish fancy with facetious tales
When sent with God's commission to the heart.
So did Paul. Direct me to a quip,
Or merry turn, in all he ever wrote,
And I consent you take it for your text,
Your only one, till sides and benches fail.
No; he was serious in a serious cause,
And understood too well the weighty terms
That he had ta'en in charge; he would not stoop
To conquer those by jocular conceits,
Whom truth and soberness assailed in vain.

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

"We also repudiate the Socinian view. We agree with them in that point, that they do not in the created nature of man see any guaranty of his immortality; that they see in him, as well as in all the rest of created beings, according to their nature, a possibility of perishing. But the Socinians lack that deeper look into the essence of the second creation, which, together with the first, only produced man. Adam had nothing to do with immortality; his entire nature was corruptible; yes, according to his nature, he could never become immortal, because the possibility lay not in it. Without sinning, of course, he would not have died; he would have miraculously been kept from dying; i. e., become eternal, or be preserved forever; but never would he have become immortal; for never would he have been able to make life his own, so as to possess it independently of any being besides him." . . . .

Page 95. "So we find, that the possibility of immortality for man is conditioned by his taking hold of God, by making the Spirit of God, which causes him to live, his own. He was created for immortality, so that a development of his powers, if such had not been interrupted by sin, would have made him immortal. So, indeed, there lies in the idea of man immortality, and the contrary is something which is wholly opposed to it." . . . .

Page 96. "Because man's personality through the Spirit stands in a conscious connection with God, the fountain of life, it cannot be destroyed, (Matt. 10: 28). It could only perish, where it had lived itself out, like a species of animals. But that is impossible; it cannot live itself out. The Spirit conveys to it an eternal fountain of eternal life, which nourishes more and more the whole man; penetrates and spiritualizes him, until at last, also, that part of him, which from nature is the basis of his personality, has become spiritual (pneumatikon) with the eternal Son of God, for whom the spiritual creature was made, as the pattern and end; man must become more and more united, so that in the first Adam the second could realize himself, who became a quickening Spirit,—as first and second creation in man co-operate together. With that God, who, as the life, is the condition of every individual life and so causes the individual life of men, man must be united, and in this way represent the personal revelation of God in the world, as the whole nature is the revelation of the essence of God; in consequence hereof, he inseparably unites himself with his life, which also bears his animal life. Indeed not immortality of the soul, but immortality of man, is founded in this his nature. Whether in this way the body, which was made of the ground (1 Cor. 15: 43; Gen. 3: 19), without losing anything, would have by and by become a spiritual body (soma pneumatikon) as the divine power of life, which he could receive in the spirit (which symbolizes itself in the tree of life), would have nourished him,—or whether he would have thrown off the earthy body, as the butterfly does the larva; that is something about which we can only have suppositions, with which, however, we have nothing to do here." . . . .

Page 120. "So we have seen, that immortality is conditioned by the fact, that man, from voluntary choice, makes the end for which he was created his own,—that he unites himself with God, to whom he has access by the Spirit, as the partaker of the second creation, as that being, which was created, to be individual personality. His nature does not make him any more a possessor of immortality, as that of any other created being;—neither body, or soul or spirit are immortal, but it made it possible to him, to get in possession of immortality. He could by free choice, if he retained the connection with God, make God his own, feel the eternal fountain of life within him, become revelation of the personality of God, make the divine Spirit of life his own, and herein have the necessary cause of immortality. But he could on the other side also, without the necessity of becoming a different being from that to which nature had appointed him, cease to bear the possibility of immortality within him, by voluntarily breaking up the connection with God. This self-chosen separation from God must submit him to the law of all created beings, namely: to live himself out, to lose the spirit of life, being the opposite to immortality, which places him on a level with the rest of creation, which has no other connection with God, than only that to be created. So is temptation by sin at the same time temptation to lose the possibility of immortality; death is as a necessary consequence enclosed in sin. Therefore, says the law which prohibits sin,—"the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," (Gen. 2: 17). It knows it, and wants to remind man of it, that the moment, which through sin separates him from God, makes him unfit to accomplish his end, that moment separates him from the life, unfits him for immortality, and delivers him up to death."

A Glance at our World.—No. 7.

Those who are praying, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," are looked down upon with wonder and astonishment by those who are so well satisfied with this present sin-tarnished world that they are unwilling to exchange it for another. They see no necessity for the destruction of this to them beautiful earth, far too good to be committed to the flames, with all the schemes of improvement now going on among its busy inhabitants. We are convinced that those who reason thus are entirely ignorant of the miserable condition this world is placed in. It would seem that no one need be thus blinded who has been long enough amid its false show and glittering vanity to experience its allurements as altogether deceptive.

It is like standing upon some towering mountain and gazing in the valley below. How beautiful looks the village reposing in the summer's sunlight! All appear happy there. But let us pass through the streets of this seemingly quiet village, and what a contrast! Here goes a poor man hobbling along on crutches, with a single leg, doomed to drag out a miserable existence. Here comes another with a large patch covering up an eye—the sight gone forever. And as we pause, the deep tolling of the village church bell reminds us that Death is still busily at work.

But so it is. Men who are afflicted all the way from the cradle to the grave, will still hope for better things in this world. The world appears under false colors to such. Although they meet with trials and troubles, though sickness and death surround them, though disappointment has lurked in every sweet, still they hope to crush the canker worm and sip unalloyed bliss from their cup of happiness in the dim future. They look upon the things of the world as pleasant and desirable, and although their attainments never bring the expected enjoyment, still nothing daunted they press on, having new objects in pursuit, and feasting on new anticipations; and thus life passes as it were in a state of charm. To such it seems passing strange that the poor, despised followers of Christ should sigh for a better country and should continually keep pointing to another world to come, free from care, free from sorrow. They see no curse on the earth, and being determined to find some good in this world, they glide along, at times almost unmindful of the ills incident to life, making even that great enemy to the human family—death—a blessing, calling it "the gate to heaven," "the portal to paradise"!

Yes, go and listen to the popular preaching of the day—and what is the sentiment advanced by them? Why, they are wafted home to heaven; are now singing anthems of triumph on the bright banks of deliverance; when if they would only look candidly at the question of such deep import, must admit death to be a dark and cruel foe, which has invaded earth and rendered it one vast scene of sorrow and misery. It is the ally of Satan, which slays our friends and confines them in hades, there to slumber till the morn of that great rising day. To such as believe that man at death enters at once upon his reward, they see no reason for that prayer, "Thy kingdom come!" unless indeed it can be set up invisibly, without molesting or disturbing them in their pursuits for worldly aggrandizement. They continually keep praying for the Lord to bless the world lying in wickedness, and yet what a dark picture is presented of our world at the present time! Some there are—and have been all the way—who become partially awake to the evils existing in society, and they immediately go to work and strike out a way of reform. We could name multitudes of such, who have toiled and labored, and finally dreamed that the world would be much wiser and better for their having lived in it. But they are gone, and the world hardly knows that such persons, advocating designs which they thought big with the public good, were ever upon the theatre of action. And there are many societies and organizations now in existence whose avowed purpose is to render happier the human family.

Christian communities are not alone in the work. Infidel France has during the last few years produced many pioneers in the work of reform. Of this class was Fourier, who, strange to tell, made many proselytes in this country—in this land of Bibles, where tracts are scattered on every breeze. One reformer will mark out one plan, as the one most productive of good; another will select its opposite, and so on. But the world is made no better. Wicked men and seducers not only remain untouched, but, according to prophecy, they "wax worse and worse."

For all the mighty efforts made by peace societies, never was there a time when every nation was either at war or preparing as now. Look at all the nations of Europe, all preparing for they hardly know what. Is society improved of late years here? There is the same distinction. The rich and poor are still among us. Affluence and poverty still look on one another. Hypocrisy and hatred still rankle in the human breast. The efforts made by christian men and philanthropists,—and good men they undoubtedly are,—seem for a while to bid fair to revolutionize society entirely; but the popular tide soon sets in, and the mass become as before. Men belong to the church who cannot be told from the world in dress or behavior, who will cheat and defraud equally with the man who makes no profession of godliness. No wonder infidels are made, at the present course the popular churches are taking.

A Fast.

On account of the great importance of our annual gathering at Wilbraham, we would propose to those interested in this meeting, that Friday, August 22d, be observed as a day of fasting and special prayer; that our campmeeting this year may be noted for good order, christian harmony, the awakening and conversion of sinners, and the reclaiming of backsliders; in short, that it may be the most profitable meeting we have ever held.—o.

Bills this week.

This week we send bills to those who will be owing $2.00, or more, at the close of the present volume, which ends about the middle of next September. We are sorry to find it necessary to say anything about money matters in these hard times, but it seems to be duty. We should be glad to furnish a free paper to all who would read it; as we aim to publish just such things as every body ought to know: things adapted to the wants of the people in these "perilous times"; things of more real value than the riches and honors of this world. We have received so great benefit from them, we feel anxious to have every body else enjoy them with us. For this reason, we have thus far been able to let the poor, who cannot pay, have the Crisis free. On this list there are now about four hundred; and let them feel assured that we work as cheerfully for them as any class who have the reading of our paper. So long as it is possible, we shall love to comfort their hearts with our weekly visits to their families. We wish them to read the paper with as hearty a relish as they would had they paid for it. If they can get us some new subscribers, they will benefit their neighbors, and do us a favor, that will be thankfully received.

There is another class, who do not wish to have the paper free, but cannot always pay when the volume commences. Many of these have been embarrassed more than usual during the past year, but they have done nobly. We suppose most, to whom we have sent bills, are of this class. Now, dear brethren, do not distress yourselves over the bill. All we ask is, do the best you can. If you cannot pay anything now, do not stop the paper, if you like it, but send us a line, and we will be patient with you, and help bear your burdens, as we shall be anxious to afford you comfort in your trials by our friendly visits from week to week. This is a time when we all need christian influence and sympathy.

If there should be any who do not like our weekly visits, and wish us to call no more, we hope they will not let their papers accumulate at the post-office to be wasted, but inform us at once that our company is not agreeable, paying what is now due, and we will part in love, praying that we may meet in the coming kingdom.

In conclusion, we would say to those who are looking for speedy redemption, hold fast. We are in the last-day perils. Do not look back now. "Remember Lot's wife."—o.

Camp Wilbraham.

We purpose to be at Camp Wilbraham the Saturday previous to the commencement of the campmeeting, and hold a meeting there on the Lord's day, Aug. 24th, at 10 1-2 A. M., and 1 1-2 P. M. Any brethren who wish to put their tents up on Saturday, Aug. 23d, will have them cared for till Monday. We hope to see a good gathering at the camp-ground on Sunday the 24th.—o.

Bro. H. Grew is dead.—We learn by a letter from Bro. L. Reimer, which we did not receive in season to publish this week, that our dear Bro. Henry Grew sleeps in Jesus.—o.

The Rebellion.

The war of the States is assuming gigantic proportions. Its bloody tide is rising like the flood in the days of Noah, and bids fair to sweep everything before it, that is not sheltered in the christian's ark—Christ. In him alone is safety now. Every one who is not trusting wholly in him, instead of an arm of flesh, seems to be floating with the great war current. Said a distinguished minister, "The church must float with the great current, or she will sink;" "she must conform to the spirit of the times, or she will lose her influence." Said the Jews, when they saw that many were believing on Christ, "If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation." In trying to save their nation by a wrong course of conduct, they brought upon themselves the very things they wished to avoid. So it is now. The church and nation, by adopting wrong measures to avoid a foreseen evil, have been left by the Lord to fall into the very thing they dreaded. It will not do for christians to use the world's ... and justice the nation ...

Well Done.

Bro. Bryant, of Northwood Narrows, N. H., sends us nine new subscribers, and says it is "the result of a few hours' canvassing in my neighborhood; and I believe there are a great many places in New Hampshire where the brethren could do at least as much, and thus aid in spreading the truth."

Will not others take hold of this work in earnest? By a little effort, many may be induced to take the paper, and thus get hold of the blessed hope and be saved, who might otherwise be lost. Our time of labor is evidently nearly completed. We shall be glad to be found faithfully at work when our Savior returns. Let us be among those to whom he will say "Well done."

If our readers could peruse the very encouraging letters received from those who are getting hold of the "blessed hope," by means of the Crisis, they would be encouraged to make still greater efforts to extend its circulation. The following extract is a specimen of many:—

"Dear Bro. Grant:—I wish to say that I have received your paper, the Crisis, and that for instruction and edification on Bible truth, especially the doctrinal portion of it, (which to me has been of late of great interest) far excels any other I have seen; and is just what I want to help me to understand Bible truth more perfectly. The New York Independent, though the most popular paper in the Congregational church, to which I belong, has lost all its charms for me."

Come, brethren and sisters, take courage, and let us press the battle with more vigor than ever. Let none be weary in well-doing.—o.

Certificates.

It will be well for those churches which send delegates to the Advent Christian Association, which is to hold its next annual meeting at the Wilbraham campmeeting, Aug. 26th, at 4 o'clock P. M., to give them certificates showing that they were duly appointed. Such certificate will be a matter of convenience to the delegates. It might read as follows:—

This is to certify that the bearer, ——, was duly appointed, Aug. ——, by the church in ——, as a delegate to represent us at the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, to be holden at the Wilbraham campmeeting, Aug. 26, 1862.

Signatures.—o.

The New Book. We have read some of the manuscript of Bro. Hastings' new work,—"The signs of the Times," and think it will be the most stirring one from his pen. It is truly a book for the times. It is now in the printer's hands, and we hope it will be ready for the campmeeting.—o.

War in Earnest.

"The mighty men" are now fully awake. War! war! is the only cry,—the only theme of conversation, in stores, shops, on the boats, in the cars, by the wayside, among farmers, mechanics, traders, old and young, male and female, learned or ignorant, bond or free, rich or poor, ministers and their churches, every thing and every body must help on the war; except a few, who, like the three worthies among Daniel's brethren, will not bow down to the god of war, and imbrue their hands in the blood of their enemies, because the King of kings, who is soon coming to set up his kingdom, has forbidden them to avenge themselves.

In Massachusetts, it is said that about one thousand enlist daily. They hope to raise enough without drafting, the enthusiasm is so great.

In Boston, the business men propose to close up their stores at two o'clock, for the purpose of making greater efforts to enlist men. The Boston Journal of Saturday, Aug. 9th, says:—

"The agreement to close up their places of business at two o'clock each afternoon during next week, in order to allow clerks and employees to aid in the promotion of enlistments, has been signed by the principals of the leading mercantile and manufacturing establishments in the city, and such is the general feeling in favor of the scheme, that there is no doubt that next week work will furnish a series of half holidays to many thousands. We have seen the list so far as it has been signed, and found it to include dry goods dealers, fancy goods dealers, pianoforte manufacturers, hardware dealers, paper warehousemen, India rubber manufacturers, saddlery establishments and warehouses, sewing machine manufacturers, boot and shoe dealers, commission merchants, etc. etc. We are informed that the Mayor has, by request, ordered that the bells be rung one hour every day next week, from two to three o'clock, commencing on Monday, and that other measures are in progress to help along the enthusiasm of the people in the promotion of enlistments."

A very enthusiastic war meeting was held in Washington, D. C., Aug. 6th. Several stirring resolutions were read, among them the following:—

"Resolved, That we, residents of the District of Columbia, deliberately and solemnly declare that rather than witness its [the Union's] overthrow, we would prosecute the present war until the towns and cities should be reduced to ashes, (applause) our fields should be desolated, and we and all that are dear to us should have perished with our possessions. Let the Union be preserved or the country made a desert. (Applause.)

Resolved, That convinced as we are that the leaders in the rebellion will never sincerely return to their allegiance to the Union, or quietly submit to its laws, we are of opinion that they should be regarded and treated as irreclaimable traitors, who are to be stripped of their possessions, of whatever character, and either deprived of life, or expelled from the country. (Wild applause and cries of 'good.')

Resolved, That the national capital is imperatively in danger; that those places where treason should be instantly denounced and punished—

At this point the applause from the thousands of voices was deafening, and again three cheers were enthusiastically given, with exclamations, 'Read that again!' 'good!' 'read it again!'"

"Rot in Jail."

A good brother in the ministry was in our office a few days since, and we asked him what he should do if he was drafted? He replied, "I shall obey the orders of my Captain." We remarked, "Then you can't fight." Said he, "I will rot in jail first."

We do not see why such men ought not to be exempt from fighting as well as Quakers and Shakers. He, and ten thousands of others of the same faith, are entirely opposed to slavery, and have no more sympathy with the rebellion than the most noted Union man; but they conscientiously believe, with ourself, that the New Testament, which is our guide in all practical duties, will not allow us to kill our fellow beings. We in candor ask if our consciences and religious principles should not be regarded in a free country, as well as Quakers, Shakers and others?—o.

Pauline Theology.—The Christian Publication Society has just issued a new edition of this excellent work, from the pen of H. L. Hastings, without covers, which will be sold for 8 cts. single, postage one cent. 12 copies for $1.00, postage paid. We think this is the best work, of its size, on the subject of future punishment. Now is the time to scatter it. It will soon be too late to do anything.—o.

Bibles.—We have just received a new lot of nice English Bibles. See book list for prices and varieties.—o.

☞ Bro. S. W. Bishop wishes us to say that his appointment at Warner is withdrawn.—o.

Freedom of Speech.

Although we live in a free country, it will appear from the following order, that there are some things that may not be said:—o.

"Washington, Aug. 8. Order authorizing the arrest of persons discouraging enlistments:

War Department,
Washington City, D. C., Aug. 8, '62.

Ordered 1st, That all United States Marshals and Superintendents, or Chiefs of Police of any town, city or district, be and they are hereby authorized and directed to arrest and imprison any person or persons who may be engaged by act, speech or writing in discouraging volunteer enlistments, or in any way giving aid and comfort to the enemy, or in any other disloyal practice against the United States.

2. That immediate report be made to Major L. C. Turner, Judge Advocate, in order that such persons may be tried before a military commission.

3. The expense of such arrest and imprisonment will be certified to the chief clerk of the War Department for settlement and payment.

(Signed) Edwin M. Stanton,
Secretary of War.

Rome or Death.

It will appear from the following, received by the last steamer, that Garibaldi and the Italians are waking up also, as well as the people on this continent. The writer says:—o.

"Accounts of Garibaldi's visit to Magalla report extraordinary scenes of patriotic excitement. Garibaldi in the course of a speech several times used the phrase, 'Rome or Death!' to which the people responded each time 'Yes! Rome or Death!' He spoke in violent terms of Napoleon, saying: 'We have given him Nice and Savoy, and he wishes for something else. Yes, I know he has one Prince ready for Rome and another for Naples.'

At a banquet at Palermo in honor of the Marquis Pollaracini, Garibaldi proposed a toast, concluding with the words: 'Rome or death; but at Rome with Victor Emanuel at our heads.'"

Non-appearance of Drafted Soldiers.—The following is a part of the law relative to men who are drafted:—o.

"Every soldier ordered out, or who volunteers, or is detached, or drafted, who does not appear at the time and place designated by the Mayor and Alderman, or selectmen, or who has not some able-bodied, and proper substitute, at such time, and place, or does not pay to such Mayor and Alderman, or Selectmen, for the use of the Commonwealth, the sum of seventy-five dollars, within twenty-four hours from such time, shall be taken to be a soldier absent without leave, and dealt with accordingly."

Shaker's Certificate.

The following is the form of the Shakers' certificate, used to excuse them from military duty:—

"We the subscribers, Elders (or overseers as the case may be) of the meetings of the Society of ——, do hereby certify that —— frequently and usually attends with said society for public worship, is a regular member thereof, and we believe he is conscientiously scrupulous of bearing arms."

Elders or Overseers.

Jeff. Davis Confirmed.—Mrs. Helen M. Keary, a neice of Jeff. Davis, writing under date of May 9th, says:—

"Uncle Jeff. was confirmed last Tuesday in St. Paul's Church, by Bishop Johns. He was baptized at home in the morning before church."

For the Crisis.

A Petition.

"We, the undersigned, Christians looking for the coming of the Lord, have no sympathy with secessionism, and are willing to sustain the government in every lawful way, which does not conflict with the law of Christ; but as it is a matter of conscience with us that the New Testament is strictly against Christians using carnal weapons, and as we should die for those principles rather than renounce them, and as this country has granted the sacred privilege to all to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, we ask at your hands that favor may be shown us in this case."

The above petition has been sent for insertion in the Crisis, in order that all who wish may send us their names at once, neatly and plainly written, for the purpose of forwarding them to the President of the United States, if need be; requesting him to allow us the same privileges as are granted to others, who are excused from bearing arms because they believe it is a violation of the principles of christianity. Where it is practicable, it would be well to have the preachers' and elders' names head the list, which should be written on paper of full width, that all may be pasted together.

We can most heartily sign the foregoing petition. A proper preamble will be prefixed, before it is sent to the President. Our brethren should see that none sign this petition but those who do it solely on christian principles.—o

Inquiry.—It is inquired if a church organization is necessary in order to send delegates to the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, to be holden at Wilbraham Aug. 26th?

It was decided by the conference that drafted the constitution of the A. C. A., that a church is "A society of believers in Jesus Christ"; hence organization does not constitute a church.—o.

Sound Words.

"Hold fast the form of sound words."—2 Tim. 1. 13.

Or, waving these points, and allowing that the guilt of sin is not such as to require so great a sacrifice as that of our Lord Jesus Christ to satisfy the demands of the law, then why the penalty of eternal condemnation and death to be inflicted upon the finally impenitent?

Wave these three doctrines—the fall of man, the atonement, and future punishment—and christianity has no existence. Accept them, our argument is complete, and the relative importance of Scripture doctrines is fairly illustrated.

Or again; let us leave out—as the Israelite does—the doctrine of Christ's first advent, and look only for that glorious coming when he shall "sit upon the throne of his father David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice from henceforth, even for ever;" when "he shall be king over all the earth," and the whole earth filled with his glory. The consequence would be, we should injure not only the sublimest fact in the Christian system, but the grandest principles of the moral government of God as already indicated. How, in such a case, God could justly forgive and save a sinful being who was justly condemned to eternal death, would be an inexplicable mystery. Whereas now it is evident upon what grounds God can be "just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Should the query arise, Why, then, cannot this fact be made apparent to the Israelite? we answer, to some it can; but of many it may be said, in the language of St. Paul, "Moses put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that [i. e. the law] which is abolished." "The veil is upon their hearts."

Or once more; should we strike out the doctrine of the Second Advent of our Lord with its cognate doctrines, we are not only left in the most painful ignorance, but are subject to the most subtle and cruel delusions of the devil. The necromancy of our Witch of Endor, or the etherial resurrection—which remains to be shown by sound logic is any resurrection at all—and the seven fancied spheres of a learned Baron, are as acceptable as the most wholesome teachings of inspiration. Or, if such delusions do not overtake and captivate us, then we are left to ignorantly conjecture where, how, and when, the precious faith we entertain in the promises of God are to be ultimately consummated; and perhaps do most sincerely talk and sing of regions "Beyond the bounds of time and space."

Whereas, while believing in angel and spirit, it by no means follows we need become spiritualizers. The Scriptures are explicit upon all these points, assuring us that God hath appointed "a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." "All that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." It is when the seventh trumpet sounds God gives reward to his servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear his name, small and great. See Rev. 11. "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." Even the long catalogue of worthies of whom St. Paul speaks so largely in the 11th chapter of his Epistle to the Hebrews, he assures us "received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." So also the same apostle says in his 1st Epistle to the Thessalonians:—"I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep: for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Again, the same apostle says in his Epistle to Titus,—"The grace of God that bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lust, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Thus demonstrating the immense practical importance of the Second Advent and Resurrection. Indeed, St. Paul has said, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised, and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." So also the Church has unceasingly affirmed—"He shall come again with glory to judge both the quick and the dead; whose kingdom shall have no end." "And I look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come."

The same might be further illustrated by the doctrines of God's sovereignty and man's free agency; or by our doctrines of faith and good works. But what we have said will suffice to illustrate what may be understood by sound doctrine—doctrine at once consistent in itself and in its relation to every other doctrine of the Christian system.—m.

Tract Fund.

By some mishap, Bro. Hastings lost the first page of manuscript, calculated to introduce the following communication, which is based on Bro. I. C. Wellcome's article, in the Crisis of June 4th, headed, "Something to do yet." Bro. W. urges those who are looking for the immediate coming of Christ, to do more in the tract enterprise, and thinks a "fund of $5,000 or $10,000 may be raised for the free distribution of tracts.

Bro. Hastings agrees with Bro. Wellcome's proposition, and then speaks of the Salem Conference in 1860, where the "Christian Publication Society" was organized to disseminate truth, by scattering tracts and other publications; but thinks they did not perfect the system during that meeting. He then says:—o.

Whether it was through an oversight of those appointed to draft the constitution, at Salem, or whether it was because the members of the meeting were so anxious to get to Boston and see the Prince of Wales, I cannot tell; but from some cause there was no provision made in that constitution for any permanent membership of the society, on any pecuniary basis.

The "Advent Christian Association" is composed of preachers co-operating in the work to be done, and also of delegates from co-operating churches.

The "Christian Publication Society" is composed of a board of officers chosen by the "Advent Christian Association," and is under the control of that Association and its board of managers.

Now this is all very well, as far as it goes. But there have been some inconveniences. The time has been when the votes of four men, officers of the C. P. S., have put out one editor, and put in another, and radically changed the policy of the World's Crisis; with what results I need not stop to relate. Probably a like circumstance may not again occur.

Further: There are some persons who are much more interested in using the World's Crisis as a racing ground for their pet hobbies, or for the purpose of heaping abusive personalities upon those who differ with them, than they are in tract work, mission work, or any other kind of work that promises good to the readers of the paper. It is stated this week that while in Boston only about four hundred men have been enlisted as recruits for the army, there have been some two or three hundred applications at the State House by men who are willing to go out and command them. The Massachusetts Volunteer service is not by any means the only service where some men feel that, "if they cannot be captain, they wont train."

I speak this with perfect freedom, for these reasons: First. I never wished to be President of the Christian Publication Society. Second. I resigned my office before the first year was out. Third. I publicly requested the Association not to re-elect me. Fourth. I have always thought it improper that I, a publishing society myself, with more work than I can do, should be president of another society operating in the same field. Finally. While shrinking from no duty to God or man, I can say before the Lord, that I have no desire for any office which either the A. C. Association or the C. P. Society can give. I have work enough of my own to do, and can do it to suit myself, exposed only to the barpoonings of those who may hate the man for the sake of the truth he declares, without being everybody's servant in some other capacity.

DIFFICULTIES.

The Publication Society has the following difficulties to contend with. First: The Crisis being controlled by a meeting held in New England, its actual subscribers cannot more than half of them be represented at that meeting. For instance, at the last meeting of the "A. C. A.," resolutions and letters were read from two conferences, one composed of some twenty-five preachers, and another composed of half that number, expressing their views and desires regarding the policy of the paper. Now these men, many of them, have been for eight or ten years the supporters of the Crisis, who have helped to make it what it is, and who have introduced and commended it among their friends, who are sending money for it, and raising subscriptions for it, when they are preaching for nothing and finding themselves, to allow persons to send their dollars to pay for the Crisis;—these men, and scores of others like them, can have no vote at all in the matter; and a single boy, who is just beginning to preach, or who is chosen as a delegate, who has done nothing to make the paper what it is, who does nothing for it financially, and who will fight it if it does not change its policy and adopt his pet notions, or hobbies,—such a person, living near the place of meeting, though his influence may go against the paper all the year, can at the Association outvote two whole conferences; yes, a hundred preachers, who are away in the far off harvest field, hearing the burden and heat of the day; and if they should turn out one year to fix things straight, he could unfix them the year after.

This is a difficulty I see not how to avoid at present. Still, if those living near these meetings will pursue a safe, kind, prudent course, and not be led about by divers and strange teachings, the brethren abroad will not be difficult to please. But if a dozen preachers in conference can change the course and order of the Crisis, then a hundred ministers abroad can stop a thousand or two of its subscribers, dry up its remittances, and cause a cry of "hard times" to arise quite suddenly. This is their protection; but it pre-supposes instability on the part of the paper. The World's Crisis, I think, never was so prosperous before as to-day. Any improvements that can be made in it, I shall hail with gladness. Any deteriorations I should deplore. There is much room for it to be made either better or worse.

TRACT ISSUES.

It is not however of the Crisis that I propose now to speak particularly. That is an important means of good, still it is not to my mind the main thing in spreading the truth of God in the regions beyond. I regard the issue of tracts as the especial work which the "Publication Society" ought to do. I have no fellowship with those opinions which would make the Publication Society a mere Crisis Society, and which would lead to a constant tinkering of the Crisis to meet the wants of a dozen disaffected brethren, and thereby spoil it for a hundred, where they improve it for one; or which would provoke controversy by devoting its columns largely to the advocacy of doctrines which nine tenths of its supporters abhor; and then when its contributors send in nine articles in opposition to one in favor of these doctrines, have the whole suppressed to avoid a controversy which has been thus needlessly provoked.

I hold that we can do a work for the truth by tract circulation which can be done in no other way. I judge that there are, at least, one hundred preachers among us, who are willing to act as colporteurs without charge; but they are not able to buy tracts and give them away besides. Now shall we put into the hands of each of these brethren a stock of good, earnest, well written tracts, and say to them, Take these and "sow beside all waters"? I am in favor of doing it. I have been laboring for this purpose for some ten years past. But to do this, we need money. I believe we can have it, and can have all we need. There are brethren whose hearts are in this work. There are brethren that have houses, lands, bonds and money, which might be devoted to this work. Are any of them ready for it? I believe they are. I believe men can be found who will give hundreds and thousands, and that without being teased and urged, or frightened by some "time" cry, when they see the way opened to do the work effectually.

But first there must be some security regarding the administration of the Society. The men that have earned money do not want it squandered,—nor do they want it expended as it often is in societies for salaries of officers, who love the cause tremendously just as long as they can rule the whole concern and draw the biggest pay; and who are silent as death when not giving the word of command. Nor do they wish to pour out their money to have it wasted in quarrels, personal altercations, new hobbies, and side issues, and all the inventions which man has sought out since God first made him upright.

In a word, when the present year of the Christian Publication Society began, there was not a dollar on hand in the treasury, that I know of, which was specially designed to issue tracts by the Society. Nor had any calls been issued, nor any measures been taken to raise funds for the purpose. Now during half a year of war, hard times, etc., over $500 have been raised, and more is being offered, and in a few weeks, if the Lord will, the Society will have on hand perhaps fifty or sixty thousand tracts or pamphlets, besides money in the treasury to issue more; and this is but a beginning, when various difficulties are to be overcome and delays encountered, which need not again occur. But now, as we approach the close of the year, and the meeting of the Association, what guaranty have we that the moneys in the treasury will not be used, next year, for the purpose of issuing such beautiful specimens of polite literature as are indulged in by the deniers of the resurrection of the ungodly; or the holders of some other equally important and truthful doctrine? I speak of this merely as illustrative of the uncertainty attending the matter. It all depends upon the vote at the next meeting of the Association, and upon the men selected to conduct the affairs of the Society. Now the men who would give plenty of money to spread truth, will give nothing for such a purpose as that. But when money is raised, there are always enough who are ready to direct as to its use; even though they have not contributed one cent toward it.

To illustrate: There is a single church, neither large nor wealthy, and not even having religion enough to brag about in the newspapers, the members of which stand pledged for $100 of the $500 already raised for the tract fund. I presume they could double their subscriptions before long and yet not distress themselves; but, suppose they do so; then they send a delegate or two to the Association, and they vote. Beside them sit perhaps two or three delegates from another church, the members of which have not raised a cent for tract distribution; and those two or three men can vote them down every time; and so the church that raised no money could decide what should be done with the money which others collected and paid; while they themselves could have no controlling voice in the matter. I do not say that this ever would occur, but it might. Again one man talks, writes, and labors to get up tracts, and begs money to print them; he carries them about, scatters them, etc. Another man preaches, takes his pay, and does n't care a fig for tracts; will neither make them, buy them, sell them, or give them away. What guaranty have we that the Tract enterprise, begun this year, will not fall next year into the hands of such nursing fathers and mothers, who would smother and choke it to death? I do not apprehend such a thing, but I suggest that it is possible. Now then for

THE REMEDY.

To have any enterprise go forward, it should be guided by men who are interested in it, and who will not leave it in the hour of adversity, when going up hill; and merely get ready to ride when it is going down, and they can't do anything else that will pay better. I see no way to avoid the evils mentioned, except by the amendment of the constitution and the formation of a system of life membership at the next annual meeting. I hereby suggest it for consideration.

Let those contributing $1, or $2, become life members of the C. P. Society for a year. Let those contributing $25, become life members. Let those contributing $100, become life directors; and then let every life member and director have the privilege of voting, or of sending in his vote by proxy, or by letter, at the proper times. "But this will be making the money rule, and the man with the most money will have the most power." Not quite. The men with the most money probably would not give a cent, and so would have no power. Those would then guide the matter who had some interest in it, and who felt for "the cause"—in their pockets! Then we could say, "Brethren, pour in your offerings. You can control their disposal at any time you please. It is your Society—sustain it, and control it." Till some such arrangement can be made, we must raise what we can for present needs, use it as we go, and do all the good we can. There is no present danger of a large surplus this year, so none need fear to send in a dollar or two, or five, or ten. We will try, in God's fear, to apply it for the good of all concerned, while we strive to follow the things that make for peace, and the things whereby we may edify one another.

But for myself, until an arrangement can be made which promises stability in the ancient paths, I feel it duty to continue my publishing as before. So, while aiding the C. P. S. all I can consistently, I shall still issue tracts, books and pamphlets, as the Lord will, at prices lower than ever, and sell or give them away as he may open a way and provide the means. May God help us to do all that we can.

Your brother, H. L. Hastings.

Michigan Campmeeting.

BRETHREN OF MICHIGAN:—To you, dear brethren and sisters, and all who love the cause of the speedy coming of our Lord and Master, and kindred truths, I wish to say a few words relative to our campmeeting. This is a new enterprise among us, as a people, in this State; the one held last season in Holly being the first meeting of the kind, I believe, held among our people in Michigan; and we think it was a blessing to the cause of God, especially in this portion of the State. The meeting last season moved off so well and harmoniously, shedding a blessing on the cause we all love so ardently, has induced the church to try the experiment again; and we pray, and beseech continually the great Head of the church, for a greater blessing still than we received at our gathering last season. We shall not be disappointed if we all come praying, and trusting in the Lord. If we come in the right spirit,—the spirit of meekness, charity, brotherly love,—the meeting will not be a failure, nor a barren one to our own souls, and the precious cause of our dear Savior.

Some may perhaps be opposed to camp meetings, because so much evil is committed sometimes at those meetings. Then we need to pray, and labor the more earnestly that such things may be avoided. Will not God answer prayer, my dear timorous brother? Then pray to God mightily for success, and that designing men may be kept at bay and be quiet. Did not God encamp round about ancient Israel, and preserve them from molestation? and will he not us, if we trust in him? But we do not anticipate any disturbance at all; because we intend to be so kind, obliging, and loving to all, that we shall receive the same treatment in return. We intend the meeting shall be conducted on the principle of the power of love and kindness. And we hope to be able to accommodate all who come to this meeting in the name of the Lord.

Come, then, dear brethren and sisters, to this feast, and enjoy it with us. Yes, come. Leave your farm, work shop, or whatever occupation you are engaged in, and let us see your faces in Grand Blanc, at this gathering of God's saints, in Michigan. It may be the last one we shall enjoy ere the great storm of vengeance falls on a guilty world, and the reaping angels come to "Shout the harvest home."

Let us see to it that we our journey pursue,

"And never stand still Till the Master appear."

Come to Campmeeting.

Come, for it is our annual gathering. Come, for it is a time we need help from each other. Come and get revived, and it will help you much in these hard times. Come, for it will do you good to lay aside cares and go out to the mountain, away from the noise and strife, and worship God. Come, ye gray-headed, and see the friends of our Lord, and consult each other in these times of peril, for we need the consultation of the aged and wise now if ever. Come, ye that are strong, and show your willingness to help the lame, feeble, and weak. Come, ye youth, and all that want to serve God. Come and sing Zion's songs. Come and wrestle with Jacob's God for church and nation. Come to do good and get good. Come by all means. Come early, for there is much to do, and but little time in which to do it. Come so as to be there at the business meetings. There are officers to be chosen to conduct our paper the coming year; and to have the body satisfied—each member's right respected, let us come together and choose our editorial board, if necessary, of five or more, and breathe into it new life, giving it more character, combining all the wisdom possible to make it free and yet respectful and truthful, and just such a paper as these times demand and the church needs.

A Correction.

In one of the Hartford papers it was stated that Dr. Joseph Turner committed suicide. The editor of that paper, however, corrected his statement the next day, on the ground that he had no evidence of its truth. The first statement has been copied into other papers, but not by them corrected. Dr. Turner went home from his office on Saturday, sick. I saw him on Saturday night, again on Sunday, and was with him all of Sunday night, and several times on Monday, on which day he died, at eight P. M. I did not then have the thought that he had taken poison, neither do I now think that he took anything whatever with the intention of shortening his life. He died of inflammation of the bowels, which terminated in mortification.

He was sensible so long as he could speak, which was up to a very short time before he died. He did not think that he should live, and gave some directions about his funeral. He talked of the past with right views and spirit; and expressed a strong purpose of good in the future, should he be permitted to recover.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Middletown, Vt., July 22d, from accident, NORMAN, only son of Bro. Norman Harris, of Poultney, Vt., aged thirteen years.

Little Norman was a bright and active boy, fond of solitary rambles amid wild and romantic scenery. He was living with some friends in M., several miles distant from home. Going to the field one day to drive up the oxen, his errand nearly done, he stepped aside into a wood, evidently for the purpose of looking down a steep precipice, when losing his foothold, he fell a distance of thirty feet upon the rocks. Though severely injured, he walked to the house, a short distance off, saying, "I have fallen and killed myself." He lingered a few hours and died. This sudden calamity has made a deep wound in the family of our dear Brother. A discourse upon the occasion was preached by the writer, in Poultney, Sunday, July 27th, from 1 Sam. 20: 3,—"There is but a step between me and death."

H. F. C.

Died, in Union, Ct., Aug. 24, Bro. NATHAN MORSE, aged nearly eighty-two years.

Bro. Morse was for many years a member of the Baptist church, but in the latter part of his life he entertained the views held by the Advent people.

His age, and long residence in the town, and respect in the community as a believer and a man, brought together a large congregation to his funeral, at which time a discourse was given to meet the occasion.

J. S. WHITE.

Died, very suddenly, in Cheshire, Ct., July 17th, JOSEPHINE, eldest daughter of J. C and M. M Blackman, and grand daughter of Eld. I. Morgan, aged four years and eight months.

She was at play with her brother and another little playmate, near the railroad, and as the cars advanced near them, she took her hand from that of the other little girl, and left the children and ran, as if seized by an irresistible impulse, right into the jaws of death; for no sooner did she reach the track than the cars struck her in the head, inflicting a fatal wound, and fracturing the skull. She breathed only a few moments after being struck. As I tied on her little bonnet after dinner, how little did I think my dear child would be brought in to me a senseless lump of clay, and that the next look I took of that little form, it would be enveloped in the arms of death. Thus, how forcibly were we reminded, "In the midst of life we are in death."

The only consolation we can derive from this sudden, painful bereavement is, we know that her Redeemer liveth, and he will raise her up at the last day, and in her flesh she shall see God; and that her parents and friends, if faithful, will clasp the immortal hand of that loved child on the other river shore, where parting shall never be known.

Bro. Wm. Fenn comforted our aching hearts upon the solemn occasion, from these words,—"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."

"Dearest daughter, thou hast left us,
And thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled;
Still in heaven we hope to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

MARTHA M. BLACKMAN.

Died, at Ship Island, Feb. 13th, 1862, JAMES H., son of Bro. Almon and Sr. Mary J. Andrews, aged twenty-two years.

He left his home in Franklin, Me., to defend his country, but died before coming into battle. This affliction suddenly comes to sadden the hearts of parents in all forms, to teach us the uncertainty of life, and the need of God's grace to help us to endure our troubles, and give us hope of eternal life in the world to come. The funeral was attended by the writer.

E. M. HAGGETT.

Died, in Byron, May 4th, 1862, MIRIAM, youngest daughter of Bro. Richard and Sr. Miriam Taylor, aged eleven years.

Her mind was developed beyond her years. She was very conscientious, and much prized, not only by the family who feel deeply afflicted, but also by all her acquaintances. May God's grace be manifest to sustain them in this time of trial. The funeral was attended by the writer.

"Our home is drear at break of day,
And drear at set of sun;
For lo! the grave enwraps the clay
Of our departed one.
And vainly do our spirits sigh,
With yearnings deep and wild,
To clasp once more within our arms
Our dear, our darling child.

Cold death has snatched our lovely flower;
But lo! the day draws near
When even death shall lose his power,
And our sweet child appear,
All glorious with immortal life,
In Eden's garden fair;
O, kindred dear, shall we all meet
Our dearly loved one there?"

E. M. HAGGETT.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamship Arabia brings advices from Liverpool to the 26th ult. Queenstown 27th. The news is unimportant.

Lord Palmerston, in his recent speech in the English House of Commons upon the motion for mediation, thus alluded to the magnitude of the war.

"There is no instance in the history of the world, I think, of a contest such as that which is now going on in America—a contest of such magnitude between different sections of the same people. The thirty years' war in Germany was a joke to it in point of magnitude. It was only the other day I received a map drawn by the Quartermaster-General of the Federal army, in which the position of 7000, Federal troops was marked, and now we learn that 300,000 more are to be called into the field. Here are 1,000,000 of men engaged in active hostilities on the one, and perhaps there are not very much less on the other side."

FIVE DAYS LATER.

By the Steamship Jura, we have news from Liverpool to the 31st ult., Queenstown Aug. 1.

The Bishop of Oxford has recommended prayers in his diocese for peace in America.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times believes that the American question again occupies the most serious attention of Napoleon, and that a council of Ministers has been held upon it.

The correspondent says he would not be surprised if the matter were laid before the English government in a still more pressing manner, with a view to a speedy solution. He urges that the movement must be speedy to be effective, in view of the possible re-election of the present Congress. He says: "I do not pretend to say whether the movement will be followed by any immediate effect, whether France will take the lead with the expectation that England cannot do otherwise than follow, or whether both will not act at the same time. I only know that France is convinced that the present moment is more opportune for united action."

FRANCE.

It is reported that on the 15th of August, the Napolitan fete day, the Emperor intends to issue a manifesto, in which he will allude to the great questions of the day.

It is asserted that the French government has addressed a circular to the European Powers who have recognized Italy, urging the necessity of a European Congress to settle the Roman question.

TWO DAYS LATER.

The Steamship Scotia brings advices from Liverpool to Aug. 24, Queenstown Aug 3d. The Scotia has 200 passengers, among them Archbishop Hughes.

The Independence Belge states that France, Russia and England are negotiating. The two first Powers made a proposition to England, but received no final reply.

Another rumor is that England had sent a special envoy to Washington to urge President Lincoln to take the initiative towards peace, if he wished to avoid offers of mediation.

A Paris correspondent asserts that the Emperor of Russia has consented to pioneer the way to intervention by making a personal appeal to President Lincoln to negotiate a compromise between the North and South.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, Aug 6. The army of the Potomac has again assumed the offensive. The reconnoissance made yesterday under Gen. Hooker to Malvern Hill, White Oak Swamp bridge, and in the direction of Newmarket and Richmond was in every respect a complete success. The troops left the camp about dark, night before last, arriving at Malvern Hill at 4 o'clock yesterday morning, a distance of 10 miles. Here they encountered two regiments of infantry and a battery posted behind earthworks. Fire was immediately opened upon them by Capt. Benson's Battery and a section of Capt. Robinson's. The infantry was not engaged. The firing lasted about three hours, when the rebels ingloriously fled by the river road toward Richmond, hotly pursued by our troops, who succeeded in taking one hundred of them prisoners. The loss on our side at this point was three killed and eleven wounded.

Col. Averill, with 300 cavalry, took the Quaker road to White Oak Swamp bridge. There they found the 10th Virginia cavalry drawn up to receive them. A charge was immediately ordered, which broke the rebel lines, when they fled. Col. Averill followed them to within a short distance of Newmarket, where, meeting two brigades of rebels, he fell back, bringing over thirty prisoners taken on the way. Newmarket is ten miles from Richmond.

Cairo, Ill., Aug 7. A skirmish took place yesterday near Point Pleasant, Mo., between the citizens and State troops, in which it is reported that several were killed on both sides. It seems that the citizens bound themselves together to resist the enrollment act. Troops were sent from New Madrid to enforce the law, and hence the collision.

New York, Aug. 3. The World's special Washington dispatch says A civilian captured at Front Royal reached this city yesterday. He has been about Richmond for two or three weeks, and declares that Richmond has not been evacuated, nor are there any signs of pestilence. The rebel army lies east of the city, and he is confident its effective numbers have been greatly exaggerated. Stonewall Jackson, he says, is at Gordonsville with 15,000 or 20,000 men.

EXEMPTION FROM DRAFT. Persons desirous of being exempted from draft will be interested in the following statement of the Albany Journal relative to physicians' certificates

"We are requested by the Surgeon General to state 'that doctors' certificates of disability will be of no earthly avail except for mere State service. Under the order from the War Department everybody, within certain ages—without reference to his physical condition—will be subject to draft. If after they have been drafted they are found to be disabled they will be exempted. People, therefore, who run to their physicians to get certificates of physical unfitness to 'shoulder arms' waste their time and breath in vain.'"

Washington, Aug. 8. Numerous applications having been made to the War Department by railroad companies to exempt their employes from military duty, it has been decided that none but locomotive engineers in actual employment when the draft is made can be exempted. The exception of telegraph operators is upon the ground that they are practicing an art necessary to military operations, and which being known to comparatively few persons, their place cannot be supplied.

There were a large number of applicants at the State Department to-day for passports, but they were refused. Notice is officially given by Secretary Seward that until the requisitions of the War Department on the several States for quotas of their militia shall have been complied with, no passports will be issued for any male citizen of the United States liable to be drafted.

Headquarters, 6 miles beyond Culpepper, Va., Aug. 10. A battle was fought yesterday between Gen. Banks and Stonewall Jackson.

The losses are very heavy on both sides, not less than 2000 or 3000 killed, wounded and missing on each side.

Some prisoners were taken by both Jackson and Ewell, who were both present in the battle. Reinforcements under Gen. A. P. Hill, to the amount of 18,000 men, reached the rebels last night about the same time ours arrived.

Skirmishing in force is going on this morning, but the troops on both sides are so much exhausted by fatigue and intense heat no serious encounter is expected to-day.

St. Louis, Aug. 10. Col. McMill with 1000 men whipped Porter's forces, 2500 strong, at Kirksville on the 7th, and again near Stockton yesterday. Col. Merrill reports Porter's forces demoralized and broken up.

Richmond, Aug. 8. The Confederate ram Arkansas, has been destroyed. She left Vicksburg on Monday to co-operate in the attack on Baton Rouge. After passing Bayou Sara her machinery became disabled, and whilst attempting to adjust it, several gunboats attacked her. After a gallant resistance she was abandoned and blown up.

Washington, Aug. 11. A dispatch from Gen. Pope says the fighting on the Rapidan has not been renewed since Saturday. His forces occupy the battle field, and his headquarters are at Culpepper. The rebels are in force two miles beyond.

The battle was brought on by the enemy endeavoring to prevent a concentration of our forces preparatory to an attack on Gordonsville.

The enemy this morning sent in a flag of truce asking permission to bury their dead. This shows that with all their superiority of numbers they were too badly cut up to maintain their position.

New York, Aug. 11. It is understood that in the orders for drafting the nine months' men there is no authority to accept volunteers, but that the provisions of the draft must be carried out.

Important Order.

Washington, Aug. 8. The following order has just been issued by the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, D. C., Aug, 8.

An order to prevent the evasion of military duty and for the suppression of disloyal practices:

First. By direction of the President of the United States, it is hereby ordered that until further orders no citizen liable to be drafted into the militia shall be allowed to go to a foreign country; and all Marshals, Deputy Marshals and Military officers of the United States are directed, and all police authorities, especially at the ports of the United States on the seaboard and on the frontier, are requested to see that this order is faithfully carried into effect and they are hereby authorized and directed to arrest and detain any person or persons about to depart from the United States in violation of this order, and to report to Major L. C. Turner, Judge Advocate at Washington City, for further instructions respecting the person or persons so arrested and detained.

Second. Any person liable to draft, who shall absent himself from his country, or State, before such draft is made, will be arrested by any Provost Marshal or other United States or State officer, wherever he may be found within the jurisdiction of the United States, and conveyed to the nearest military post or depot and placed on military duty for the term of the draft, and the expenses of his own arrest and conveyance to such post or depot, and also the sum of $5 as a reward to the officer who shall make such arrest, shall be deducted from his pay.

Third. The writ of habeas corpus is hereby suspended in respect to all persons arrested for disloyal practices.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

GENERAL CAMPMEETING AT Wilbraham, Mass.

Providence permitting, a GENERAL campmeeting will commence at Wilbraham, on the old ground upon the hill, Monday, August 25th, and continue one week.

Ample accommodations will be provided for board and horse keeping. Board at 50 cents per day. Single meal,—breakfast or supper,—20 cents, dinner 25 cents. The boarding department this year is under the charge of the Committee, and any profits accruing from the same, will go to the support of the meeting. The fare is reduced to half price on the Western R. R., which will be $2.50 from Boston, for both ways. From Worcester $1 30. Fare is also reduced one half on the Vt., Mass. and Conn. River R R, from Brattleboro, South Vernon, and intermediate stations. Campmeeting tickets should be called for at the above stations, which will be good for both ways.

Arrangements have been made with the Eastern R. R. Co., by which those taking the cars from Portsmouth and intermediate places for Boston, paying full fares at the ticket offices, can have FREE RETURN PASSES by application to Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass., when they purchase their Western tickets for the camp ground. Those coming from Albany will pay full fare to the camp ground, and receive free return passes from the Campmeeting Committee. Those coming from North Adams, Pittsfild, and intermediate places, also from Worcester, and intermediate stations, will call for campmeeting tickets at the ticket office.

N. B. All who wish to take the cars from Boston for the campmeeting, should remember that they can obtain their tickets only of Geo T. Adams, 167 Hanover street, where they may be obtained any day during the meeting. Cars which stop at the camp ground, leave the Boston and Worcester depot in Boston at 7.15 o'clock, A. M., and at 1-30 P. M.

The cars leave Springfield for the camp ground at 7 15 and 10 1-2 A. M., and 5 P. M.

F. H. BERICK, MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS, } Committee of Arrangements.

The camp ground at Wilbraham is pleasantly located in a neighborhood noted for sustaining good order, and for acts of kindness towards those who assemble there from year to year to worship the God of our fathers. We hope to see a goodly number of the Lord's dear children, and that much good will be accomplished. Those who were present last year will remember that the great object of the meeting was for the salvation of sinners and the comfort of saints, and that the effort was greatly blessed. We hope that our brethren and sisters will come again this year, strong in the Lord, and bring their unconverted children and neighbors, for the purpose of persuading them to be christians.

All who believe in Christ as our Savior, and are willing to labor for the salvation of sinners, are invited to take part in the meetings. We would earnestly request all to make this meeting a subject of special prayer, that many wanderers may be reclaimed, the saints greatly strengthened, and the name of the Lord magnified among the people.

Great Campmeeting in Maine.

On account of the lateness of the season, the Committee have deemed it best to change the time of our campmeeting at Corinna, Me, from the first to the second week in September, giving them one week longer to complete their harvest labors.

We would say to the brethren, one and all, rally again to the standard of truth, and enjoy the privilege of attending one more meeting, if the Lord will, before he shall return. We are happy to say we have obtained the best ground this year for our meeting that we ever have had, and the conveniences outside are far better than formerly. The grounds are situated in the west part of the town, on Mr. Weston Nutter's place, being two miles from Moor's Mills, so called, and six miles from Newport, a point on the Penobscot and Kennebec R. R., where brethren coming from the west by railroad, or to Bangor by boat, will stop. Those brethren who would like conveyance from Newport to the camp ground, will be accommodated if they will inform either of the Committee what time to meet them there.

Conveniences for the Lord's poor will be ample, and we wish none to stay away on account of their not having the means. There will be a commodious boarding tent on the ground, where brethren not having tents, but who have means, will be accommodated reasonably. Come one, come all, and let us have the greatest meeting of the kind ever yet held in Maine.

B. C. MOORE, ALBERT DOOR, GEO. H. FISHER, } Committee of Arrangements.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Bowdoinham, Lancaster school-house, commencing Thursday, August 28th, at 6 o'clock, P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad can call on Brn. Ebenezer Lancaster, E. Densmore, S. Graves, E. Hatch, J. Dickerson. May God display his power there in converting sinners.

H. B. SEVEY, Chairman.
H. G. SMILEY, Secretary.

General Meeting.

The brethren in New Hampshire, believing in gospel order, and the gifts as given to a New Testament church, have concluded to commence a meeting on New Durham Ridge August 21st, and hold it over the following Sunday, for the investigation of the word, and to seek the divine blessing. Bro. J. Billings and others will be present to preach the word. All are invited.

In behalf of the brethren, J. G. SMITH.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week. Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus"

DANIEL T. TAYLOR, Chairman.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

NOTE. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable.

D. T. TAYLOR, President.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

NOTE. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Poultney, Vt., till Aug. 18th, after that to Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Advent Campmeeting.

A general campmeeting for Northern New York, Vermont and Canada East, will be holden in Perry's Mills, N. Y., near the depot of the Ogdensburg Railroad in that place, six miles from Rouses Point, N. Y.

The Adventists in the entire region, with all classes and persuasions of christians, are most cordially invited to attend, and take an earnest and active part in the objects of the meeting. All who have tents will bring them. And friends in the vicinity are invited to put up cheap lumber tents, or others, for themselves and strangers. Board and lodging will be provided on reasonable terms, also pasture for horses. Every thing will be done by the brethren and friends in the vicinity to make the people comfortable. Our tried and faithful brethren, Dr. E M Loomis of Perry's Mills, N. Y., and Alvah Loomis of Champlain, N. Y., may be addressed by any who wish accommodation, or any further information about the meeting. The meeting will commence on Friday, August 15th, at 4 o'clock, P. M., and be continued every day over two Sabbaths, to the 24th. The meeting is located in a grove, on the farm of FRY CLARK, one-fourth of a mile from the depot at Perry's Mills. Water for man and beast, and lumber for tents in close proximity.

Ministers of God, brethren, sisters, friends, one and all, come up to the feast. There never was a time when the door was opened so wide and effectual as now, for the Adventists to speak and work for God and a doomed world. Many too among us have left their first love, and have need of help. Many in our families are out of the ark of safety, and shall we not do something to rescue them before the storm of vengeance falls? Can we endure to see the destruction of our kindred? The community too are looking to us for light on the coming kingdom. Shall we not give it? Can we withhold and be innocent in the day of the Lord? We have light on the time, and the signs of the Advent of the King of kings. Shall we not give it? Why hesitate to give the trump a certain sound? Rome is falling, the False Prophet is tottering, and Armageddon, with its strife and slaughter, is just upon us!

Come, then, ye veterans of the Advent faith; come, ye young with the old soldiers, let us shake off the dust of sloth and indolence, and gird on the armor of God. Let us seek and possess full redemption, and do what we can to multiply the number who shall stand with us on Mount Zion in the day of the Lord.

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

Boston, July 14, 1862.

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich, on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug. 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters; come with your tents and provisions; come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others; come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P. S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly. The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting.

In behalf of the church,
A. N. SEYMOUR.

G. L. TEEPLE, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

There will be a conference meeting at Jonesville, Hillsdale Co., Mich., commencing Thursday evening, Aug. 21st, and continuing over the Sabbath. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, and Bro. and Sr. Seymour, are expected to be in attendance to preach the word. We hope to see a general gathering of the lovers of Jesus within reach of this meeting. We invite you to come to this feast. Come praying. In this time of trouble, we should not forget the assembling ourselves together, but exhort "one another, and so much the more as (we) see the day approaching." Come, then, brethren and sisters, lay aside the cares of life a little time, and come up to this meeting. We will try and take care of all that will come.

A. E. BABCOCK, for the Church.

For the Crisis.

Oh! give me a Home.

Oh! give me a home in that land of bliss,
Where the tear never flows from the eye,
Where the saints shall walk in the paths of peace
'Neath the dome of an Eden sky.

Where the glory of God like an ocean shall roll,
No more sickness, nor sorrow, nor pain;
But the kingdom established from centre to pole,
Where the King in his beauty shall reign.

O, give me a home in those mansions sublime,
'Neath those towering bright battlements high,
With their shining portals and jasper domes,
That are lost in the deep, azure sky.

O, give me a home 'neath life's bowering tree,
Far off from the confines of strife;
Where we'll sit mid the flowers that ambrosially bloom,
By the sweet, gliding waters of life.

A home with the ransomed—a home with the saints—
A home with the prophets of old,
Who will come from their cavern-hewn, mossy old graves,
To walk the bright pathways of gold.

A home with the angels where angels shall be,
A home with the seraphs of song,
Whose echoing anthems ever shall float
The landscapes of Eden along.

O, give me a home 'neath that unclouded sun,
Where the flood-tide of glory shall roll,
And its bright waves dash, and its splendor flash,
O'er the robes of the ransomed soul.

Scituate, R. I. M. B. PHETTEPLACE.

Correspondence.

From Sr. B. P. F.

BRO. GRANT:—I should like to tell you, personally, that your excellent paper has been a source of light, and consolation, and strength to me for the last few months. And I want to tell you how rejoiced I am that light has come into the world: and although the great mass of mankind love darkness rather than light, yet there are here and there a few, thank God! who are willing to come to the light, yea, and joyfully receive it, though the world hate them. My name is enrolled with another denomination, but I shun not to take the Adventists by the hand, and call them brother and sister. And I am not ashamed of the doctrine of the Kingdom. I praise God that he ever sent a despised Advent preacher here to explain to us this blessed hope. And though his voice is now lost in the distance, and we listen in vain to catch one strain of its music, its echo is still in our hearts, making melody there, and bidding us in this dark hour of peril and danger lift up our heads and rejoice, for our "redemption draweth nigh." God bless and prosper him in his new field of labor, is our prayer.

There are a few of us here who are anxiously and hopefully watching "the signs"; while the church is mourning our apostasy, and pitying (rather scornfully) our delusion. What think you? should she weep for us, or for herself and children? Pray for us, that we may receive the truth, the whole truth, that we may not fall into the snare, and be left to believe a lie that we may be damned. But I want to write a little about

"THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE."

I have often wondered how the theology of the present day fell into such an error in regard to the final home of the redeemed. One good Bro. has said, "While the church was asleep the enemy sowed tares." I think it must be so. And what a crop they have produced! This tare must have been sown in the dark ages, when the Bible was almost unknown. If we speak of the new earth as being the home of God's people, we are accused of meddling with that which is none of our business, and of which we cannot know. How are we to know any truth, if we take imagination for our guide instead of the Bible? Some say they are not concerned at all, they can trust Christ; he has gone to prepare a place, and wherever he prepares it, or in whatever form, it will be good enough. I do not doubt it. The place that Christ will prepare for those that love him will be perfect in every sense of the word; and it is a source of satisfaction to me to know where it will be; and I do rejoice that this earth is to be redeemed.

"The curse will remove and the blessing come in,
And glory be found where was sorrow and sin."

This earth is emphatically our native land. Who does not love their native land? I love these dear New England hills. And if we love them now, covered as they are with the effects of the fall, sin, sorrow, sickness and death, with thorns and thistles, rust, mildew and decay everywhere; how much better shall we love them when all this is removed, and this land of ours is freed from the turmoil of war and strife, and restored to its Eden purity. The Irishman thinks there is no spot in the wide world so sweet as his own green isle. Well, Ireland will be redeemed. The Swiss peasant loves his mountains and valleys—Switzerland shall bud and blossom as the rose, and her hills resound with redemption's song. The German loves his fatherland—Germany shall also be redeemed. Italy's children love her sunny skies and pleasant fields, and are trying to free her from the yoke of the oppressor. Thank God! Italy shall be freed from the power of the Man of Sin, and all of her people who do not receive the mark of the Beast, nor worship his image, shall enter into a Kingdom, where there is neither Pope, nor Cardinals, but where Jesus Christ is King of kings, and Lord of lords.

Glory be to Jesus, who gave all that he had to buy the field; and the field, he tells us, is the world. And he will not only redeem the treasure that is in the field, but he will redeem the field, the whole field, and it shall be to him an everlasting possession. I could not think that this beautiful world was to be utterly destroyed, without a sigh of regret, even if I knew I should have a mansion bright,

"Beyond the bounds of time and space."

God made this earth and pronounced it good, and I want to have the curse removed and see it in all its primitive glory.

Supposing the noble Kossuth had settled in this country with his family, after the downfall of freedom in his native land. He might have enjoyed wealth, honor, and, in times past, liberty. But if tidings had come across the water that Hungary was free from her yoke of oppression, would not his heart have leaped for joy? Yea, verily, and he would no doubt have started immediately for his loved country, to rejoice with her in her freedom, and share her prosperity and peace.

So we, if faithful, shall find a refuge in the time of trouble. We shall be caught up and hid in God's pavilion till the indignation is past; and when the earth shall come forth purified from the fire, clad in immortal beauty, freed from the power of sin, death, and the devil, then we shall return, rejoicing as we come. And here, with Christ our mighty King and glorious Redeemer, we shall find an eternal home. For God hath declared in his sacred word, that "the righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."

Norway, July 31, 1862.

From Eld. W. Ingham.

BRO. GRANT:—As good news from a far country is cheering to the friends of Zion, I will give a short account of the work of the Lord in this part of my field of labor. I visited Phinney Mountain, Granville, in company with Sister Abigail Mussey, in March. Spent a few weeks there. The cause of religion was very low at that time, but the Lord revived his work. There was a general interest to hear the glorious news of the soon coming King. Some backsliders were reclaimed. The people rejoiced, and praised the Lord, that he had sent us among them—both white and colored. There are quite a number of the sons and daughters of Africa here, whom I expect to meet in the kingdom. It would do you good to hear them talk about the love of Jesus and his coming. Some of them have no learning, but they have learned the wondrous story of the love of God to fallen men. I praise the Lord! I returned home. Sister Mussey went to Cornwallis.

The 15th of May I was sent for (from the same place) to attend the funeral of a Sister Farnsworth (some twenty miles). Sister M. returned from her tour up the country about the same time. We held some meetings. The Lord blessed the word spoken, and soon a number of anxious souls were willing to manifest their desires for salvation. Some soon found peace in believing. The interest continued for some weeks. I baptized three Sundays in succession—twelve in all. Quite a number of backsliders have been reclaimed. Some fifteen came forward for prayers the last meeting we held. I expect to visit them again soon. Some of the meetings were among the best that I ever attended. Some twenty-five to thirty warm exhortations in our evening meetings. It was heart-cheering. Praise the Lord. Some fifteen have united together to sustain the worship of God, and to take the Holy Bible as their rule of faith and practice. Some opposition, but we will thank the Lord and take courage. The warfare will soon be over. Sister Mussey helped much in singing, exhortation, preaching and praying. I close in hope of soon meeting all Father's family in the Kingdom.

From Bro. P. Alling.

BRO. GRANT:—The inquiry may arise in the minds of some, as to what has become of Bro. Alling. If any such there are, I will endeavor to relieve their minds by saying, I am still in the land of the living, and am waiting with all possible patience for that "blessed hope." It is true my name has not appeared often of late in the papers as formerly, still I have not been idle, nor indifferent to the thrilling events of the times, and the increased evidence that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. My poor heart and voice have often been raised to God, as the reports of wrong and outrage have reached my ears, with which the earth is filled, that he would finish the work, according to his promise, and cut it short in righteousness. I long for an improved state.

Recently I have had the pleasure of meeting several times with brethren in Western New York, and on two occasions accompanied Bro. P. A. Smith, of Rochester, to Brockport, and enjoyed very precious seasons with brethren of like precious faith in that place. Bro. S. has been laboring there for some months past, in dispensing those great and glorious truths that pertain to the speedy coming of Christ, his reign here upon earth, life and immortality through him, to be had in the resurrection, etc. The word spoken has taken effect in the hearts of not a few; amongst the number may be found the intemperate, the infidel, the Universalist, and a goodly number from the different churches. All seemed alive, and unitedly engaged in the great and good work of commending to others the religion they have found so precious. All of those discordant doctrines which have so often rent churches in other places into fragments, have been carefully avoided, as they should be by all others in like circumstances.

The cause in Rochester and other places in Western N. York is low, as also in Ohio, and most other places from which I have heard. The war spirit seems to be the all-pervading theme of the times, and I fear some of our good brethren are drinking into that spirit quite too much. May the good Lord aid all to see and act as they will wish when called to answer to God in the day of judgment.

Norwalk, O., July 29th, '62.

From Sr. R. G. Whitcomb.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I see you have many contributors to the Crisis, and I am glad of it. I have often felt an inclination to write a few lines, but feared I should not say anything that would be profitable; but I cannot suppress the desire I have this morning of opening my mind to you. I have been hearing for months that you were expected here to preach again, and I have been looking forward to such a feast as I enjoyed last Spring in listening to you as you unfolded the prophecies, and presented to our view those blessed truths of the word which have heretofore been hidden from our eyes. God grant that you may be as greatly blest in giving the light, as I have been in receiving it.

I feel as though God's people should all be preachers. His witnesses are few and far between, and they should improve every opportunity; yea, seek for opportunities to let their light shine, and warn a wicked world, and the worldly-minded, slumbering churches, "for the day of the Lord cometh, and is nigh at hand!" Let us have on the whole armor, and be found watching, lest coming suddenly, he find us sleeping.

When you were here last spring, I told you that I had six sons, all grown to manhood, and as that was just at the breaking out of the war, I had great anxiety lest some of them should be induced to go; but God has heard my prayers, and not one of them has gone, though one of them held a Lieutenant's commission; but the Lord overruled so that he was delivered out of it. O, I know that God heard my prayers. Praised be his name! I have consecrated all my children to God, and have been trying to train them up for his service and not for the service of a wicked world. I am praying that they may enlist, not under the stars and stripes, but under Him whose weapons "are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds."

Keene, N. H.

From Bro. Israel Rice.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I am happy to inform our brethren, through the Crisis, that it has pleased our blessed Lord to favor us with a refreshing time. The blessing of the Lord has rested down upon us, through our worthy brother, E. Burnham, who came here two weeks ago, and stopped two Sabbaths. The truth has been blessed. Ten were baptized last Lord's day, and we expect more to follow. The old professors are much encouraged, and backsliders are coming up to duty, and hope to hold on their way till Jesus comes, which we think will be soon. I pray, in submission, that Jesus will come before any of our little company shall turn back, and join Satan's ranks.

Hillsburgh, N. B.

For the Crisis.

To my Sisters, who love the Lord and love the world too.

Let me ask you to turn aside with me for a few moments while I tell you some things the Lord hath done for my soul. I, like yourselves, had been a professor of godliness, yet denying its power—a lover of pleasure more than of God for years; but eight months since the Lord anointed my eyes with eye-salve, that I might see my condition, and unstopped my deaf ears that I might hear; but not until I had cried to him mightily from the depths into which I was sunk. The Lord had been subduing me for a long time with afflictions of various kinds; but not until I was bereft of husband, home, and almost every thing that we count dear, would I cease to look to the world for happiness. Many times I was brought to the brink of the grave, and for the time would see the vanity of earth; but with returning health would come a fondness for "unsubstantial joys."

Finally, consumption, with all its horrors, seemed to be resting upon me. The burdens of life which I had been carrying alone, because I would not ask the Lord to help me, became so heavy that I was sinking under them. After a time I saw my condition, and knew that none but God could save me. I saw myself and the professing world as I had never seen them before; and that all my afflictions had only been given to separate me from the world, and that now the ax was laid at the root of the tree to cut it down, unless it would show immediate signs of bearing fruit. To give up the world and become singular, to give up my business (millinery) and my gay dress, to be willing to be counted the off-scouring of all things for Christ's sake, as I saw I must to live, was a great thing for me, a poor, miserable, conceited, vain woman. But it was life and death, and I chose the former by sacrificing all that I had once loved.

And here let me say, dear sisters, that nothing was so hard for me to give up as my fashionable clothing. I felt that I could bury all the friends I had in one day, easier than be separated from my idols. I had always counted myself plain and proper, though not daring to be out of fashion in any thing. Who of my sisters will stop and realize what wonderful slaves they are making of themselves for the sake of fashion, even though they have, in this extravagant age, considered they were plain people? or will you not come with me to the light that shines from God's word upon this subject, lest your deeds should be reproved? Very few will. The church of God is now, as it was in the days of the first Advent, loving forms and ceremonies more than substantial truth; and no better description can be given of the daughters of modern Israel "en masse," than is to be found in the latter part of the third chapter of Isaiah concerning the women of ancient Israel; though I thank my heavenly Father that there are some exceptions—some who love the reproach of Christ more than the applause of the fashionable world.

To return to my own case. After I had made the sacrifice, (which I did not do in one day, though the grave was gaping to receive me; I must count and recount the cost, and had to give up almost every thing on my knees,) such a peace and exaltation filled my soul as I cannot describe. I humbled myself, and the Lord lifted me up above the crowd of friends and kindred that were swarming beneath me, and I could only pity them, that they would be slaves to the soul-destroying goddess—Fashion. In my last sickness previous to this, I had tested the power of God in these times to heal our diseases, when physicians and medicines are of no avail, by calling in the "Elders of the church," etc., as enjoined in the last chapter of James; a short account of which was published in the Crisis a little more than a year ago, by E. S. W., who was one that knelt at my bedside to pray. And now it was an easy matter for me to believe the Lord would speedily restore me to health without medicine, as he did, and to such health as I have not had before for five years.

Nor was the light which was kindled in me to be put under a bushel. I must return to my native home, and declare in a public way what the Lord had done for me. I felt more particularly drawn to go among the society of Friends; I suppose because they encourage women's speaking publicly, and because they advocate plain dress, and because, as a society, I always had great sympathy with them, though I was brought up a Methodist. I obeyed the voice that called me—the Lord having prepared the hearts of all to receive me, especially my own family friends. With much shrinking, trembling and weeping, I must tell my simple story wherever I went, clothed not in fashion's attire, but in humility.

The Lord has been leading me in a wonderful narrow way, but a blessed one, ever since. Occasionally I meet with one who has a hearing ear and an understanding heart—who knows of the things which are "hid from the wise and prudent, and revealed to babes;" but the majority are saying in their hearts have we not "Moses' law"; and nothing is so offensive to them as to hear a word about the second coming of Christ and the non-immortality of the soul. I have not met with one who can understand that the soul is mortal; but, on the contrary, are taking in more and more largely the idea that departed spirits are hovering around them—and why not communicate?

Will not some of my sisters who have been spending so much uselessly to adorn their persons and their homes, come forward with their means and help put down this wonderful uprising sin, SPIRITUALISM? And even the "widow's mite" I feel cannot be more appropriately applied than in this direction. It will be the few contending against the mighty; but the "arm of the Lord is not shortened." I have seen nothing on the subject that to me seems so well calculated to enlighten the common mind, as a series of articles entitled "The Coming Struggle," which were printed in the Crisis something over a year since. An effort has been made to publish them in book form, but not enough has been raised. I feel sure the Lord will reward any one who may feel it a privilege to throw into the treasury for this purpose. The harvest truly is "white," but the "laborers are few." Come up, my sisters, to "the help of the Lord against the mighty." Perhaps there never was a time when more earnest action was needed. A. G.

The Professor whose Pipe was stronger than God; or,

TOBACCO HINDERS SANCTIFICATION.

Just returned from addressing an audience of Methodist friends held in Jamestown. The subject was consecration to God, unreserved and complete, touching the whole man. We urged sanctification as heartily as the great Wesley ever did. We told them that habitual wrong-doing of any kind was in direct conflict with all acceptable prayer for this spiritual attainment. "Brethren," we inquired, "how are you daily employed? Are you manufacturing, selling, or using tobacco? Are you patronizing deadly drugs and drinks, and swelling the curse of intemperance? If so, we beg you to change your course. You live in known sin, and your prayers for 'the higher life' are worse than vain, for they are an abomination at God's throne. Renounce every wrong practice, and even suspicious ones; and then you may pray for sanctification consistently and with a better grace." We had unusual freedom among these dear brethren, and it was an hour of marked solemnity and tenderness—a feast of christian love.

As I withdrew to the vestibule, a well-looking brother approached me, under very strong excitement of mind. "You have struck the nail on the head once," he said, in trembling, tearful tones. "You have struck the nail on the head," he said again, in a louder voice, and sobbed like a broken-hearted child. "Tell us, brother," we said, "what you mean." After a while he replied: "I have been praying for sanctification five or six years. There has always been an Achan in my soul—always something in my way; and you are the first that ever told me what it is. It is my pipe. When I have been praying in my closet for the blessing, something has raised me suddenly from my knees, and I have run to the mantle-piece for my pipe! My pipe has been stronger than God! And when reading the Bible, in my family devotions, I have often cut short the exercise, and before I was aware, have run for my pipe. "My pipe has been stronger than God!" he said again; then, straightening up, with the dignity of a man, wiped the tears from his eyes, raising his hand, and looking upwards, with eloquence he exclaimed:

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne,
And worship only thee."

Then, suiting the action to the word, he drew his meerschaum from his pocket, dashed it down indignantly upon the steps of the church, and, like the baptized eunuch, went on his way rejoicing.

We hope this dear man obtained the blessing to which he aspired; but we parted there, and as Bunyan said of a pilgrim, "we saw him no more.—Anti-tobacco Journal.

Be True.

Thou must be true to thyself,
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy soul must overflow, if thou
Another's soul would reach;
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed.

CHEAP PLEASURES.—Did you ever study the cheapness of some pleasures? asks an excellent writer. Do you know how little it takes to make a multitude happy? Such trifles as a penny, a word or a smile do the work. There are two or thee boys passing along—give them each a chestnut, and how smiling they look! they will not be cross for some time. A poor widow lives in the neighborhood, who is the mother of half a dozen children; send them half a peck of sweet apples and they will all be happy. A child has lost his arrow—the world to him—and he mourns sadly; help him to find it, or make him another, and how quickly will the sunshine play on his sober face. A boy has as much as he can do to pile up a load of wood; assist him a few moments, or speak a pleasant word to him, and he forgets his toil and works away without minding it. Your apprentice has broken a mug, or has cut the vest too large, or slightly injured a piece of work. Say "you scoundrel!" and he feels miserably; but remark, "I am sorry," and he will try to do better. You employ a man—pay him cheerfully, and speak a pleasant word to him, and he leaves your office with a contented heart, to light up his own hearth. As you pass along the street you meet a familiar face—say "Good morning," as though you felt happy, and it will work admirably in the heart of your neighbor.

RELIGION AND MORALITY.—Morality, without religion, is a dream; but not less a dream is religion without morality,—a faith that lies in an orthodox creed, without a godly and honest life. This won't stand the day that shall try the tree by its fruits. We want a religion that walks in the path of the Ten Commandments, saying, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners." We want a religion that, not dressed for Sundays and walking on stilts, descends into common and every-day life; is friendly, not selfish; courteous, not boorish; generous, not niggard; sanctified, not sour; that loves justice more than gain, and fears God more than man; (to quote another's words)—a religion that keeps husbands from being spiteful, or wives fretful; that keeps mothers patient, and children pleasant; that bears heavily not only on the exceeding sinfulness of sin, but on the exceeding rascality of lying and stealing; that banishes small measures from counters, sand from sugar, and water from milk;—the faith, in short, whose fruit is works.—Dr. Guthrie.

IDLENESS is the sepulchre of a living man. A man whose will refuses to direct the vitality within him into regular channels of labor, who simply feeds and sleeps, or nurses his passions and his appetites, whose highest satisfaction comes from sense, is as good as dead and buried.

☞ Wink at small injuries rather than avenge them. If to destroy a single bee you throw down the hive, instead of one enemy you make a thousand.

THE SCRIPTURES.—I have carefully and regularly perused the holy Scriptures, and am of the opinion that the volume, independently of its origin, contains more sublimity, purer morality, more important history and finer strains of eloquence, than can be collected from all other books, in whatever language they may have been written.—Sir W. Jones.

☞ Assurance is glory in the bud; it is the suburbs of Paradise; it is a cluster of the land of promise; it is a spark of God; it is the joy and crown of a christian; how great, therefore, is their impiety and folly who deny assurance, or who cry it down, under any names or notions whatsoever!—Brooks.

The Good Shepherd.

"Some years ago, a friend of mine was in Greece, in the month of March. He was travelling in the country where the shepherds lived. He came to three shepherds with their flocks. One had about six hundred and fifty sheep, another had about seven hundred and fifty. In all, they had about twenty-one hundred sheep. They were out in the valleys where the grass grew. All the flocks were mingled together. Every sheep had its own name. It would not come nor go, if called by any other name; nor would it come nor go, if called by any but its own shepherd. Every shepherd knew all his own sheep. He knew their names also. If any one was about to go into a wrong place he called it and it turned back. If the way was narrow or steep, he would go before, and they would follow him. This is just like what the Bible says about Christ and his flock. 'The sheep hear his voice; and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice. And a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers. I am the good shepherd and know my sheep and am known of mine. I lay down my life for the sheep.'

"The day my friend saw the shepherds was a cold day. Some of the lambs were quite strong and full of play; but some of them were very young and tender. The cold chilled them and they could not walk. The shepherds had on something like large cloaks tied around their necks, and girt about their waists. So they took up the little lambs and put them in their bosoms. But they did not smother them. They left their heads out so that they could breathe well. But they kept them snug and warm. It was a pleasing sight to see an old shepherd with his long grey beard and his bosom full of lambs. Just so the Bible says of Christ. 'He shall gather the lambs in his arms, and carry them in his bosom.' Many little children have loved Christ. And he has never let such perish. He is as good to little children as to old people. He says, 'I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me.'

Among the twenty-one hundred sheep were some old and feeble ones. They could not walk much. If the way was miry or steep, they could hardly go along. So the shepherds would come and put their crooks under their bodies, just behind their fore legs, and help them along. They treated them with great gentleness and care. Just so 'the good Shepherd has pity on the weak, and gently helps them along.' He never leaves nor forsakes them. 'His rod and his staff comfort them.' He leads all his sheep into his fold for safety. He leads them out, that they may find pasture. If little boys and girls are wise, they will desire above all things to belong to Christ's flock. I hope all of you will commit to memory the twenty-third Psalm. It is beautiful. 'The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.'"—Rev. Dr. Plumer.

Your Sin will find you Out.

A minister was preaching from these words, "Be sure your sin will will find you out." He said many awakening things about sin finding out those who committed it; and among others this: "If you do not find out your sin, and bring it to Jesus, to get it pardoned and washed away through his blood, be sure your sin will find you out, and bring you to the judgment-seat, to be condemned and sent away by the Judge into everlasting punishment."

A little girl, who had told her mother a lie before she came to hear the minister, was listening, and she thought, "Oh, that lie; I must either find it, and bring it to Jesus, or it will find me out at the great day."

The child was greatly alarmed. She became very anxious about her soul's salvation. She cared for nothing earthly; her mind was entirely occupied with thoughts of eternal things. She could not rest until she went and told the minister all she felt and feared. She walked several miles to speak to him, and the burden of her errand was this: "Oh! what shall I do with my sin?" He said, "Lay it upon the spotless Lamb of God, and he will take it entirely away. Let us now lay it upon him," said the kind pastor; and with that he kneeled down with the awakened child, and commended her to "Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep." He spoke to her of the love of Jesus, and she went home.

The next time the minister saw her, she came to him with a bright and happy face. He took her by the hand and said, "Well, have you laid your sin upon the spotless Lamb of God?" "Oh yes," she replied, "and I'll never lay any more." She meant that she would never sin again—she would never more tell a falsehood. Her heart was full of love to Jesus for taking away her sin, and she could not think it possible that she could sin again. And that is the true mark of a christian, that he resolves to sin "no more."

Dear children, have you laid your sins on Jesus? A sure mark of it will be this, that you wish, with all your heart, never to have any more to lay upon him.

The minister told this little story many miles from where it happened, and the minister's wife told it again to her class, when a young woman was awakened by it to care for her soul.

An Invocation.

BY R. THAYER.

"Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."—Psalm 139: 23, 24.

I.
O, Lord, forgive my errors past,
And help me live, henceforth, to thee;
Nor me from thy dear presence cast,
While tossed upon life's troubled sea.

II.
Mould every thought, desire, and deed,—
Conform me to thy holy will,—
Impart to me the grace I need,
And with thy love my spirit fill.

III.
Teach me the way that I should go,
That I from thee may never stray,—
That I the way to men may show
That leads to life and endless day.

IV.
Help me my enemies to love,
And do them good whene'er I can,—
Help me my love for thee to prove
By deeds to bless my fellow man.

V.
Help me to look with charity
Upon the wrongs which others do,—
Reflecting that the faults I see,
Compared with mine, may be but few.

VI.
O make the path of duty plain,
To wage with sin successful strife;
Strike from my spirit every chain,
That I may live a christian life.

VII.
Help me, above all things, to feel
How much, O Lord, to thee I owe;
And by my toils for others' weal,
In goodness day by day to grow.

Boston, Aug. 5th, 1862.

Evening Shadows.

"The day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out."—BIBLE.

Uncreated benevolence, when it became necessary to inflict judgment, has invariably manifested love in timely warning such as were to feel the rod of his just displeasure. Such was certainly the fact concerning the Noahtic race, the cities of Admah, Zeboim, Sodom and Gomorrah, also the Egyptians, Assyrians, Ninevites, Tyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Grecians, Pagan Rome; and concerning the beloved city of the great King, Jerusalem, judgment was declared in strains of lamentation and weeping by the Man of Sorrows: "The days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

Dear reader, that same merciful God who "spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. . . . Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard." You cannot be so ignorant as not to know that in every instance where God denounced judgment by the prophets, it was most literally and certainly fulfilled. What living monuments of the truth above asserted we have this day, both as it concerns the past and the present dispensation. All that holy seers uttered in lamentation, mourning and wo, has in a most wondrous and literal sense been positively accomplished. Read the historic page. Learn the fate of the above nations, and if you will not search yourself to learn the truths of both the above facts, and also the declaration of Him who wisely ordereth all things, when he declares, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets"; do give credence to those who have spent their lives and have grown familiar with such truths. Will you? won't you? Hasten! do one or the other very quickly. Look at the facts in the past and present.

Judgment-visited cities of the past are all preaching the truth of the prophet Amos—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." O! believe it, my dear reader, do hasten, prepare for the coming storm. The prophetic page is replete with descriptive visions. Signs, symbols, dates and evidences of the solemn fact tell you, if you are not ready, to prepare to meet your God in judgment, and for the child of God to gird himself with watchfulness. The cry has been sounded, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

The same God that spake to our fathers by those lips that he touched with hallowed fire, declared by the Son of Amoz (Isa. 46: 9, 10;) "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else. I am God, and there is none like me, DECLARING THE END FROM THE BEGINNING, AND FROM ANCIENT TIMES THE THINGS THAT ARE NOT YET DONE, SAYING, MY COUNSEL SHALL STAND, AND I WILL DO ALL MY PLEASURE." Such, dear reader, has been, is, and will be the fact, until his own almighty arm performs all that his mouth has spoken by both the prophets and his Son.

The broad outlines of prophecy have long since been filled out. The jots and tittles are now nearly completed. Rome, gory Rome, where Daniel, the man greatly beloved of God, was permitted to concentrate the last rays of his prophetic vision, has risen, ruled and fallen, precisely as foretold in the above declaration. Look at the facts on the page of prophecy. He was to be "more stout than his fellows." He was. He was to "subdue three kings." He did. He was to "think to change times and laws." He did. He was to "speak great words." He did. He was to make "war with the saints." He did. He was to "wear out the saints of the Most High." He did. The saints were to "be given into his hand." They were. His dominion was to "be taken away." It was. There was to be a consumption of his power. There has been. Now I would inquire of you, can you doubt the only one prediction yet remaining to be fulfilled? If all the above have been so astonishingly verified, can a single one in the programme fail to be accomplished? Be serious. Come, look at the subject candidly. Answer your own conscience. You inquire, what is it?

First, let me remark as above stated, God has spoken to us in these last days by his Son; and as Daniel has declared this power shall be given to the burning flame, accomplished when our Lord shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, at the judgment of the great day, when he shall come to be admired in all his saints, and as that event settles the destiny of the world, it is one of vast magnitude, involving the judgment of mankind. And as God has appointed his Son to judge the world, he most certainly will not ignore his own declarations made by his sanction to the world through Isaiah and Amos, as above stated, and send his Son without making it known. The Lord Jesus when interrogated on this point, as recorded by the Evangelist Matthew, (24th), "Tell us . . . . what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" replied in a chain of consecutive events, filling up the interregnum with wars and rumors of wars, nation against nation, famines, pestilences, the rise of false christs and prophets, "the "abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing in the "holy place," and then exhorting us to understand what Daniel spoke. And we do think we understand this much at least, that the above has been fulfilled in a most clear and astonishing manner. And our Lord declared, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Most assuredly the sun was darkened the 20th of May, 1780. Consequently the tribulation must have ended. And the stars have also fallen from heaven. And assuredly but one thing more remains to complete the entire prophetic chain which brings our blessed Lord to his weeping bride. O glory! Hallelujah! what a prospect for his dear saints.

In answer to the question, what next is to be done to complete the destiny concerning the papacy, as eleven predictions have thus far been consummated? It is his destruction by the coming of our Lord, and that event is just at hand. The signs declared to precede his coming are in the past. Mark the last clause of the 29th verse of Matt. 24th. The sun has been darkened; the moon withheld her light the same night, although at the full; the stars fell November 13th, 1833; and now only one more and that brings the crowning glory of prophets, apostles, martyrs and saints. The next event is, "And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Doubtless that will be the same as spoken of by the apostle (Heb. 12: 26, 27), "But now hath he promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only but also heaven." Prepare for it! "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. But you may say, "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Please note this text (Mark 13: 32),—"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels . . . in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Do you not see that the Son of God is in the same category as it respects the knowledge of the day and hour of his coming? The text above is rendered by one thus: "But of that day and hour maketh no man known, no, not the angels, neither the Son, but the Father only." And as the day does not concern us, let us see well to what does. We may know of a certainty when the great day of the Lord is on us.

The signs are all past but the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and that may take place as unexpectedly at any time as the fulfillment of the declaration, "The sun shall be darkened," or "the moon not give her light," or "the stars shall fall from heaven." Who anticipated the day and hour of their accomplishment? It was due the church; and God fulfilled them. And be sure of this, the shaking of the heavens is about due the church. God will soon fulfill it. Jesus has identified us with the generation that shall not pass away until all be fulfilled. Soon he will "send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds." "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

"Awaken, O chosen and faithful!
And see that your lamps burn bright;
For thick fall the evening shadows,
Then follows the deep, dark night.
The train hath set forth for the marriage,
The Bridegroom is on his way,
And silently cometh the midnight;—
Awaken, and watch, and pray."

Special Seasons.

Reader, have you special seasons for prayer, humiliation and confession? Aside from your secret devotions, closet prayer, family prayer, social prayer, prayer in the great congregation, and prayer ejaculatory, telegraphic, have you another season, weekly or oftener, for renewed heart-searching, self examination, prayer and fasting for special redeeming, sanctifying grace, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon your own soul and upon the souls of others? for salvation to go forth as the light of the morning? Can you safely meet the perpetual overflowing tide of popular seeking, the general unceasing current of worldly-mindedness, without these special, regular heart-searchings, humiliations, and earnest God-seekings? The most devoted, holy, and successful servants of the Most High in all ages have had one day, or a part of a day in each week for special renewed consecration to God. They tell us in their own case, such seasons were indispensable to rapid growth in grace, to spiritual conquest, to holy triumph, the rising above the world, the flesh and the devil.

Brother, sister, we renew the inquiry, have you a special day, or a part of a day for fasting and prayer exclusively Godward, laying all upon the altar of Christ Jesus? In these special devotional seasons for prayer, praise, and deep heart-searchings, do you inquire definitely your state and standing by the unerring word of truth? Do you make this heart-searching a personal business? "Am I in the faith, lovingly, joyfully, mounting up as on eagle's wings?" Am I truly benevolent? Is selfishness entirely extirpated, root and branch? Am I doing everything to please God? Is the spring of every motive pure? Am I doing all to the glory of God, whether I eat or drink or whatsoever I do? Am I a faithful steward, ready at any time to render my stewardship joyfully? Am I squandering nothing of God's bounty on pride, lust or extravagance, or to gratify a false taste or perverted appetite? Am I temperate in all things, keeping my body under and bringing every faculty of my being into due subjection to the law of Christ? Is there anything like a sectarian spirit lurking in my wish or secret corner of my soul? Am I doing all I possibly can for Christ, who has done so much for me? Am I faithful in rebuking sin everywhere? Am I obeying the Lord in condescending to men of low estate, in visiting the poor, the widow, and the orphan? Am I remembering those in bonds as bound with them? Am I shrinking from no duty, from a man-fearing, time serving policy? In a word, can I say with Paul: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live, I live by faith on the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." These are some of the items suitable for reflection on these special days of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

Brief Journal.—No. 1.

Having spent over six years, as a missionary, in the great West; and having nearly worn myself out, for the time being, on my recent grove meeting tour, I concluded to make a short visit to the East, see friends of former years, hear some good preaching, and get recruited in body and spirit, and thus be better prepared to do my work in the West. But it was hard to part with western Brn., even for a brief period. Many wished to extort a pledge from me that I would not desert the West. This I have not thought of doing. Too many have done that already. And western friends have exerted themselves too much to keep me in the field to have me desert them now. Though few in number, and generally poor, they have put their hands down deep into their pockets, to aid me in sounding the judgment alarm. God bless them abundantly.

Upon bidding the Columbia Co. brethren adieu, Bro. Polly (who had upon former occasions given me from five to fifteen dollars at a time) inquired, "Bro. Sheldon, have you got money enough to carry you to the cars?" "O yes, plenty for that." "Well, what will you do when you get to the cars?" "I intend to ride on them." "But they will not carry you free." "I suppose not." "Perhaps they might if you would turn Episcopal minister, and wear a long gown." "I can't afford to do that." "Well, Bro. Sheldon, here are ten dollars to help pay your fare." "But this is too much for you to give." "Perhaps you will need it more than I shall." God bless Bro. Polly.

Upon parting with the brethren in Sauk county, Bro. Knapp said to me, "Bro. Sheldon, if you are going East to stay, you may get some money to go with the best way you can; but if you are coming back, I will try to help you about twenty-five dollars, if necessary." "No, I shall take no such sum of money from you; you have too often given me five dollars or ten dollars, to allow this generosity." "Here, take this money; also five dollars from Sr. Barber." "No, not over half of it; you are too generous." "But you will not have enough to pay your fare with." "I shall make out to get East, and run the risk of getting back." But here comes two dollars from Bro. Hedges, recently out of the Baptist church; two dollars from Sr. Stone's husband,—a theoretical believer, but not a professor, one of the kind called "half brothers" by Eld. Barnes,—God bless the "half brothers" with a full relationship; two dollars from Bro. Brewster; an offer of two dollars from Widow Prethro—refused; one dollar from Bro. Morrel; fifty cents from Sister Morrel; one dollar from Eld. Barnes; one dollar from Bro. Eels. But there is some mail in the Post office. Ah! here is a letter from Eld. H. A. King, containing three dollars; and another one from Eld. H. Grew, containing five dollars; but this last was sent to aid me in preaching, not in traveling. God bless the donors, in this world, and in the world to come.

Aug. 4th. We started for the cars. Dea. Knapp took us to Sauk City. From thence the stage conveyed us to Mázomanie, where the prophetic "chariots" soon found us, and by paying $7.40 we were classed among the "worthies" to ride to the flourishing city of Milwaukee; and while rushing thither "like the lightnings," we were frequently "recounted." Before dark we were gladly received into the mansion of a money-making landlord, where another deduction was made from my little eastern purse.

Aug. 5th. Took passage on the propeller "Wisconsin," for Ogdensburg, N. Y., by the way of the Lakes (for the sum of $24.00), hoping to get measurably rested and recruited by the trip. Have made it a rule to preach but once a week for the present.

Aug. 6th. As our boat is plowing her way through the deep waters, I am thinking more about the wants of the West, than my contemplated visits in the East. Indeed I am going East not only to see friends, and attend general meetings, but also to use my influence to get men of the right stamp to leave all for our soon coming King, and permanently settle in the West. I say men of the right stamp, and also of talents that will compete with the western clergy. "The Lord hath need" of such men in this region. Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin have spoken for one or two each. The salary offered for faithful men is large; only a small portion of it, however, to be paid till Jesus comes. We want men who can endure hardships, who have the cause of Jesus Christ at heart, who believe and feel that the judgment is but a step before them; who can pray as well as preach. Prayerless preachers are not needed out here, nor anywhere else till they are converted. Energetic men of the right faith, and right spirit, are needed. Wisconsin would like to add Elder Grant to her list of preachers, if it were not for his Editorial position. But we can't consent to let him leave that place, even if he would promise to permanently locate in our midst. Not that there are no other good men to fill his seat, but it is not every good man that makes a good Editor. We are not willing to exchange a tried man, to run the risk of an uncertain experiment. The Crisis MUST be so guided as to "feed the flock" with food that will make them thrive, and not with poison. It is too late in the day to try experiments now.

Breast the wave, Christian.

Breast the wave, christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, christian, when the night's longest;
Onward, and onward still be thine endeavor,
The rest that remaineth will be forever.

Fight the fight, christian, Jesus is o'er thee,
Run the race, christian, heaven's before thee;
He who hath promised, faltereth never;
The love of eternity flows on forever.

Lift the eye, christian, just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, christian, ere it reposeth;
Thee from the love of Christ nothing shall sever;
Mount when the work is done; praise him forever.

Envy.

If there existed a dire disease, to which we were all exposed, known to be incurable, if allowed to run to its acme, but could be arrested when in its incipient state, should we not feel anxious to learn (as physicians say) its diagnosis and therapeutics, that we might escape the fatal malady? Well, there is one malady sin is liable to make which, according to the comparison God uses, is incurable, when once fairly seated in the human heart. The Divine diagnosis pronounces this malady to be ENVY. But how do I know this to be an incurable disease? God compares it to "rottenness of the bones," and let us bear in mind Inspiration never overrates in making comparisons—and whoever knew a rotten bone made sound? There have been cases where some portions of the flesh had become putrid and were restored. But who can heal a putrid bone? What are the symptoms of this virulent disease? The first symptoms, according to Cruden, Webster, and others who seem quite in harmony with the Scriptures, is, "to fret and grieve at the prosperity of another; to feel uneasiness, mortification, or discontent, at the sight of superior excellencies, reputation, or happiness enjoyed by another; to repine at another's prosperity—to hate him on that account." Says Pollock,

"What made the man of ENVY what he was,
Was worth in others, vileness in himself.
• • • • Whene'er he heard
As oft he did, of joy and happiness,
And great prosperity, and rising worth,
'Twas like a wave of wormwood o'er his soul
Rolling in bitterness."

Professing christian, did you ever feel uneasiness when you saw one of your fellows possessed of superior talents that gained for him much love and respect? When you have seen one possessed of superior personal accomplishments, or more splendid equipage than yourself, have you never expressed by word, look, or gesture, a hint to their disparagement? Or have you not, when occasion made it proper to speak of the virtues and talents of another, maintained a strict silence, because you felt regret at such rising worth? If so, you are in danger! for the monster ENVY has found a lurking place in some secret recess of the heart,—though in embryo, rest assured it is there; and if suffered to remain, will become a hydra-headed monster, baffling human power though it be a Hercules! How different from the Gospel sympathy we are taught to cherish: "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." The envious heart reverses this scripture, rejoicing at another's tears, and feeling sorrow at another's joy.

On reading the seventy-third Psalm, we find David came very near being drowned in perdition for sipping one draught from this poisonous fount. But he immediately had recourse to the divine sanative—God's sanctuary—and was healed. But hear him acknowledge the debasing influence of the first stages of this disease: "So foolish was I, and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee."

But if the first stages of this disease are so direful, should its incurability excite our astonishment when fully matured? But what are the symptoms when matured? Foul slander, theft, murder, in fine, anything that can mar, distress or destroy the one more privileged than the possessor of this diabolical passion. The case of Cain affords an example in point. He sees his brother peculiarly blessed of heaven, enjoying that peace and quiet assurance which is the effect of righteousness. His envy knows no bounds until he terminates that happiness by imbruing his hands in his brother's blood.

Paul prayed to be delivered from unreasonable men. Now what sin so unreasonable as Envy? How perfectly unreasonable and serpent-like to use any means to abuse another, because you fancy him happier than yourself. To conceive ill-will against one who has attacked none of your rights, nor done you any injury, solely because he is more prosperous or happier than yourself, is, as one remarks, "unnatural." Yes, it is diabolical. Such an one is to be avoided with all cautiousness, for, as the wise man inquires, "Who is able to stand before envy?"

The church in the wilderness must, it would seem, have been broken up by Envy, had not God interposed with his dissecting knife and severed the putrid mass, thus saving a part of the body. "They envied Moses," says the Psalmist, and why? Because he held a little higher office in the church than they did. But they should have thought whether God put him there, or whether he forced himself up there. So assiduous was he in his labors, as to excite the sympathy of outsiders (Ex. 18: 18), and he really seemed to do the work of God up right; but, alas! they possessed this incurable disease; could not endure the idea of having one above them, and so they persuaded some of the influential of the church to join in their tirade against Moses and Aaron, accusing them of lording it over the rest, that they desired to rule, etc.—Num. 16. Moses was the meekest man in the world, but he did not possess that passive tameness which would suffer the law of God to be belied without boldly confronting the same.

There always has been, and probably always will be, some restless, uneasy spirits who never can "let well enough alone." How painful to be in the society of those who feel disquietude at the happiness and prosperity of others! Whatever else may come into the church of God, may Heaven preserve it from the foul monster Envy! There are two moral diseases which seem incurable: blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, and envy. And so if there is a member of the body that has this disease fairly seated, the dissecting knife might as well be used at once, ere the whole body is diseased. May Heaven preserve the "little flock," who are waiting for the coming and kingdom of Christ, from feeling uneasiness because they see others possess more of the shining dust of earth than themselves!

Beloved, the last heir will soon become of age, and Jehovah is to be the Administrator on the estate of the saints, when he will take all the kingdoms under the whole heavens and give them to his "little flock"; not for a limited period, but they are to possess them for a period commensurate with the existence of the great I AM.

Then we will wait in sweet contentment a little while, and as I look at the signs of the times it seems to me it must be a VERY little while ere God's family will be rich and honorable.

A Glance at our World.—No. 8.

Take, if you please, kind readers, the Temperance Reform. For awhile it swept all before it, but, alas! it was of short duration; it soon took a retrograde move, and now if something exciting and novel is presented, it has but small interest. It doubtless has made its last move on the great stage of earth. Men of our day have a morbid fancy; they gloat over the scenes of wild carnage on the battle field. So it is with the Moral Reform and Anti-Slavery Societies, and, in fact, with the whole list. How many have dreamed of the happy days of the Millennium, with all its accompanying glory, when the world would be so much improved that sin would not be found in it. But, alas! these dreams are all illusory. It is in vain that man attempts to make a paradise of this corrupt earth. The Adamic curse with all its consequences is upon it, and all nature groans in sympathy; and poor fallen man, surrounded with ills on every hand, lifts up his voice in supplicating tones for deliverance from this state of death and corruption. He must of necessity be a pilgrim and stranger. It is not his home. Death reigns. The groans and sighs of the dying are upon every breeze. How often must he exclaim from his inmost soul—

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

Yes, the scenes of moral and physical desolation which continually surround us will cause the man, whose eyes are open to the true state of our world, to sigh for the reign of the King of peace; and though that day must be ushered in with the dread judgments [illegible], still he will pray, "Thy kingdom come." The world [illegible] by the delay of [illegible]

Let any one take a survey of the whole human family spread over the entire globe, and what a mass of corruption, sin, degradation and crime! Who can contemplate it without loathing from his inmost soul this present evil world, and desiring that there may be an end put to these evils? We might take each nation separately, and examine the moral character of those who compose it, until we had gone through the whole list, and oh! what a sad catalogue should we have of the immorality of kings, queens, members of parliament, authors, presidents, cabinets, and men in every walk in life. But we forbear. Allowing that the moral condition of the world might be much improved, that some system might be adopted by which the whole human family might be much better, and consequently much happier; that the law of love might prevail from east to west and from north to south;—still there would be insurmountable obstacles in the way of this earth being the abode of happiness, over which poor finite man could have no influence. For though every member of the human family were in a moral condition and pecuniary manner fitted for happiness, yet he would be under the reign of the fell tyrant—Death; and consequently be subjected to sighs, groans and tears. He would still be reminded that this is not his home; that he was a mere pilgrim, lonely and sad, too,—for his friends would be comforters but for a day; like phantoms their dear forms would vanish, and the heart would be left desolate and sad. Yet the christian is buoyed up with the thrilling assurance, "They shall come again from the land of the enemy," and death shall have no more dominion over them.

But there is no hope for fallen man only through Christ, who is the resurrection and life. If the human family could but see their lost condition, and the degraded and hopeless state of the world, with what joy would they embrace the promise of a future world of life, which is to be sinless, deathless, and sorrowless. But, alas! few see the world as it is. The mass float down the tide of time, regardless of little but present enjoyment and gratification. Tell them of a world pure and holy, such as is promised to the just, and it fails to affect them. It meets with no response from them; their treasure is on earth; and though moth and rust have often corrupted, yet they are putting forth all their efforts still and hope to preserve them secure.

Alas! for the folly of man. Strange that he will continue to pursue phantoms all the way from the days of youth till white-headed—from the cradle to the grave—and scarcely pause to glance at the past, so filled up with harassing thoughts, or attempt to scan the ominous future with its dread realities. Why will man pursue a phantom all through life, never seeking for something substantial, something that earth cannot possibly afford, which calms man's angry passions, hushes his complaint against his Creator—if the storm scatters his property to the winds, he does not repine. If the fire levels his dwelling-place on earth, he does not indulge that feeling of despair which those who have no hope in a future world give way to. He feels that he has a building preparing, whose maker and builder is God. Death may enter his family circle and take his loved ones, still he will exclaim, "Thy will be done."

Yes, the joys of this world to the christian have no charm. He gazes away through the telescope of faith to a world of magnificent grandeur—Eden's pristine beauty—trees of life waving in the pure breezes of heaven—flowers that shall never know of blight or decay—union of all God's people—eternally songs of deliverance on every tongue.

Men of this world! seek that better world—that sorrowless, deathless abode, where wars and commotions are stilled.

Full Names.

Heartily glad to see Bro. Munger's remarks on signatures. Now I seldom read an obituary of over a square, especially of strangers. But Hiram Munger is not a stranger, because I have so often seen his name. Consequently, his mother's obituary was read with all the interest that my own mother's could have been. I have often seen initials that I suspected to be old school-mates of Shelburne Falls, in days of yore, when Franklin Academy was young. But, alas! what do we know by initials? Seeing that the Bro. hath spoken, I would have held my peace, but that we sometimes see full names, without full address. We want Post Office and State.

An Invocation.

BY R. THAYER.

"Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."—Psalm 139: 23, 24.

I.

O, Lord, forgive my errors past,
And help me live, henceforth, to thee;
Nor me from thy dear presence cast,
While tossed upon life's troubled sea.

II.

Mould every thought, desire, and deed,—
Conform me to thy holy will,—
Impart to me the grace I need,
And with thy love my spirit fill.

III.

Teach me the way that I should go,
That I from thee may never stray,—
That I the way to men may show
That leads to life and endless day.

IV.

Help me my enemies to love,
And do them good whene'er I can,—
Help me my love for thee to prove
By deeds to bless my fellow man.

V.

Help me to look with charity
Upon the wrongs which others do,—
Reflecting that the faults I see,
Compared with mine, may be but few.

VI.

O make the path of duty plain,
To wage with sin successful strife,
Strike from my spirit every chain,
That I may live a christian life.

VII.

Help me, above all things, to feel
How much, O Lord, to thee I owe,
And by my toils for others' weal,
In goodness day by day to grow.

Evening Shadows.

"The day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out."—BIBLE.

Uncreated benevolence, when it became necessary to inflict judgment, has invariably manifested love in timely warning such as were to feel the rod of his just displeasure. Such was certainly the fact concerning the Noahtic race, the cities of Admah, Zeboim, Sodom and Gomorrah, also the Egyptians, Assyrians, Ninevites, Tyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Grecians, Pagan Rome; and concerning the beloved city of the great King, Jerusalem, judgment was declared in strains of lamentation and weeping by the Man of Sorrows: "The days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

Dear reader, that same merciful God who "spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. . . . Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard." You cannot be so ignorant as not to know that in every instance where God denounced judgment by the prophets, it was most literally and certainly fulfilled. What living monuments of the truth above asserted we have this day, both as it concerns the past and the present dispensation. All that holy seers uttered in lamentation, mourning and wo, has in a most wondrous and literal sense been positively accomplished. Read the historic page. Learn the fate of the above nations, and if you will not search yourself to learn the truths of both the above facts, and also the declaration of Him who wisely ordereth all things, when he declares, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets"; do give credence to those who have spent their lives and have grown familiar with such truths. Will you? won't you? Hasten! do one or the other very quickly. Look at the facts in the past and present.

Judgment-visited cities of the past are all preaching the truth of the prophet Amos—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." O! believe it, my dear reader, do hasten, prepare for the coming storm. The prophetic page is replete with descriptive visions. Signs, symbols, dates and evidences of the solemn fact tell you, if you are not ready, to prepare to meet your God in judgment, and for the child of God to gird himself with watchfulness. The cry has been sounded, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

The same God that spake to our fathers by those lips that be touched with hallowed fire, declared by the Son of Amoz (Isa. 46: 9, 10;) "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else. I am God, and there is none like me, DECLARING THE END FROM THE BEGINNING, AND FROM ANCIENT TIMES THE THINGS THAT ARE NOT YET DONE, SAYING, MY COUNSEL SHALL STAND, AND I WILL DO ALL MY PLEASURE." Such, dear reader, has been, is, and will be the fact, until his own almighty arm performs all that his mouth has spoken by both the prophets and his Son.

The broad outlines of prophecy have long since been filled out. The jots and tittles are now nearly completed. Rome, gory Rome, where Daniel, the man greatly beloved of God, was permitted to concentrate the last rays of his prophetic vision, has risen, ruled and fallen, precisely as foretold in the above declaration. Look at the facts on the page of prophecy. He was to be "more stout than his fellows." He was. He was to "subdue three kings." He did. He was to "think to change times and laws." He did. He was to "speak great words." He did. He was to make "war with the saints." He did. He was to "wear out the saints of the Most High." He did. The saints were to "be given into his hand." They were. His dominion was to "be taken away." It was. There was to be a consumption of his power. There has been. Now I would inquire of you, can you doubt the only one prediction yet remaining to be fulfilled? If all the above have been so astonishingly verified, can a single one in the programme fail to be accomplished? Be serious. Come, look at the subject candidly. Answer your own conscience. You inquire, what is it?

First, let me remark as above stated, God has spoken to us in these last days by his Son; and as Daniel has declared this power shall be given to the burning flame, accomplished when our Lord shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, at the judgment of the great day, when he shall come to be admired in all his saints, and as that event settles the destiny of the world, it is one of vast magnitude, involving the judgment of mankind. And as God has appointed his Son to judge the world, he most certainly will not ignore his own declarations made by his sanction to the world through Isaiah and Amos, as above stated, and send his Son without making it known. The Lord Jesus when interrogated on this point, as recorded by the Evangelist Matthew, (24th), "Tell us . . . . what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" replied in a chain of consecutive events, filling up the interregnum with wars and rumors of wars, nation against nation, famines, pestilences, the rise of false christs and prophets, "the "abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing in the "holy place," and then exhorting us to understand what Daniel spoke. And we do think we understand this much at least, that the above has been fulfilled in a most clear and astonishing manner. And our Lord declared, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Most assuredly the sun was darkened the 20th of May, 1780. Consequently the tribulation must have ended. And the stars have also fallen from heaven. And assuredly but one thing more remains to complete the entire prophetic chain which brings our blessed Lord to his weeping bride. O glory! Hallelujah! what a prospect for his dear saints.

In answer to the question, what next is to be done to complete the destiny concerning the papacy, as eleven predictions have thus far been consummated? It is his destruction by the coming of our Lord, and that event is just at hand. The signs declared to precede his coming are in the past. Mark the last clause of the 29th verse of Matt. 24th. The sun has been darkened, the moon withheld her light the same night, although at the full; the stars fell November 13th, 1833; and now only one more and that brings the crowning glory of prophets, apostles, martyrs and saints. The next event is, "And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Doubtless that will be the same as spoken of by the apostle (Heb. 12: 26, 27), "But now hath he promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only but also heaven." Prepare for it! "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. But you may say, "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Please note this text (Mark 13: 32),—"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels . . . in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Do you not see that the Son of God is in the same category as it respects the knowledge of the day and hour of his coming? The text above is rendered by one thus: "But of that day and hour maketh no man known, no, not the angels, neither the Son, but the Father only." And as the day does not concern us, let us see well to what does. We may know of a certainty when the great day of the Lord is on us.

The signs are all past but the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and that may take place as unexpectedly at any time as the fulfillment of the declaration, "The sun shall be darkened," or "the moon not give her light," or "the stars shall fall from heaven." Who anticipated the day and hour of their accomplishment? It was due the church; and God fulfilled them. And be sure of this, the shaking of the heavens is about due the church. God will soon fulfill it. Jesus has identified us with the generation that shall not pass away until all be fulfilled. Soon he will "send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds." "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly, Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

"Awaken, O chosen and faithful!
And see that your lamps burn bright,
For thick fall the evening shadows,
Then follows the deep, dark night.
The train hath set forth for the marriage,
The Bridegroom is on his way,
And silently cometh the midnight,—
Awaken, and watch, and pray."

Special Seasons.

Reader, have you special seasons for prayer, humiliation and confession? Aside from your secret devotions, closet prayer, family prayer, social prayer, prayer in the great congregation, and prayer ejaculatory, telegraphic, have you another season, weekly or oftener, for renewed heart-searching, self examination, prayer and fasting for special redeeming, sanctifying grace, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon your own soul and upon the souls of others? for salvation to go forth as the light of the morning? Can you safely meet the perpetual overflowing tide of popular seeking, the general unceasing current of worldly-mindedness, without these special, regular heart-searchings, humiliations, and earnest God-seekings? The most devoted, holy, and successful servants of the Most High in all ages have had one day, or a part of a day in each week for special renewed consecration to God. They tell us in their own case, such seasons were indispensable to rapid growth in grace, to spiritual conquest, to holy triumph, the rising above the world, the flesh and the devil.

Brother, sister, we renew the inquiry, have you a special day, or a part of a day for fasting and prayer exclusively God ward, laying all upon the altar of Christ Jesus? In these special devotional seasons for prayer, praise, and deep heart-searchings, do you inquire definitely your state and standing by the unerring word of truth? Do you make this heart-searching a personal business? "Am I in the faith, lovingly, joyfully, mounting up as on eagle's wings?" Am I truly benevolent? Is selfishness entirely extirpated, root and branch? Am I doing everything to please God? Is the spring of every motive pure? Am I doing all to the glory of God, whether I eat or drink or whatsoever I do? Am I a faithful steward, ready at any time to render my stewardship joyfully? Am I squandering nothing of God's bounty on pride, lust or extravagance, or to gratify a false taste or perverted appetite? Am I temperate in all things, keeping my body under and bringing every faculty of my being into due subjection to the law of Christ? Is there anything like a sectarian spirit lurking in my wish or secret corner of my soul? Am I doing all I possibly can for Christ, who has done so much for me? Am I faithful in rebuking sin everywhere? Am I obeying the Lord in condescending to men of low estate, in visiting the poor, the widow, and the orphan? Am I remembering those in bonds as bound with them? Am I shrinking from no duty, from a man-fearing, time serving policy? In a word, can I say with Paul: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live, I live by faith on the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." These are some of the items suitable for reflection on these special days of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

Brief Journal.—No. 1.

Having spent over six years, as a missionary, in the great West, and having nearly worn myself out, for the time being, on my recent grove meeting tour, I concluded to make a short visit to the East, see friends of former years, hear some good preaching, and get recruited in body and spirit, and thus be better prepared to do my work in the West. But it was hard to part with western Brn., even for a brief period. Many wished to extort a pledge from me that I would not desert the West. This I have not thought of doing. Too many have done that already. And western friends have exerted themselves too much to keep me in the field to have me desert them now. Though few in number, and generally poor, they have put their hands down deep into their pockets, to aid me in sounding the judgment alarm. God bless them abundantly.

Upon bidding the Columbia Co. brethren adieu, Bro. Polly (who had upon former occasions given me from five to fifteen dollars at a time) inquired, "Bro. Sheldon, have you got money enough to carry you to the cars?" "O yes, plenty for that." "Well, what will you do when you get to the cars?" "I intend to ride on them." "But they will not carry you free." "I suppose not." "Perhaps they might if you would turn Episcopal minister, and wear a long gown." "I can't afford to do that." "Well, Bro. Sheldon, here are ten dollars to help pay your fare." "But this is too much for you to give." "Perhaps you will need it more than I shall." God bless Bro. Polly.

Upon parting with the brethren in Sauk county, Bro. Knapp said to me, "Bro. Sheldon, if you are going East to stay, you may get some money to go with the best way you can, but if you are coming back, I will try to help you about twenty-five dollars, if necessary." "No, I shall take no such sum of money from you, you have too often given me five dollars or ten dollars, to allow this generosity." "Here, take this money, also five dollars from Sr Barber." "No, not over half of it; you are too generous." "But you will not have enough to pay your fare with." "I shall make out to get East, and run the risk of getting back." But here comes two dollars from Bro. Hedges recently out of the Baptist church; two dollars from Sr Stone's husband,—a theoretical believer, but not a professor, one of the kind called "half brothers" by Eld. Barnes,—God bless the "half brothers" with a full relationship, two dollars from Bro. Brewster, an offer of two dollars from Widow Prethro—refused, one dollar from Bro Morrel, fifty cents from Sister Morrel, one dollar from Eld. Barnes; one dollar from Bro. Eels. But there is some mail in the Post office. Ah! here is a letter from Eld. H. A. King, containing three dollars, and another one from Eld. H. Grew, containing five dollars, but this last was sent to aid me in preaching, not in traveling. God bless the donors, in this world, and in the world to come.

Aug 4th. We started for the cars. Dea. Knapp took us to Sauk City. From thence the stage conveyed us to Mazomanie, where the prophetic "chariots" soon found us, and by paying $7.40 we were classed among the "worthies" to ride to the flourishing city of Milwaukee, and while rushing thither "like the lightnings," we were frequently "recounted." Before dark we were gladly received into the mansion of a money-making landlord, where another deduction was made from my little eastern purse.

Aug 5th. Took passage on the propeller "Wisconsin," for Ogdensburg, N. Y., by the way of the Lakes (for the sum of $24.00), hoping to get measurably rested and recruited by the trip. Have made it a rule to preach but once a week for the present.

Aug. 6th. As our boat is plowing her way through the deep waters, I am thinking more about the wants of the West, than my contemplated visits in the East. Indeed I am going East not only to see friends, and attend general meetings, but also to use my influence to get men of the right stamp to leave all for our soon coming King, and permanently settle in the West. I say men of the right stamp, and also of talents that will compete with the western clergy. "The Lord hath need" of such men in this region. Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin have spoken for one or two each. The salary offered for faithful men is large; only a small portion of it, however, to be paid till Jesus comes. We want men who can endure hardships, who have the cause of Jesus Christ at heart, who believe and feel that the judgment is but a step before them; who can pray as well as preach. Prayerless preachers are not needed out here, nor anywhere else till they are converted. Energetic men of the right faith, and right spirit, are needed. Wisconsin would like to add Elder Grant to her list of preachers, if it were not for his Editorial position. But we can't consent to let him leave that place, even if he would promise to permanently locate in our midst. Not that there are no other good men to fill his seat, but it is not every good man that makes a good Editor. We are not willing to exchange a tried man, to run the risk of an uncertain experiment. The Crisis MUST be so guided as to "feed the flock" with food that will make them thrive, and not with poison. It is too late in the day to try experiments now.

Breast the wave, Christian.

Breast the wave, christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, christian, when the night's longest;
Onward, and onward still be thine endeavor,
The rest that remaineth will be forever.

Fight the fight, christian, Jesus is o'er thee,
Run the race, christian, heaven's before thee;
He who hath promised, faltereth never,
The love of eternity flows on forever.

Lift the eye, christian, just as it closeth,
Raise the heart, christian, ere it reposeth,
Thee from the love of Christ nothing shall sever,
Mount when the work is done, praise him forever.

Envy.

If there existed a dire disease, to which we were all exposed, known to be incurable, if allowed to run to its acme, but could be arrested when in its incipient state, should we not feel anxious to learn (as physicians say) its diagnosis and therapeutics, that we might escape the fatal malady? Well, there is one malady sin is liable to make which, according to the comparison God uses, is incurable, when once fairly seated in the human heart. The Divine diagnosis pronounces this malady to be ENVY. But how do I know this to be an incurable disease? God compares it to "rottenness of the bones," and let us bear in mind Inspiration never overrates in making comparisons—and whoever knew a rotten bone made sound? There have been cases where some portions of the flesh had become putrid and were restored. But who can heal a putrid bone? What are the symptoms of this virulent disease? The first symptoms, according to Cruden, Webster, and others who seem quite in harmony with the Scriptures, is, "to fret and grieve at the prosperity of another, to feel uneasiness, mortification, or discontent, at the sight of superior excellencies, reputation, or happiness enjoyed by another, to repine at another's prosperity—to hate him on that account." Says Pollock,

"What made the man of ENVY what he was,
Was worth in others, vileness in himself
* * * * Where'er he heard
As oft he did, of joy and happiness,
And great prosperity, and rising worth,
'Twas like a wave of wormwood o'er his soul
Rolling in bitterness."

Professing christian, did you ever feel uneasiness when you saw one of your fellows possessed of superior talents that gained for him much love and respect? When you have seen one possessed of superior personal accomplishments, or more splendid equipage than yourself, have you never expressed by word, look, or gesture, a hint to their disparagement? Or have you not, when occasion made it proper to speak of the virtues and talents of another, maintained a strict silence, because you felt regret at such rising worth? If so, you are in danger! for the monster ENVY has found a lurking place in some secret recess of the heart,—though in embryo, rest assured it is there, and if suffered to remain, will become a hydra-headed monster, baffling human power though it be a Hercules! How different from the Gospel sympathy we are taught to cherish: "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." The envious heart reverses this scripture, rejoicing at another's tears, and feeling sorrow at another's joy.

On reading the seventy-third Psalm, we find David came very near being drowned in perdition for sipping one draught from this poisonous fount. But he immediately had recourse to the divine sanative—God's sanctuary—and was healed. But hear him acknowledge the debasing influence of the first stages of this disease: "So foolish was I, and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee."

But if the first stages of this disease are so direful, should its incurability excite our astonishment when fully matured? But what are the symptoms when matured? Foul slander, theft, murder, in fine, anything that can mar, distress or destroy the one more privileged than the possessor of this diabolical passion. The case of Cain affords an example in point. He saw his brother peculiarly blessed of heaven, enjoying that peace and quiet assurance which is the effect of righteousness. His envy knows no bounds until he terminated the happiness by imbruing his hands in his brother's blood.

Paul prayed to be delivered from unreasonable men. Now what sin so unreasonable as Envy? How perfectly unreasonable and serpent-like to use any means to abuse another, because you fancy him happier than yourself. To conceive ill-will against one who has attacked none of your rights, nor done you any injury, solely because he is more prosperous or happier than yourself, is, as one remarks, "unnatural." Yes, it is diabolical. Such an one is to be avoided with all cautiousness, for, as the wise man inquires, "Who is able to stand before envy?"

The church in the wilderness must, it would seem, have been broken up by Envy, had not God interposed with his dissecting knife and severed the putrid mass, thus saving a part of the body. "They envied Moses," says the Psalmist, and why? Because he held a little higher office in the church than they did. But they should have thought whether God put him there, or whether he forced himself up there. So assiduous was he in his labors, as to excite the sympathy of outsiders (Ex. 18: 18), and he really seemed to do the work of God up right; but, alas! they possessed this incurable disease, could not endure the idea of having one above them, and so they persuaded some of the influential of the church to join in their tirade against Moses and Aaron, accusing them of lording it over the rest, that they desired to rule, etc.—Num. 16. Moses was the meekest man in the world, but he did not possess that passive tameness which would suffer the law of God to be belied without boldly confronting the same.

There always has been, and probably always will be, some restless, uneasy spirits who never can "let well enough alone." How painful to be in the society of those who feel disquietude at the happiness and prosperity of others! Whatever else may come into the church of God, may Heaven preserve it from the foul monster Envy! There are two moral diseases which seem incurable: blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, and envy. And so if there is a member of the body that has this disease fairly seated, the dissecting knife might as well be used at once, ere the whole body is diseased. May Heaven preserve the "little flock," who are waiting for the coming and kingdom of Christ, from feeling uneasiness because they see others possess more of the shining dust of earth than themselves!

Beloved, the last heir will soon become of age, and Jehovah is to be the Administrator on the estate of the saints, when he will take all the kingdoms under the whole heavens and give them to his "little flock", not for a limited period, but they are to possess them for a period commensurate with the existence of the great I AM.

Then we will wait in sweet contentment a little while, and as I look at the signs of the times it seems to me it must be a VERY little while ere God's family will be rich and honorable.

A Glance at our World.—No. 8.

Take, if you please, kind readers, the Temperance Reform. For awhile it swept all before it, but, alas! it was of short duration, it soon took a retrogade move, and now if something exciting and novel is presented, it has but small interest. It doubtless has made its last move on the great stage of earth. Men of our day have a morbid fancy, they gloat over the scenes of wild carnage on the battle field. So it is with the Moral Reform and Anti-Slavery Societies, and, in fact, with the whole list. How many have dreamed of the happy days of the Millennium, with all its accompanying glory, when the world would be so much improved that sin would not be found in it. But, alas! these dreams are all illusory. It is in vain that man attempts to make a paradise of this corrupt earth. The Adamic curse with all its consequences is upon it, and all nature groans in sympathy; and poor fallen man, surrounded with ills on every hand, lifts up his voice in supplicating tones for deliverance from this state of death and corruption. He must of necessity be a pilgrim and stranger. It is not his home. Death reigns. The groans and sighs of the dying are upon every breeze. How often must he exclaim from his inmost soul—

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

Yes, the scenes of moral and physical desolation which continually surround us will cause the man, whose eyes are open to the true state of our world, to sigh for the reign of the King of peace; and though that day must be ushered in with the dread judgment scenes, still he will pray, "Thy kingdom come." The world [illegible] by the delay of [illegible]

Let any one take a survey of the whole human family spread over the entire globe, and what a mass of corruption, sin, degradation and crime! Who can contemplate it without loathing from his inmost soul this present evil world, and desiring that there may be an end put to these evils? We might take each nation separately, and examine the moral character of those who compose it, until we had gone through the whole list, and oh! what a sad catalogue should we have of the immorality of kings, queens, members of parliament, authors, presidents, cabinets, and men in every walk in life. But we forbear. Allowing that the moral condition of the world might be much improved, that some system might be adopted by which the whole human family might be much better, and consequently much happier; that the law of love might prevail from east to west and from north to south;—still there would be insurmountable obstacles in the way of this earth being the abode of happiness, over which poor finite man could have no influence. For though every member of the human family were in a moral condition and pecuniary manner fitted for happiness, yet he would be under the reign of the fell tyrant—Death; and consequently be subjected to sighs, groans and tears. He would still be reminded that this is not his home, that he was a mere pilgrim, lonely and sad, too,—for his friends would be comforters but for a day; like phantoms their dear forms would vanish, and the heart would be left desolate and sad. Yet the christian is buoyed up with the thrilling assurance, "They shall come again from the land of the enemy," and death shall have no more dominion over them.

But there is no hope for fallen man only through Christ, who is the resurrection and life. If the human family could but see their lost condition, and the degraded and hopeless state of the world, with what joy would they embrace the promise of a future world of life, which is to be sinless, deathless, and sorrowless. But, alas! few see the world as it is. The mass float down the tide of time, regardless of little but present enjoyment and gratification. Tell them of a world pure and holy, such as is promised to the just, and it fails to affect them. It meets with no response from them; their treasure is on earth; and though moth and rust have often corrupted, yet they are putting forth all their efforts still and hope to preserve them secure.

Alas! for the folly of man. Strange that he will continue to pursue phantoms all the way from the days of youth till white-headed—from the cradle to the grave—and scarcely pause to glance at the past, so filled up with harassing thoughts, or attempt to scan the ominous future with its dread realities. Why will man pursue a phantom all through life, never seeking for something substantial, something that earth cannot possibly afford, which calms man's angry passions, hushes his complaint against his Creator—if the storm scatters his property to the winds, he does not repine. If the fire levels his dwelling-place on earth, he does not indulge that feeling of despair which those who have no hope in a future world give way to. He feels that he has a building preparing, whose maker and builder is God. Death may enter his family circle and take his loved ones, still he will exclaim, "Thy will be done."

Yes, the joys of this world to the christian have no charm. He gazes away through the telescope of faith to a world of magnificent grandeur—Eden's pristine beauty—trees of life waving in the pure breezes of heaven—flowers that shall never know of blight or decay—union of all God's people—eternally songs of deliverance on every tongue.

Men of this world! seek that better world—that sorrowless, deathless abode, where wars and commotions are stilled.

Full Names.

Heartily glad to see Bro. Munger's remarks on signatures. Now I seldom read an obituary of over a square, especially of strangers. But Hiram Munger is not a stranger, because I have so often seen his name. Consequently, his mother's obituary was read with all the interest that my own mother's could have been. I have often seen initials that I suspected to be old school-mates of [illegible] Falls, in days of yore, when Franklin Academy was young. But, alas! what do we know by initials? Seeing that the Bro. hath spoken, I would have held my peace, but that we sometimes see full names, without full address. We want Post Office and State.

An Invocation.

BY E. THAYER.

"Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."—Psalm 139: 23, 24.

I.

O, Lord, forgive my errors past,
And help me live, henceforth, to thee;
Nor me from thy dear presence cast,
While tossed upon life's troubled sea.

II.

Mould every thought, desire, and deed,—
Conform me to thy holy will,—
Impart to me the grace I need,
And with thy love my spirit fill.

III.

Teach me the way that I should go,
That I from thee may never stray,—
That I the way to men may show
That leads to life and endless day.

IV.

Help me my enemies to love,
And do them good whene'er I can,—
Help me my love for thee to prove
By deeds to bless my fellow man.

V.

Help me to look with charity
Upon the wrongs which others do,—
Reflecting that the faults I see,
Compared with mine, may be but few.

VI.

O make the path of duty plain,
To wage with sin successful strife;
Strike from my spirit every chain,
That I may live a christian life.

VII.

Help me, above all things, to feel
How much, O Lord, to thee I owe;
And by my toils for others' weal,
In goodness day by day to grow.

Evening Shadows.

"The day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out."—BIBLE.

Uncreated benevolence, when it became necessary to inflict judgment, has invariably manifested love in timely warning such as were to feel the rod of his just displeasure. Such was certainly the fact concerning the Noahtic race, the cities of Admah, Zeboim, Sodom and Gomorrah, also the Egyptians, Assyrians, Ninevites, Tyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Grecians, Pagan Rome; and concerning the beloved city of the great King, Jerusalem, judgment was declared in strains of lamentation and weeping by the Man of Sorrows: "The days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

Dear reader, that same merciful God who "spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. . . . Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard." You cannot be so ignorant as not to know that in every instance where God denounced judgment by the prophets, it was most literally and certainly fulfilled. What living monuments of the truth above asserted we have this day, both as it concerns the past and the present dispensation. All that holy seers uttered in lamentation, mourning and wo, has in a most wondrous and literal sense been positively accomplished. Read the historic page. Learn the fate of the above nations, and if you will not search yourself to learn the truths of both the above facts, and also the declaration of Him who wisely ordereth all things, when he declares, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets"; do give credence to those who have spent their lives and have grown familiar with such truths. Will you? won't you? Hasten! do one or the other very quickly. Look at the facts in the past and present.

Judgment-visited cities of the past are all preaching the truth of the prophet Amos—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." O! believe it, my dear reader, do hasten, prepare for the coming storm. The prophetic page is replete with descriptive visions. Signs, symbols, dates and evidences of the solemn fact tell you, if you are not ready, to prepare to meet your God in judgment, and for the child of God to gird himself with watchfulness. The cry has been sounded, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

The same God that spake to our fathers by those lips that he touched with hallowed fire, declared by the Son of Amoz (Isa. 46: 9, 10;) "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else. I am God, and there is none like me, DECLARING THE END FROM THE BEGINNING, AND FROM ANCIENT TIMES THE THINGS THAT ARE NOT YET DONE, SAYING, MY COUNSEL SHALL STAND, AND I WILL DO ALL MY PLEASURE." Such, dear reader, has been, is, and will be the fact, until his own almighty arm performs all that his mouth has spoken by both the prophets and his Son.

The broad outlines of prophecy have long since been filled out. The jots and tittles are now nearly completed. Rome, gory Rome, where Daniel, the man greatly beloved of God, was permitted to concentrate the last rays of his prophetic vision, has risen, ruled and fallen, precisely as foretold in the above declaration. Look at the facts on the page of prophecy. He was to be "more stout than his fellows." He was. He was to "subdue three kings." He did. He was to "think to change times and laws." He did. He was to "speak great words." He did. He was to make "war with the saints." He did. He was to "wear out the saints of the Most High." He did. The saints were to "be given into his hand." They were. His dominion was to "be taken away." It was. There was to be a consumption of his power. There has been. Now I would inquire of you, can you doubt the only one prediction yet remaining to be fulfilled? If all the above have been so astonishingly verified, can a single one in the programme fail to be accomplished? Be serious. Come, look at the subject candidly. Answer your own conscience. You inquire, what is it?

First, let me remark as above stated, God has spoken to us in these last days by his Son; and as Daniel has declared this power shall be given to the burning flame, accomplished when our Lord shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, at the judgment of the great day, when he shall come to be admired in all his saints, and as that event settles the destiny of the world, it is one of vast magnitude, involving the judgment of mankind. And as God has appointed his Son to judge the world, he most certainly will not ignore his own declarations made by his sanction to the world through Isaiah and Amos, as above stated, and send his Son without making it known. The Lord Jesus when interrogated on this point, as recorded by the Evangelist Matthew, (24th), "Tell us . . . . what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" replied in a chain of consecutive events, filling up the interregnum with wars and rumors of wars, nation against nation, famines, pestilences, the rise of false christs and prophets, "the "abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing in the "holy place," and then exhorting us to understand what Daniel spoke. And we do think we understand this much at least, that the above has been fulfilled in a most clear and astonishing manner. And our Lord declared, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Most assuredly the sun was darkened the 20th of May, 1780. Consequently the tribulation must have ended. And the stars have also fallen from heaven. And assuredly but one thing more remains to complete the entire prophetic chain which brings our blessed Lord to his weeping bride. O glory! Hallelujah! what a prospect for his dear saints.

In answer to the question, what next is to be done to complete the destiny concerning the papacy, as eleven predictions have thus far been consummated? It is his destruction by the coming of our Lord, and that event is just at hand. The signs declared to precede his coming are in the past. Mark the last clause of the 29th verse of Matt. 24th. The sun has been darkened; the moon withheld her light the same night, although at the full; the stars fell November 13th, 1833; and now only one more and that brings the crowning glory of prophets, apostles, martyrs and saints. The next event is, "And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Doubtless that will be the same as spoken of by the apostle (Heb. 12: 26, 27), "But now hath he promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only but also heaven." Prepare for it! "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. But you may say, "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Please note this text (Mark 13: 32),—"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels . . . in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Do you not see that the Son of God is in the same category as it respects the knowledge of the day and hour of his coming? The text above is rendered by one thus: "But of that day and hour maketh no man known, no, not the angels, neither the Son, but the Father only." And as the day does not concern us, let us see well to what does. We may know of a certainty when the great day of the Lord is on us.

The signs are all past but the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and that may take place as unexpectedly at any time as the fulfillment of the declaration, "The sun shall be darkened," or "the moon not give her light," or "the stars shall fall from heaven." Who anticipated the day and hour of their accomplishment? It was due the church; and God fulfilled them. And be sure of this, the shaking of the heavens is about due the church. God will soon fulfill it. Jesus has identified us with the generation that shall not pass away until all be fulfilled. Soon he will "send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds." "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

"Awaken, O chosen and faithful!
And see that your lamps burn bright;
For thick fall the evening shadows,
Then follows the deep, dark night.
The train hath set forth for the marriage,
The Bridegroom is on his way,
And silently cometh the midnight;—
Awaken, and watch, and pray."

Special Seasons.

Reader, have you special seasons for prayer, humiliation and confession? Aside from your secret devotions, closet prayer, family prayer, social prayer, prayer in the great congregation, and prayer ejaculatory, telegraphic, have you another season, weekly or oftener, for renewed heart-searching, self examination, prayer and fasting for special redeeming, sanctifying grace, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon your own soul and upon the souls of others? for salvation to go forth as the light of the morning? Can you safely meet the perpetual overflowing tide of popular seeking, the general unceasing current of worldly-mindedness, without these special, regular heart-searchings, humiliations, and earnest God-seekings? The most devoted, holy, and successful servants of the Most High in all ages have had one day, or a part of a day in each week for special renewed consecration to God. They tell us in their own case, such seasons were indispensable to rapid growth in grace, to spiritual conquest, to holy triumph, the rising above the world, the flesh and the devil.

Brother, sister, we renew the inquiry, have you a special day, or a part of a day for fasting and prayer exclusively God-ward, laying all upon the altar of Christ Jesus? In these special devotional seasons for prayer, praise, and deep heart-searchings, do you inquire definitely your state and standing by the unerring word of truth? Do you make this heart-searching a personal business? "Am I in the faith, lovingly, joyfully, mounting up as on eagle's wings?" Am I truly benevolent? Is selfishness entirely extirpated, root and branch? Am I doing everything to please God? Is the spring of every motive pure? Am I doing all to the glory of God, whether I eat or drink or whatsoever I do? Am I a faithful steward, ready at any time to render my stewardship joyfully? Am I squandering nothing of God's bounty on pride, lust or extravagance, or to gratify a false taste or perverted appetite? Am I temperate in all things, keeping my body under and bringing every faculty of my being into due subjection to the law of Christ? Is there anything like a sectarian spirit lurking in my wish or secret corner of my soul? Am I doing all I possibly can for Christ, who has done so much for me? Am I faithful in rebuking sin everywhere? Am I obeying the Lord in condescending to men of low estate, in visiting the poor, the widow, and the orphan? Am I remembering those in bonds as bound with them? Am I shrinking from no duty, from a man-fearing, time serving policy? In a word, can I say with Paul: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live, I live by faith on the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." These are some of the items suitable for reflection on these special days of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

Brief Journal.—No. 1.

Having spent over six years, as a missionary, in the great West; and having nearly worn myself out, for the time being, on my recent grove meeting tour, I concluded to make a short visit to the East, see friends of former years, hear some good preaching, and get recruited in body and spirit, and thus be better prepared to do my work in the West. But it was hard to part with western Bro., even for a brief period. Many wished to extort a pledge from me that I would not desert the West. This I have not thought of doing. Too many have done that already. And western friends have exerted themselves too much to keep me in the field to have me desert them now. Though few in number, and generally poor, they have put their hands down deep into their pockets, to aid me in sounding the judgment alarm. God bless them abundantly.

Upon bidding the Columbia Co. brethren adieu, Bro. Polly (who had upon former occasions given me from five to fifteen dollars at a time) inquired, "Bro. Sheldon, have you got money enough to carry you to the cars?" "O yes, plenty for that." "Well, what will you do when you get to the cars?" "I intend to ride on them." "But they will not carry you free." "I suppose not." "Perhaps they might if you would turn Episcopal minister, and wear a long gown." "I can't afford to do that." "Well, Bro. Sheldon, here are ten dollars to help pay your fare." "But this is too much for you to give." "Perhaps you will need it more than I shall." God bless Bro. Polly.

Upon parting with the brethren in Sauk county, Bro. Knapp said to me, "Bro. Sheldon, if you are going East to stay, you may get some money to go with the best way you can; but if you are coming back, I will try to help you about twenty-five dollars, it necessary." "No, I shall take no such sum of money from you; you have too often given me five dollars or ten dollars, to allow this generosity." "Here, take this money; also five dollars from Sr. Barber." "No, not over half of it; you are too generous." "But you will not have enough to pay your fare with." "I shall make out to get East, and run the risk of getting back." But here comes two dollars from Bro. Hedges, recently out of the Baptist church; two dollars from Sr. Stone's husband,—a theoretical believer, but not a professor, one of the kind called "half brothers" by Eld. Barnes,—God bless the "half brothers" with a full relationship; two dollars from Bro. Brewster; an offer of two dollars from Widow Prethro—refused; one dollar from Bro. Morrel; fifty cents from Sister Morrel; one dollar from Eld. Barnes; one dollar from Bro. Eels. But there is some mail in the Post office. Ah! here is a letter from Eld. H. A. King, containing three dollars; and another one from Eld. H. Grew, containing five dollars; but this last was sent to aid me in preaching, not in traveling. God bless the donors, in this world, and in the world to come.

Aug. 4th. We started for the cars. Dea. Knapp took us to Sauk City. From thence the stage conveyed us to Mázomanie, where the prophetic "chariots" soon found us, and by paying $7.40 we were classed among the "worthies" to ride to the flourishing city of Milwaukee; and while rushing thither "like the lightnings," we were frequently "recounted." Before dark we were gladly received into the mansion of a money-making landlord, where another deduction was made from my little eastern purse.

Aug. 5th. Took passage on the propeller "Wisconsin," for Ogdensburg, N. Y., by the way of the Lakes (for the sum of $24.00), hoping to get measurably rested and recruited by the trip. Have made it a rule to preach but once a week for the present.

Aug. 6th. As our boat is plowing her way through the deep waters, I am thinking more about the wants of the West, than my contemplated visits in the East. Indeed I am going East not only to see friends, and attend general meetings, but also to use my influence to get men of the right stamp to leave all for our soon coming King, and permanently settle in the West. I say men of the right stamp, and also of talents that will compete with the western clergy. "The Lord hath need" of such men in this region. Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin have spoken for one or two each. The salary offered for faithful men is large; only a small portion of it, however, to be paid till Jesus comes. We want men who can endure hardships, who have the cause of Jesus Christ at heart, who believe and feel that the judgment is but a step before them; who can pray as well as preach. Prayerless preachers are not needed out here, nor anywhere else till they are converted. Energetic men of the right faith, and right spirit, are needed. Wisconsin would like to add Elder Grant to her list of preachers, if it were not for his Editorial position. But we can't consent to let him leave that place, even if he would promise to permanently locate in our midst. Not that there are no other good men to fill his seat, but it is not every good man that makes a good Editor. We are not willing to exchange a tried man, to run the risk of an uncertain experiment. The Crisis MUST be so guided as to "feed the flock" with food that will make them thrive, and not with poison. It is too late in the day to try experiments now.

Breast the wave, Christian.

Breast the wave, christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, christian, when the night's longest;
Onward, and onward still be thine endeavor,
The rest that remaineth will be forever.

Fight the fight, christian, Jesus is o'er thee,
Run the race, christian, heaven's before thee;
He who hath promised, faltereth never;
The love of eternity flows on forever.

Lift the eye, christian, just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, christian, ere it reposeth;
Thee from the love of Christ nothing shall sever;
Mount when the work is done; praise him forever.

Envy.

If there existed a dire disease, to which we were all exposed, known to be incurable, if allowed to run to its acme, but could be arrested when in its incipient state, should we not feel anxious to learn (as physicians say) its diagnosis and therapeutics, that we might escape the fatal malady? Well, there is one malady sin is liable to make which, according to the comparison God uses, is incurable, when once fairly seated in the human heart. The Divine diagnosis pronounces this malady to be ENVY. But how do I know this to be an incurable disease? God compares it to "rottenness of the bones," and let us bear in mind Inspiration never overrates in making comparisons—and whoever knew a rotten bone made sound? There have been cases where some portions of the flesh had become putrid and were restored. But who can heal a putrid bone? What are the symptoms of this virulent disease? The first symptoms, according to Cruden, Webster, and others who seem quite in harmony with the Scriptures, is, "to fret and grieve at the prosperity of another; to feel uneasiness, mortification, or discontent, at the sight of superior excellencies, reputation, or happiness enjoyed by another; to repine at another's prosperity—to hate him on that account." Says Pollock,

"What made the man of ENVY what he was,
Was worth in others, vileness in himself.
• • • • Whene'er he heard
As oft he did, of joy and happiness,
And great prosperity, and rising worth,
'Twas like a wave of wormwood o'er his soul
Rolling in bitterness."

Professing christian, did you ever feel uneasiness when you saw one of your fellows possessed of superior talents that gained for him much love and respect? When you have seen one possessed of superior personal accomplishments, or more splendid equipage than yourself, have you never expressed by word, look, or gesture, a hint to their disparagement? Or have you not, when occasion made it proper to speak of the virtues and talents of another, maintained a strict silence, because you felt regret at such rising worth? If so, you are in danger! for the monster ENVY has found a lurking place in some secret recess of the heart,—though in embryo, rest assured it is there; and if suffered to remain, will become a hydra-headed monster, baffling human power though it be a Hercules! How different from the Gospel sympathy we are taught to cherish: "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." The envious heart reverses this scripture, rejoicing at another's tears, and feeling sorrow at another's joy.

On reading the seventy-third Psalm, we find David came very near being drowned in perdition for sipping one draught from this poisonous fount. But he immediately had recourse to the divine sanative—God's sanctuary—and was healed. But hear him acknowledge the debasing influence of the first stages of this disease: "So foolish was I, and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee."

But if the first stages of this disease are so direful, should its incurability excite our astonishment when fully matured? But what are the symptoms when matured? Foul slander, theft, murder, in fine, anything that can mar, distress or destroy the one more privileged than the possessor of this diabolical passion. The case of Cain affords an example in point. He saw his brother peculiarly blessed of heaven, enjoying that peace and quiet assurance which is the effect of righteousness. His envy knows no bounds until he terminates the happiness by imbruing his hands in his brother's blood.

Paul prayed to be delivered from unreasonable men. Now what sin so unreasonable as Envy? How perfectly unreasonable and serpent-like to use any means to abuse another, because you fancy him happier than yourself. To conceive ill-will against one who has attacked none of your rights, nor done you any injury, solely because he is more prosperous or happier than yourself, is, as one remarks, "unnatural." Yes, it is diabolical. Such an one is to be avoided with all cautiousness, for, as the wise man inquires, "Who is able to stand before envy?"

The church in the wilderness must, it would seem, have been broken up by Envy, had not God interposed with his dissecting knife and severed the putrid mass, thus saving a part of the body. "They envied Moses," says the Psalmist, and why? Because he held a little higher office in the church than they did. But they should have thought whether God put him there, or whether he forced himself up there. So assiduous was he in his labors, as to excite the sympathy of outsiders (Ex. 18: 18), and he really seemed to do the work of God up right; but, alas! they possessed this incurable disease; could not endure the idea of having one above them, and so they persuaded some of the influential of the church to join in their tirade against Moses and Aaron, accusing them of lording it over the rest, that they desired to rule, etc.—Num. 16. Moses was the meekest man in the world, but he did not possess that passive tameness which would suffer the law of God to be belied without boldly confronting the same.

There always has been, and probably always will be, some restless, uneasy spirits who never can "let well enough alone." How painful to be in the society of those who feel disquietude at the happiness and prosperity of others! Whatever else may come into the church of God, may Heaven preserve it from the foul monster Envy! There are two moral diseases which seem incurable: blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, and envy. And so if there is a member of the body that has this disease fairly seated, the dissecting knife might as well be used at once, ere the whole body is diseased. May Heaven preserve the "little flock," who are waiting for the coming and kingdom of Christ, from feeling uneasiness because they see others possess more of the shining dust of earth than themselves!

Beloved, the last heir will soon become of age, and Jehovah is to be the Administrator on the estate of the saints, when he will take all the kingdoms under the whole heavens and give them to his "little flock"; not for a limited period, but they are to possess them for a period commensurate with the existence of the great I AM.

Then we will wait in sweet contentment a little while, and as I look at the signs of the times it seems to me it must be a VERY little while ere God's family will be rich and honorable.

A Glance at our World.—No. 8.

Take, if you please, kind readers, the Temperance Reform. For awhile it swept all before it, but, alas! it was of short duration; it soon took a retrograde move, and now if something exciting and novel is presented, it has but small interest. It doubtless has made its last move on the great stage of earth. Men of our day have a morbid fancy; they gloat over the scenes of wild carnage on the battle field. So it is with the Moral Reform and Anti-Slavery Societies, and, in fact, with the whole list. How many have dreamed of the happy days of the Millennium, with all its accompanying glory, when the world would be so much improved, that sin would not be found in it. But, alas! these dreams are all illusory. It is in vain that man attempts to make a paradise of this corrupt earth. The Adamic curse with all its consequences is upon it, and all nature groans in sympathy; and poor fallen man, surrounded with ills on every hand, lifts up his voice in supplicating tones for deliverance from this state of death and corruption. He must of necessity be a pilgrim and stranger. It is not his home. Death reigns. The groans and sighs of the dying are upon every breeze. How often must he exclaim from his inmost soul,—

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

Yes, the scenes of moral and physical desolation which continually surround us will cause the man, whose eyes are open to the true state of our world, to sigh for the reign of the King of peace; and though that day must be ushered in with the dread judgment scenes, still he will pray, "Thy kingdom come." The world . . . by the delay of [illegible]

Let any one take a survey of the whole human family spread over the entire globe, and what a mass of corruption, sin, degradation and crime! Who can contemplate it without loathing from his inmost soul this present evil world, and desiring that there may be an end put to these evils? We might take each nation separately, and examine the moral character of those who compose it, until we had gone through the whole list, and oh! what a sad catalogue should we have of the immorality of kings, queens, members of parliament, authors, presidents, cabinets, and men in every walk in life. But we forbear. Allowing that the moral condition of the world might be much improved, that some system might be adopted by which the whole human family might be much better, and consequently much happier; that the law of love might prevail from east to west and from north to south;—still there would be insurmountable obstacles in the way of this earth being the abode of happiness, over which poor finite man could have no influence. For though every member of the human family were in a moral condition and pecuniary manner fitted for happiness, yet he would be under the reign of the fell tyrant—Death; and consequently be subjected to sighs, groans and tears. He would still be reminded that this is not his home; that he was a mere pilgrim, lonely and sad, too,—for his friends would be comforters but for a day; like phantoms their dear forms would vanish, and the heart would be left desolate and sad. Yet the christian is buoyed up with the thrilling assurance, "They shall come again from the land of the enemy," and death shall have no more dominion over them.

But there is no hope for fallen man only through Christ, who is the resurrection and life. If the human family could but see their lost condition, and the degraded and hopeless state of the world, with what joy would they embrace the promise of a future world of life, which is to be sinless, deathless, and sorrowless. But, alas! few see the world as it is. The mass float down the tide of time, regardless of little but present enjoyment and gratification. Tell them of a world pure and holy, such as is promised to the just, and it fails to affect them. It meets with no response from them; their treasure is on earth; and though moth and rust have often corrupted, yet they are putting forth all their efforts still and hope to preserve them secure.

Alas! for the folly of man. Strange that he will continue to pursue phantoms all the way from the days of youth till white-headed—from the cradle to the grave—and scarcely pause to glance at the past, so filled up with harassing thoughts, or attempt to scan the ominous future with its dread realities. Why will man pursue a phantom all through life, never seeking for something substantial, something that earth cannot possibly afford, which calms man's angry passions, hushes his complaint against his Creator—if the storm scatters his property to the winds, he does not repine. If the fire levels his dwelling-place on earth, he does not indulge that feeling of despair which those who have no hope in a future world give way to. He feels that he has a building preparing, whose maker and builder is God. Death may enter his family circle and take his loved ones, still he will exclaim, "Thy will be done."

Yes, the joys of this world to the christian have no charm. He gazes away through the telescope of faith to a world of magnificent grandeur—Eden's pristine beauty—trees of life waving in the pure breezes of heaven—flowers that shall never know of blight or decay—union of all God's people—eternally songs of deliverance on every tongue.

Men of this world! seek that better world—that sorrowless, deathless abode, where wars and commotions are stilled.

Full Names.

Heartily glad to see Bro. Munger's remarks on signatures. Now I seldom read an obituary of over a square, especially of strangers. But Hiram Munger is not a stranger, because I have so often seen his name. Consequently, his mother's obituary was read with all the interest that my own mother's could have been. I have often seen initials that I suspected to be old school-mates of Shelburne Falls, in days of yore, when Franklin Academy was young. But, alas! what do we know by initials? Seeing that the Bro. hath spoken, I would have held my peace, but that we sometimes see full names, without full address. We want Post Office and State. [illegible]

An Invocation.

BY R. THAYER.

"Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."—Psalm 139: 23, 24.

I.

O, Lord, forgive my errors past,
And help me live, henceforth, to thee;
Nor me from thy dear presence cast,
While tossed upon life's troubled sea.

II.

Mould every thought, desire, and deed,—
Conform me to thy holy will,—
Impart to me the grace I need,
And with thy love my spirit fill.

III.

Teach me the way that I should go,
That I from thee may never stray,—
That I the way to men may show
That leads to life and endless day.

IV.

Help me my enemies to love,
And do them good whene'er I can,—
Help me my love for thee to prove
By deeds to bless my fellow man.

V.

Help me to look with charity
Upon the wrongs which others do,—
Reflecting that the faults I see,
Compared with mine, may be but few.

VI.

O make the path of duty plain,
To wage with sin successful strife;
Strike from my spirit every chain,
That I may live a christian life.

VII.

Help me, above all things, to feel
How much, O Lord, to thee I owe;
And by my toils for others' weal,
In goodness day by day to grow.

Evening Shadows.

"The day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out."—BIBLE.

Uncreated benevolence, when it became necessary to inflict judgment, has invariably manifested love in timely warning such as were to feel the rod of his just displeasure. Such was certainly the fact concerning the Noahtic race, the cities of Admah, Zeboim, Sodom and Gomorrah, also the Egyptians, Assyrians, Ninevites, Tyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Grecians, Pagan Rome; and concerning the beloved city of the great King, Jerusalem, judgment was declared in strains of lamentation and weeping by the Man of Sorrows: "The days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

Dear reader, that same merciful God who "spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. . . . Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard." You cannot be so ignorant as not to know that in every instance where God denounced judgment by the prophets, it was most literally and certainly fulfilled. What living monuments of the truth above asserted we have this day, both as it concerns the past and the present dispensation. All that holy seers uttered in lamentation, mourning and wo, has in a most wondrous and literal sense been positively accomplished. Read the historic page. Learn the fate of the above nations, and if you will not search yourself to learn the truths of both the above facts, and also the declaration of Him who wisely ordereth all things, when he declares, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets"; do give credence to those who have spent their lives and have grown familiar with such truths. Will you? won't you? Hasten! do one or the other very quickly. Look at the facts in the past and present.

Judgment-visited cities of the past are all preaching the truth of the prophet Amos—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." O! believe it, my dear reader, do hasten, prepare for the coming storm. The prophetic page is replete with descriptive visions. Signs, symbols, dates and evidences of the solemn fact tell you, if you are not ready, to prepare to meet your God in judgment, and for the child of God to gird himself with watchfulness. The cry has been sounded, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

The same God that spake to our fathers by those lips that he touched with hallowed fire, declared by the Son of Amoz (Isa. 46: 9, 10;) "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else. I am God, and there is none like me, DECLARING THE END FROM THE BEGINNING, AND FROM ANCIENT TIMES THE THINGS THAT ARE NOT YET DONE, SAYING, MY COUNSEL SHALL STAND, AND I WILL DO ALL MY PLEASURE." Such, dear reader, has been, is, and will be the fact, until his own almighty arm performs all that his mouth has spoken by both the prophets and his Son.

The broad outlines of prophecy have long since been filled out. The jots and tittles are now nearly completed. Rome, gory Rome, where Daniel, the man greatly beloved of God, was permitted to concentrate the last rays of his prophetic vision, has risen, ruled and fallen, precisely as foretold in the above declaration. Look at the facts on the page of prophecy. He was to be "more stout than his fellows." He was. He was to "subdue three kings." He did. He was to "think to change times and laws." He did. He was to "speak great words." He did. He was to make "war with the saints." He did. He was to "wear out the saints of the Most High." He did. The saints were to "be given into his hand." They were. His dominion was to "be taken away." It was. There was to be a consumption of his power. There has been. Now I would inquire of you, can you doubt the only one prediction yet remaining to be fulfilled? If all the above have been so astonishingly verified, can a single one in the programme fail to be accomplished? Be serious. Come, look at the subject candidly. Answer your own conscience. You inquire, what is it?

First, let me remark as above stated, God has spoken to us in these last days by his Son; and as Daniel has declared this power shall be given to the burning flame, accomplished when our Lord shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, at the judgment of the great day, when he shall come to be admired in all his saints, and as that event settles the destiny of the world, it is one of vast magnitude, involving the judgment of mankind. And as God has appointed his Son to judge the world, he most certainly will not ignore his own declarations made by his sanction to the world through Isaiah and Amos, as above stated, and send his Son without making it known. The Lord Jesus when interrogated on this point, as recorded by the Evangelist Matthew, (24th), "Tell us . . . . what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" replied in a chain of consecutive events, filling up the interregnum with wars and rumors of wars, nation against nation, famines, pestilences, the rise of false christs and prophets, "the "abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing in the "holy place," and then exhorting us to understand what Daniel spoke. And we do think we understand this much at least, that the above has been fulfilled in a most clear and astonishing manner. And our Lord declared, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Most assuredly the sun was darkened the 20th of May, 1780. Consequently the tribulation must have ended. And the stars have also fallen from heaven. And assuredly but one thing more remains to complete the entire prophetic chain which brings our blessed Lord to his weeping bride. O glory! Hallelujah! what a prospect for his dear saints.

In answer to the question, what next is to be done to complete the destiny concerning the papacy, as eleven predictions have thus far been consummated? It is his destruction by the coming of our Lord, and that event is just at hand. The signs declared to precede his coming are in the past. Mark the last clause of the 29th verse of Matt. 24th. The sun has been darkened; the moon withheld her light the same night, although at the full; the stars fell November 13th, 1833; and now only one more and that brings the crowning glory of prophets, apostles, martyrs and saints. The next event is, "And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Doubtless that will be the same as spoken of by the apostle (Heb. 12: 26, 27), "But now hath he promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only but also heaven." Prepare for it! "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. But you may say, "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Please note this text (Mark 13: 32),—"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels . . . in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Do you not see that the Son of God is in the same category as it respects the knowledge of the day and hour of his coming? The text above is rendered by one thus: "But of that day and hour maketh no man known, no, not the angels, neither the Son, but the Father only." And as the day does not concern us, let us see well to what does. We may know of a certainty when the great day of the Lord is on us.

The signs are all past but the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and that may take place as unexpectedly at any time as the fulfillment of the declaration, "The sun shall be darkened," or "the moon not give her light," or "the stars shall fall from heaven." Who anticipated the day and hour of their accomplishment? It was due the church; and God fulfilled them. And be sure of this, the shaking of the heavens is about due the church. God will soon fulfill it. Jesus has identified us with the generation that shall not pass away until all be fulfilled. Soon he will "send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds." "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

"Awaken, O chosen and faithful!
And see that your lamps burn bright;
For thick fall the evening shadows,
Then follows the deep, dark night.
The train hath set forth for the marriage,
The Bridegroom is on his way,
And silently cometh the midnight;—
Awaken, and watch, and pray."

Special Seasons.

Reader, have you special seasons for prayer, humiliation and confession? Aside from your secret devotions, closet prayer, family prayer, social prayer, prayer in the great congregation, and prayer ejaculatory, telegraphic, have you another season, weekly or oftener, for renewed heart-searching, self examination, prayer and fasting for special redeeming, sanctifying grace, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon your own soul and upon the souls of others? for salvation to go forth as the light of the morning? Can you safely meet the perpetual overflowing tide of popular seeking, the general unceasing current of worldly-mindedness, without these special, regular heart-searchings, humiliations, and earnest God-seekings? The most devoted, holy, and successful servants of the Most High in all ages have had one day, or a part of a day in each week for special renewed consecration to God. They tell us in their own case, such seasons were indispensable to rapid growth in grace, to spiritual conquest, to holy triumph, the rising above the world, the flesh and the devil.

Brother, sister, we renew the inquiry, have you a special day, or a part of a day for fasting and prayer exclusively Godward, laying all upon the altar of Christ Jesus? In these special devotional seasons for prayer, praise, and deep heart-searchings, do you inquire definitely your state and standing by the unerring word of truth? Do you make this heart-searching a personal business? "Am I in the faith, lovingly, joyfully, mounting up as on eagle's wings?" Am I truly benevolent? Is selfishness entirely extirpated, root and branch? Am I doing everything to please God? Is the spring of every motive pure? Am I doing all to the glory of God, whether I eat or drink or whatsoever I do? Am I a faithful steward, ready at any time to render my stewardship joyfully? Am I squandering nothing of God's bounty on pride, lust or extravagance, or to gratify a false taste or perverted appetite? Am I temperate in all things, keeping my body under and bringing every faculty of my being into due subjection to the law of Christ? Is there anything like a sectarian spirit lurking in my wish or secret corner of my soul? Am I doing all I possibly can for Christ, who has done so much for me? Am I faithful in rebuking sin everywhere? Am I obeying the Lord in condescending to men of low estate, in visiting the poor, the widow, and the orphan? Am I remembering those in bonds as bound with them? Am I shrinking from no duty, from a man-fearing, time serving policy? In a word, can I say with Paul: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live, I live by faith on the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." These are some of the items suitable for reflection on these special days of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

Brief Journal.—No. 1.

Having spent over six years, as a missionary, in the great West; and having nearly worn myself out, for the time being, on my recent grove meeting tour, I concluded to make a short visit to the East, see friends of former years, hear some good preaching, and get recruited in body and spirit, and thus be better prepared to do my work in the West. But it was hard to part with western Bro., even for a brief period. Many wished to extort a pledge from me that I would not desert the West. This I have not thought of doing. Too many have done that already. And western friends have exerted themselves too much to keep me in the field to have me desert them now. Though few in number, and generally poor, they have put their hands down deep into their pockets, to aid me in sounding the judgment alarm. God bless them abundantly.

Upon bidding the Columbia Co. brethren adieu, Bro. Polly (who had upon former occasions given me from five to fifteen dollars at a time) inquired, "Bro. Sheldon, have you got money enough to carry you to the cars?" "O yes, plenty for that." "Well, what will you do when you get to the cars?" "I intend to ride on them." "But they will not carry you free." "I suppose not." "Perhaps they might if you would turn Episcopal minister, and wear a long gown." "I can't afford to do that." "Well, Bro. Sheldon, here are ten dollars to help pay your fare." "But this is too much for you to give." "Perhaps you will need it more than I shall." God bless Bro. Polly.

Upon parting with the brethren in Sauk county, Bro. Knapp said to me, "Bro. Sheldon, if you are going East to stay, you may get some money to go with the best way you can; but if you are coming back, I will try to help you about twenty-five dollars, if necessary." "No, I shall take no such sum of money from you; you have too often given me five dollars or ten dollars, to allow this generosity." "Here, take this money; also five dollars from Sr. Barber." "No, not over half of it; you are too generous." "But you will not have enough to pay your fare with." "I shall make out to get East, and run the risk of getting back." But here comes two dollars from Bro. Hedges recently out of the Baptist church; two dollars from Sr. Stone's husband,—a theoretical believer, but not a professor, one of the kind called "half brothers" by Eld. Barnes,—God bless the "half brothers" with a full relationship; two dollars from Bro. Brewster, an offer of two dollars from Widow Prethro—refused; one dollar from Bro. Morrel; fifty cents from Sister Morrel; one dollar from Eld. Barnes; one dollar from Bro. Eels. But there is some mail in the Post office. Ah! here is a letter from Eld. H. A. King, containing three dollars; and another one from Eld. H. Grew, containing five dollars; but this last was sent to aid me in preaching, not in traveling. God bless the donors, in this world, and in the world to come.

Aug. 4th. We started for the cars. Dea. Knapp took us to Sauk City. From thence the stage conveyed us to Mazomanie, where the prophetic "chariots" soon found us, and by paying $7.40 we were classed among the "worthies" to ride to the flourishing city of Milwaukee; and while rushing thither "like the lightnings," we were frequently "recounted." Before dark we were gladly received into the mansion of a money-making landlord, where another deduction was made from my little eastern purse.

Aug. 5th. Took passage on the propeller "Wisconsin," for Ogdensburg, N. Y., by the way of the Lakes (for the sum of $24.00), hoping to get measurably rested and recruited by the trip. Have made it a rule to preach but once a week for the present.

Aug. 6th. As our boat is plowing her way through the deep waters, I am thinking more about the wants of the West, than my contemplated visits in the East. Indeed I am going East not only to see friends, and attend general meetings, but also to use my influence to get men of the right stamp to leave all for our soon coming King, and permanently settle in the West. I say men of the right stamp, and also of talents that will compete with the western clergy. "The Lord hath need" of such men in this region. Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin have spoken for one or two each. The salary offered for faithful men is large; only a small portion of it, however, to be paid till Jesus comes. We want men who can endure hardships, who have the cause of Jesus Christ at heart, who believe and feel that the judgment is but a step before them; who can pray as well as preach. Prayerless preachers are not needed out here, nor anywhere else till they are converted. Energetic men of the right faith, and right spirit, are needed. Wisconsin would like to add Elder Grant to her list of preachers, if it were not for his Editorial position. But we can't consent to let him leave that place, even if he would promise to permanently locate in our midst. Not that there are no other good men to fill his seat, but it is not every good man that makes a good Editor. We are not willing to exchange a tried man, to run the risk of an uncertain experiment. The Crisis MUST be so guided as to "feed the flock" with food that will make them thrive, and not with poison. It is too late in the day to try experiments now. W. SHELDON.

Breast the wave, Christian.

Breast the wave, christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, christian, when the night's longest;
Onward, and onward still be thine endeavor,
The rest that remaineth will be forever.

Fight the fight, christian, Jesus is o'er thee,
Run the race, christian, heaven's before thee;
He who hath promised, faltereth never;
The love of eternity flows on forever.

Lift the eye, christian, just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, christian, ere it reposeth;
Thee from the love of Christ nothing shall sever,
Mount when the work is done; praise him forever.

Envy.

If there existed a dire disease, to which we were all exposed, known to be incurable, if allowed to run to its acme, but could be arrested when in its incipient state, should we not feel anxious to learn (as physicians say) its diagnosis and therapeutics, that we might escape the fatal malady? Well, there is one malady sin is liable to make which, according to the comparison God uses, is incurable, when once fairly seated in the human heart. The Divine diagnosis pronounces this malady to be ENVY. But how do I know this to be an incurable disease? God compares it to "rottenness of the bones," and let us bear in mind Inspiration never overrates in making comparisons—and whoever knew a rotten bone made sound? There have been cases where some portions of the flesh had become putrid and were restored. But who can heal a putrid bone? What are the symptoms of this virulent disease? The first symptoms, according to Cruden, Webster, and others who seem quite in harmony with the Scriptures, is, "to fret and grieve at the prosperity of another; to feel uneasiness, mortification, or discontent, at the sight of superior excellencies, reputation, or happiness enjoyed by another, to repine at another's prosperity—to hate him on that account." Says Pollock,

"What made the man of ENVY what he was,
Was worth in others, vileness in himself.
• • • • Whene'er he heard
As oft he did, of joy and happiness,
And great prosperity, and rising worth,
'Twas like a wave of wormwood o'er his soul
Rolling in bitterness."

Professing christian, did you ever feel uneasiness when you saw one of your fellows possessed of superior talents that gained for him much love and respect? When you have seen one possessed of superior personal accomplishments, or more splendid equipage than yourself, have you never expressed by word, look, or gesture, a hint to their disparagement? Or have you not, when occasion made it proper to speak of the virtues and talents of another, maintained a strict silence, because you felt regret at such rising worth? If so, you are in danger! for the monster ENVY has found a lurking place in some secret recess of the heart,—though in embryo, rest assured it is there, and if suffered to remain, will become a hydra-headed monster, baffling human power though it be a Hercules! How different from the Gospel sympathy we are taught to cherish: "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." The envious heart reverses this scripture, rejoicing at another's tears, and feeling sorrow at another's joy.

On reading the seventy-third Psalm, we find David came very near being drowned in perdition for sipping one draught from this poisonous fount. But he immediately had recourse to the divine sanative—God's sanctuary—and was healed. But hear him acknowledge the debasing influence of the first stages of this disease: "So foolish was I, and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee."

But if the first stages of this disease are so direful, should its incurability excite our astonishment when fully matured? But what are the symptoms when matured? Foul slander, theft, murder, in fine, anything that can mar, distress or destroy the one more privileged than the possessor of this diabolical passion. The case of Cain affords an example in point. He saw his brother peculiarly blessed of heaven, enjoying that peace and quiet assurance which is the effect of righteousness. His envy knows no bounds until he [illegible] happiness by imbruing his hands in his brother's blood.

Paul prayed to be delivered from unreasonable men. Now what sin so unreasonable as Envy? How perfectly unreasonable and serpent-like to use any means to abuse another, because you fancy him happier than yourself. To conceive ill-will against one who has attacked none of your rights, nor done you any injury, solely because he is more prosperous or happier than yourself, is, as one remarks, "unnatural." Yes, it is diabolical. Such an one is to be avoided with all cautiousness, for, as the wise man inquires, "Who is able to stand before envy?"

The church in the wilderness must, it would seem, have been broken up by Envy, had not God interposed with his dissecting knife and severed the putrid mass, thus saving a part of the body. "They envied Moses," says the Psalmist, and why? Because he held a little higher office in the church than they did. But they should have thought whether God put him there, or whether he forced himself up there. So assiduous was he in his labors, as to excite the sympathy of outsiders (Ex. 18: 18), and he really seemed to do the work of God up right; but, alas! they possessed this incurable disease; could not endure the idea of having one above them, and so they persuaded some of the influential of the church to join in their tirade against Moses and Aaron, accusing them of lording it over the rest, that they desired to rule, etc.—Num. 16. Moses was the meekest man in the world, but he did not possess that passive tameness which would suffer the law of God to be belied without boldly confronting the same.

There always has been, and probably always will be, some restless, uneasy spirits who never can "let well enough alone." How painful to be in the society of those who feel disquietude at the happiness and prosperity of others! Whatever else may come into the church of God, may Heaven preserve it from the foul monster Envy! There are two moral diseases which seem incurable: blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, and envy. And so if there is a member of the body that has this disease fairly seated, the dissecting knife might as well be used at once, ere the whole body is diseased. May Heaven preserve the "little flock," who are waiting for the coming and kingdom of Christ, from feeling uneasiness because they see others possess more of the shining dust of earth than themselves!

Beloved, the last heir will soon become of age, and Jehovah is to be the Administrator on the estate of the saints, when he will take all the kingdoms under the whole heavens and give them to his "little flock"; not for a limited period, but they are to possess them for a period commensurate with the existence of the great I AM.

Then we will wait in sweet contentment a little while, and as I look at the signs of the times it seems to me it must be a VERY little while ere God's family will be rich and honorable. B. MATHEWSON.

A Glance at our World.—No. 8.

Take, if you please, kind readers, the Temperance Reform. For awhile it swept all before it, but, alas! it was of short duration; it soon took a retrograde move, and now if something exciting and novel is presented, it has but small interest. It doubtless has made its last move on the great stage of earth. Men of our day have a morbid fancy; they gloat over the scenes of wild carnage on the battle field. So it is with the Moral Reform and Anti-Slavery Societies, and, in fact, with the whole list. How many have dreamed of the happy days of the Millennium, with all its accompanying glory, when the world would be so much improved that sin would not be found in it. But, alas! these dreams are all illusory. It is in vain that man attempts to make a paradise of this corrupt earth. The Adamic curse with all its consequences is upon it, and all nature groans in sympathy; and poor fallen man, surrounded with ills on every hand, lifts up his voice in supplicating tones for deliverance from this state of death and corruption. He must of necessity be a pilgrim and stranger. It is not his home. Death reigns. The groans and sighs of the dying are upon every breeze. How often must he exclaim from his inmost soul,—

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

Yes, the scenes of moral and physical desolation which continually surround us will cause the man, whose eyes are open to the true state of our world, to sigh for the reign of the King of peace; and though that day must be ushered in with the dread judgment scenes, still he will pray, "Thy kingdom come." The world [illegible] by the delay [illegible]

Let any one take a survey of the whole human family spread over the entire globe, and what a mass of corruption, sin, degradation and crime! Who can contemplate it without loathing from his inmost soul this present evil world, and desiring that there may be an end put to these evils? We might take each nation separately, and examine the moral character of those who compose it, until we had gone through the whole list, and oh! what a sad catalogue should we have of the immorality of kings, queens, members of parliament, authors, presidents, cabinets, and men in every walk in life. But we forbear. Allowing that the moral condition of the world might be much improved, that some system might be adopted by which the whole human family might be much better, and consequently much happier; that the law of love might prevail from east to west and from north to south;—still there would be insurmountable obstacles in the way of this earth being the abode of happiness, over which poor finite man could have no influence. For though every member of the human family were in a moral condition and pecuniary manner fitted for happiness, yet he would be under the reign of the fell tyrant—Death; and consequently be subjected to sighs, groans and tears. He would still be reminded that this is not his home; that he was a mere pilgrim, lonely and sad, too,—for his friends would be comforters but for a day; like phantoms their dear forms would vanish, and the heart would be left desolate and sad. Yet the christian is buoyed up with the thrilling assurance, "They shall come again from the land of the enemy," and death shall have no more dominion over them.

But there is no hope for fallen man only through Christ, who is the resurrection and life. If the human family could but see their lost condition, and the degraded and hopeless state of the world, with what joy would they embrace the promise of a future world of life, which is to be sinless, deathless, and sorrowless. But, alas! few see the world as it is. The mass float down the tide of time, regardless of little but present enjoyment and gratification. Tell them of a world pure and holy, such as is promised to the just, and it fails to affect them. It meets with no response from them; their treasure is on earth; and though moth and rust have often corrupted, yet they are putting forth all their efforts still and hope to preserve them secure.

Alas! for the folly of man. Strange that he will continue to pursue phantoms all the way from the days of youth till white-headed—from the cradle to the grave—and scarcely pause to glance at the past, so filled up with harassing thoughts, or attempt to scan the ominous future with its dread realities. Why will man pursue a phantom all through life, never seeking for something substantial, something that earth cannot possibly afford, which calms man's angry passions, hushes his complaint against his Creator—if the storm scatters his property to the winds, he does not repine. If the fire levels his dwelling-place on earth, he does not indulge that feeling of despair which those who have no hope in a future world give way to. He feels that he has a building preparing, whose maker and builder is God. Death may enter his family circle and take his loved ones, still he will exclaim, "Thy will be done."

Yes, the joys of this world to the christian have no charm. He gazes away through the telescope of faith to a world of magnificent grandeur—Eden's pristine beauty—trees of life waving in the pure breezes of heaven—flowers that shall never know of blight or decay—union of all God's people—eternally songs of deliverance on every tongue.

Men of this world! seek that better world—that sorrowless, deathless abode, where wars and commotions are stilled.

Full Names.

Heartily glad to see Bro. Munger's remarks on signatures. Now I seldom read an obituary of over a square, especially of strangers. But Hiram Munger is not a stranger, because I have so often seen his name. Consequently, his mother's obituary was read with all the interest that my own mother's could have been. I have often seen initials that I suspected to be old school-mates of Shelburne Falls, in days of yore, when Franklin Academy was young. But, alas! what do we know by initials? Seeing that the Bro. had spoken, I would have held my peace, but that we sometimes see full names, without full address. We want Post Office and State. [illegible]

Tour into Connecticut.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from a tour of which I will sketch a little account for the readers of the Crisis. Wednesday, July 16th, I left my home, bidding all farewell, and with horse and carriage drove to Worcester in time to preach in the evening; and although it was excessively warm, a good congregation came together to hear about the certainty of a coming Lord. Their cheerful countenances indicated their love for the doctrine, and that their heads were uplifted, knowing redemption is nigh.

The 17th, I rode to Palmer, and found a welcome home for the night with Bro. Higgins and family, who are still interested, and doing what they can to keep others alive and ready to meet the Lord, by holding meetings and preaching the word of life.

The 18th, I rode leisurely to Springfield, calling upon my true friend Bro. Ladd and family. Here I stayed long enough to rest and refresh myself; then continued my journey, and soon found myself in Conn., which I learned by the absence of guide-boards at the forks of the roads. Here we have to get along the best way we can, by the use of our tongue, if we can see any one of whom to inquire the way; if not, we use our best judgment and take all the comfort we can by thinking we are on the right road. But I found both failed. Like many theologically, I was out of the way. But before dark I found I was in Canton, and soon brought up to Bro. Woodruff's, where I was as glad to stay as they were to have me. Here I was well cared for, and ere the morning had risen, myself and steed were somewhat rested. I resumed my journey over the hills to Newfield. After my patience had become almost exhausted, going up and down and crooking about, at length I met a country woman. Said I, Is this the right way to Bakerville? "It is, and perfectly straight." So I rode on, making a few zig zag turns, thinking it was like most of the religious teachings of the day—crooked, although called straight. After much perseverance, I found myself at Burrville, the place of that fearful catastrophe caused by the breaking away of a reservoir, when the water came rushing down upon the village, with fearful velocity, uprooting large trees, sweeping everything in its course, carrying away mills, bridges, a house, and doing much damage. The people had to evacuate in a moment Some were carried down stream by the water. One little boy was lost out of his father's arms, in the water, and has never been found. After viewing the fearful work the flood had made, I went on, and called to make some inquiry about the way; and, to my astonishment, I was at the birth-place of Bro. Miles Grant,—the old homestead. Bro. D. Grant resides there; so I soon found where I was. After a stay of a few hours, I next called on Bro. Fyler and their numerous family, whom I found well. They cheerfully granted me a welcome privilege to the hospitalities of their pilgrim home.

Sunday morning. It looked like rain, but we made our way to the house of worship, and found a good number there, and more coming. While dispensing to them the good news, the rain commenced in good earnest, but they stayed all day; and it was a good day for the word of the Lord to freely run. All seemed interested to hear this gospel, so I gave another appointment in two weeks. After resting two or three days at Bro. Fyler's, with Sister Fyler I visited Bro. Davis and family at Goshen. Here I found those of like precious faith, and spent the night, having a pleasant time in talking over the good things of our pilgrimage.

Friday, I went to Plymouth Hollow to look after the little flock I had not seen for six years. Although they did not know of my coming, yet they called out a meeting, and I preached to them the soon coming of our Lord. It was good to see a few here holding fast amid the perils of this fearful hour. I did what I could to strengthen their faith, and encourage them on. Staid with Bro. Cables, and called upon Bro. Adkins of Plymouth. Found them looking for the same "blessed hope."

My next appointment was at Winsted. Our meeting was at Bro. Neal's. They came from all the region. It was what Bro. Whitehead called a "general muster," when all come out for inspection. We had three meetings to look after the readiness of the soldiers for the coming conflict. We found most of them shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. They have been chosen out from the world, and have cast their lot with the company that use only "the sword of the Spirit," and are minute men, ready for any emergency,—heads uplifted, knowing redemption and victory are nigh.

Monday, I rode to Bro. Beach's, New Britain, where I found Bro. J. S. White. Tarried with them for the night, having a pleasant time in visiting, and in the hay field, which Bro. White was enjoying. Next day, left for Hartford, and here I [illegible] but a short stay, not having time to [illegible] the brethren. Things have [illegible] six years. "The world is dark and dreary." I visited the widow of our once loved, able, and faithful defender of the gospel,—Bro. Turner; pointed her for consolation to the living fountain. Shaking the hands of a goodly number of old friends, I spent the night with Bro. Tenant, leaving in the morning, regretting that I could not have the privilege of meeting where we could exhort one another.

Wednesday I returned to Winsted in time for meeting in the evening. Here I met Sister Howell. She is a lonely pilgrim. As this was her first visit since her loved one fell a victim to death; and as this was the place where he labored much, and all were attached to him; our meeting was made solemn on this account, in calling to mind the former days, when some came into the faith through his agency. We felt a good determination to be faithful, and meet Bro. Howell in the kingdom of God. Sister H., although lonely everywhere, has bright anticipations of a better day, when eternal life will be had by the resurrection from the dead.

Friday Eve, I met an appointment previously made at Wrightville, in the schoolhouse; and though very warm, and in hay time, yet a good congregation came together to hear the gospel. I did for them the best I could. I found some of the real lovers of Jesus and his appearing, in this village. All seemed to give the hearing ear, and I hope it did them good.

Sunday, Aug. 3d, I was at Newfield again, and the meeting-house was quite filled with attentive hearers. Some came quite a distance to hear the trump of alarm blown. The Lord, by his Spirit, was present with us. I gave some indications of our whereabouts, the time of trouble soon coming, and the readiness necessary in order to be hid in the day of the Lord's indignation. In the afternoon still more were out, when I had a blessed good time, in Jesus' name, inviting all to come to him and lay hold of the hope set before us in the gospel, promising them one hundred fold with tribulation in this world, and in the world to come life everlasting. It did seem as though many were almost inclined to say, "I'll go, and venture on the promise of salvation through Christ." This is a good place to have meetings every Sunday, where great good might be done with the blessing of God. I purpose to visit them once more. I returned from meeting to my good home Bro. Fyler's, and after taking supper with the family, bidding all farewell, I left for a meeting in the evening at Pleasant Valley. The brethren gathered at Bro. Jones', where we exhorted one another. Thank the Lord, it does good to stir one another by way of remembrance. Although I found the church low and hungry, for want of meetings and food, yet I found the bread of heaven did the children good.

I left Monday, returning through Brimfield, but did not hold a meeting on account of a shower. In this three weeks' tour into Conn., I have greeted many old soldiers, who are fighting "the good fight," and have done what I could to enlist recruits, and urge all to active service, and have the consolation of having done what I could for the good of the cause. I have traveled by horse and carriage in three weeks four hundred and sixteen miles. I am now at home, in good health and good courage, ready to hear the Macedonian cry.

In love, L. Boutell.

Take Notice.

For the good of others, I will warn all not acquainted with the fact, that they should not eat lobsters in dog days, especially with milk. I like to have died last week by so doing. Not knowing this fact, I ate them together as they were set before me; but another time I shall ask questions before I eat, conscience or no conscience. Many that live back in the country, do not know that eating these things together has caused fits, and often death in a few hours. This I have learned of those living by the salt water, since I took my lesson five hours long; some of the time out in the lot on the ground, in the dead of the night, casting up all my accounts with pain and sorrow. Talk about pork killing people! This is a thousand times worse! and while others warn against eating pork, I shall warn against eating lobsters; for they look more devilish than a hog, and I know they are by experience. But I have got about over it, by the help of Dr. Pierce's Restorative Bitters.

Hiram Munger.

Beware!

We understand that the notable G. J. Adams, alias J. G. Adams, alias George Washington Jones Adams, etc. etc., ex-play-actor, ex-Morman Elder, Ex-teacher of elocution, and liar, drunkard and swindler, without any "ex," is operating somewhere up in New Hampshire. As usual, he is a much abused individual, as his cousin, or brother, or some other Adams, cuts up all the deviltry, and he has to suffer all the sins of the Adamses since the original fall of Adam in the garden.

He told the same yarns in Springfield, and found folks that believed them, till they saw him drunk in the street; and [illegible] was about played out.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 20, 1862.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

On the Conn. R. R., tickets will be furnished those who go to the campmeeting by the Conductors—not by the agents at the stations. Passes will be given, which must be indorsed by G. T. Adams, or they will have to pay full fare when they return. We find the only trains from Boston which stop at the camp-ground, leave the city at 4.15 A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M.

Our Coming Meeting.

Our campmeetings at Wilbraham are probably the largest held in the United States by those who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ; and the one about to be held, we may expect to be one of more than usual interest. All things indicate that we shall not meet in that hallowed spot many times more before the coming of our King. The coming one may be our last. We shall expect to see a large number of christian soldiers at camp Wilbraham next week. Let all come fully equipped, having on "the whole of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Be sure and "have your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Without these shoes, we shall be unable to march upon the rough ways of the enemy. See that every part of the armor is in good order before you leave home. Come determined to do your whole duty, and you will receive great strength.

Those who go to campmeeting should go as early in the week as they can, and remain to the close, if they expect to get a rich benefit. By no means go as a spectator, if you wish to get any good. We know of but one sure way to enjoy a campmeeting, and that is to take an active part in the prayer meetings; and by all means do it as soon as you can after you go upon the ground. Those who have had experience need not to be told the importance of this course. It is very seldom that a spectator enjoys a campmeeting. Make some tent your home for meetings instead of wandering around to all. Dr. Franklin said, "a rolling stone gathers no moss," we may say, a campmeeting rambler is a religious spendthrift. If you do your duty at the meeting, you will find it a heavenly place. Resolve, in the strength of the Lord, to consecrate all to his service. Let there be no reserve whatever. Our work is short, but earnest. Feeble resolves, and heartless efforts accomplish nothing in these days. Now is the time for brave men, and daring deeds like those of Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego. Let none fear the fiery furnace, or the lion's den.

Camp Furniture.

Those who have not attended campmeetings, may need a little advice. All should bring their over shoes, umbrellas, over coats, and shawls. You will find them very useful, no doubt, during the meeting. Always go prepared for rain. Bring your own bedding. A quilt for each individual will be sufficient. You can put one half under you and cover yourself with the other half. Bring a pillow case and fill it with straw, or leaves, after you get there. Some bring bedticks and fill them with straw; but you can fix a pretty good bed in the straw of the tents, without the bedticks,—much better than the soldiers have.

Put a piece of soap and a towel or two into your bag, a hair brush and comb.

Each tent's company will need a wash basin, wooden pail, looking glass, some nails, hammer, awl; and if you can bring a crowbar, an inch-and-a-half or two-inch auger, you will find them convenient in pitching your tent, and for other purposes. Bring a few tacks and matches. Lamps and oil will be furnished on the ground.

There will be extra tent room for those who cannot provide tents; but we hope all who can, possibly, will bring them. Wear plain clothing that you will not be afraid of soiling by sitting on the straw. If you wear jewelry—hope you do not—you will do well to leave it at home, as you will be liable to lose it on the campground. Have stout boots or shoes that will be a match for sticks and stubs. Come to work for the Lord, and you will go home rejoicing.—G.

Baptism.

We would remind those coming to campmeeting, who have not been baptized, that there is a very nice place near the campground to administer the ordinance of baptism, where many in past years have been buried with Christ in baptism, and received very rich blessings. We hope many more will come prepared to follow their worthy example, thus showing to an infidel world that they believe Jesus died and rose again; and that their only hope of a future life, if they die, is in "the resurrection of the dead."—G.

Appointments.—As we purpose to get our paper off one day earlier than usual next week, those who wish to have appointments inserted should send them so that they may be received as early as Monday [illegible] Aug. 25th.—G.

Drafting.

Since publishing the proposed petition to the President to exempt our brethren from the use of carnal weapons, which we believe no christian should employ to the injury of his fellow man, our highest civil, military and State authorities have been consulted on the subject of drafting, and they inform us that there is but little probability that a draft will be necessary; but in case it should be, we must take our chances with the rest. They say the President has no power to exempt us. They think we need not worry about the matter, but had better be quiet. The advice is probably the best they can give at present. The worst that will probably be done to any for refusing to kill their fellow beings, would be to put them in prison. Then, perhaps, the Governor, or President, might have compassion on us and grant a release, in compliance with our petition. It will be no worse for us to be put in jail than for Paul and Peter. We have the same Lord to deliver and comfort. Let us be christians at all hazards.—G.

No Paper week after next.

We purpose to give our faithful compositors a chance to rest during campmeeting week, as has been our practice each year; consequently no paper will be issued the week after campmeeting. We propose that our paying subscribers consent to give the cost of No. 25, the omitted number, for the benefit of the poor, who are not able to pay for the paper. This will be but four cents apiece. We think all will gladly make this little sacrifice for their benefit. On this account, the last paper of the volume, dated Sept. 10th, which will contain an account of the campmeeting, will be numbered 25 and 26,—two numbers in one.—G.

Encouraging.—Notwithstanding the hard times, we receive new subscribers about every day. Since Aug. 1st [now 13th], we have received thirty-eight new ones, and had one stoppage. Let the friends of truth double their efforts, as we have but a short time to work before the coming of the everlasting kingdom.—G.

Voting.—We suppose it is understood that all preachers, co-operating with the Advent Christian Association, can vote at the annual meeting of the same, without any appointment by their respective churches; and that delegates are to be appointed in addition to the preachers.—G.

☞ It will be noticed that the Maine Central Quarterly Conference is changed from Bowdoinham to Richmond, Me.—G.

☞ We are requested to say that the Maine State Conference is to be holden in Portland; time not decided.—G.

Horrors of War.

The war is daily becoming more terrible in its aspects. The "black flag," which says to the beholder, "we take and give no quarter," is evidently about to be the ensign of the combatant armies. The following extract from an order of the rebel government gives us an idea of what is coming.

"Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, Richmond.

General Order, No. 54."

After stating their grievances, in several specifications, we read the following:—G.

"Therefore it is ordered that Maj. Gen. Pope, Brig. Gen. Steinwehr and all commissioned officers serving under their respective commands, be, and they are hereby expressly and especially declared to be not entitled to be considered as soldiers, and therefore not entitled to benefit or cartel for the parole of future prisoners of war.

Ordered, further, that in the event of the capture of Major General Pope or Brig. Gen. Steinwehr, or of any commissioned officer serving under them, the captive so taken shall be held in close confinement so long as the orders aforesaid shall continue in force and unrepealed by the competent military authority of the United States, and that in the event of the murder of any unarmed citizen or inhabitant of this Confederacy, by virtue or under pretext of one of the orders herein before recited, whether with or without trial, whether under pretense of such a citizen being a spy or hostage, or any other pretense, it shall be the duty of the commanding General of the forces of this Confederacy to cause immediately to be hung out of the commissioned officers, prisoners as aforesaid, a number equal to the number of our own citizens murdered by the enemy. By order.

The Papal Question.

The Papal question is again engrossing the attention of Europe. The time appears to be at hand to dispose of the Pope and his capitol—the Vatican—and all connected with the seven-hilled city. The Italians are most firmly resolved that Italy shall be free, and that Rome shall be the capitol, which can never take place so long as the Pope holds authority over the city. The taking of Rome seems to be the next event in order, upon the programme of the Italian liberators.

We clip the following from The Catholic of Aug. 9th. 1862:—

"In a speech lately made at Palermo, Garibaldi said of Napoleon:—'The master of France, the traitor of the 2nd of December, under the pretence of screening from harm the person of the Pope, of protecting religion, Catholicism, occupies Rome. A lie! a lie! He is actuated by covetousness, by a robber's lust, by an infamous thirst for empire, he is the first supporter of brigandage! the chief of Southern assassins! People of the Vespers! people of 1860! Napoleon must depart from Rome. If it be necessary, we must resort to a new rehearsal of the Vespers.'"

It is evident the time is not far off when the "ten kings" will commence their terrible work of destroying the harlot. All is working in harmony with the view that Jesus is soon coming. The events of every month add new strength to the argument. To the close student of prophecy, there is now a certainty in the evidence never before presented. We can see no room to doubt that we are in the last generation of christian dispensation. Let every one watch and pray and stand ready to welcome the return of our dear Savior.—G.

Sound Words.

"Hold fast the form of sound words."—2 Tim. 1: 13.

(Concluded.)

Such a presentation of the doctrines of Holy Scripture are sure to carry a saving and sanctifying influence with them. Their power must be felt. They are the arguments which our adversaries can neither gainsay nor resist. In this is discovered the solid foundation and bulwarks of the church, the value of which no man can realize who does not intelligently understand and becomingly appreciate sound doctrine. It is with this view St. Paul exhorts his son Timothy—"Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." And yet many men are indisposed to hear upon the doctrines of the Scriptures. They say, "prophecy unto us smooth things." And an exceedingly attenuated form of christian morals are preferred, with a generous admixture of elegant and pert expressions, to the substantial facts—the bone and marrow of the christian system.

The consequence of this is, the existence in many instances of a very defective form of christianity, professed christians without moral stamina; men lacking in scriptural intelligence and in well settled principles, and liable to be carried by every wind of doctrine that blows; the stern and radical principles of the Gospel being often supplanted by a sickly sentimentalism, that opens the heart to every whim and caprice of Satan. It is on this account the church has been so grievously afflicted, during the few years past, with rationalism, formalism, and the subtle manœuvreings of erratic men, that it is to be feared have insidiously instilled a semi-infidelity into its very life blood. Whereas, pure christianity is invincible to every foe. Its principles cannot be compromised. With its eye fixed upon its pole-star, it drives right on, through fields and seas of blood. Its language is, "God forbid I should glory save in the cross of Christ." Though the very symbol of death, it delights for Christ's sake to take it up, and bear it on as its glorious standard to its journey's end; neither currying the favor nor fearing the persecutions of a God-hating world.

Yet it is perhaps but reasonable to believe that in many instances people are indisposed to listen to very much relating to the doctrines of the Bible, because of the fragmentary and distorted manner in which they are presented; often the skillful appliance of hermeneutics being necessary to cover the most glaring contradictions. Whereas, the truths of inspiration properly and fairly presented, could not fail to convince and please the honest listener; it being a well established fact that the teachings of Holy Scripture are exactly suited to the inherent wants of the human heart. The mind that can discern the beauty of nature in the distant landscape, or in the ornate temple, should not and would not fail to discern the symmetry and tracery of God's hand as displayed in the proper presentation of the doctrines of Christ. So presented, they, instead of repelling, attract; and, instead of making christianity the complex or ungenial thing that some suppose, it is the sine qua non, the very panacea for human sorrow or human woe. It is the glad tidings of pardon to the guilty, life for the dying, and salvation for the lost, over which angels rejoice and cherubim and seraphim give glory to God in the highest.

To such wholesome and sound doctrine we are to hold fast, not only for the value in itself considered, per se, but as the only effectual barrier against the oppositions of a cruel foe. Apostasy after apostasy has come in the church, and yet the enemy is ever on the alert, waiting for the unwary moment when he can give another fatal thrust. So far from his being vanquished, or driven from a single hiding place, he has, like a roaring lion, come down "in great wrath, knowing that his time is short." And now, if ever, the christian needs the exhortation to take unto himself "the whole armor of God." So far from finding the difficulties of these last days less than those of former days, we find, to the contrary, they are increasing on every hand as we near the longed for haven. On the high seas the winds blow fiercely, often threatening to send down the tempest-tossed bark into the deep, yawning abyss below; but on drawing near to port, a double watch must be kept; here are the hidden reefs, the quicksands, the whirlpool, and the distant rocky shore. New skill must be exhibited in governing the ship now; the chart must be carefully studied, and the compass unceasingly watched. So is it with the church in this nineteenth century. Infidelity appears in new but more subtle and not less dangerous forms; the foe is found within and without, as hostile and determined as in former years, and nothing but the most stern, diligent, and manly christian efforts will save us from the threatening perils.

In conclusion, we remark,—1st. From the Scripture argument now adduced, it is evident that the well being of the church, and the final salvation of responsible individuals, depend upon their holding steadfastly the truth as it is in Jesus. Hence the exhortation to "hold fast the form of sound words." St. Paul declares the Gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes." And again: "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain." St. Peter declares in his first general Epistle, "Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren." So also St. James exhorts to "receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls."

2nd. It is also evident that not only the truth, but the whole truth, is necessary to the faithful maintenance of our standing in Christ Jesus. It is the doctrine that God, undertaking the salvation of mankind as rational beings, has given just that which was requisite to effect so desirable an end—neither too much nor too little; and that, therefore, whosoever will withhold or add to that which God has given by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, whether it be the apostate church of antiquity, or the short lived sect of but yesterday's birth, incurs the fearful responsibility of giving, in lieu of heaven's gracious councils, the paltry schemings of fallen and depraved mortals. Such are blind leaders of the blind, and both fall into the ditch together. "All Scripture is given by inspiration, and is profitable." The exhortation is, "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

3d. We cannot too strenuously urge upon the attention of faithful men the peculiar dangers of the last days that are now upon us. We count the Reformation as in the past, and so it is; but that colossal system of idolatry—from whose corruptions the church, by the grace of God, once purged herself—is yet in every land. And though in its temporal relations it is now in its dotage, and with every indication of shortly being cast down, like a great millstone cast with violence into the sea, yet, in the language of the prophet Daniel, it continues to "make war against the saints, and prevail against them." And the same prophet assures us it will continue to do thus "until the Ancient of days" comes, and the judgment is given to the saints of the Most High. See Dan. 7.

The spirit of lawlessness is everywhere present, breaking away from the old and venerable forms of faith; ignoring the wholesome and saving truths and restraints of Holy Scripture, and pressing on as with a frenzy for some new or strange thing that shall satisfy the morbid imagination and the cravings of the depraved mind. On the one hand schools and systems are multiplying, whose watchword is "Reason." Would they speak plainly their sentiments, like the French infidels they would say, "We acknowledge no God but the goddess of Reason." While on the other hand millions are bowing down to their modern Moloch, and invoking the diabolical forces of the unseen world. Surely these are no times for the faithful to sleep at their post! The world, the flesh and the devil are threatening with unheard of dangers the precious interests of Christ's church everywhere. "This know also," saith St. Paul, "that in the last days perilous times shall come."

Finally: While we find in the truths we have contemplated that catholic character that, in the nature of things, utterly precludes their being monopolized by any party or sect, yet is it not reasonable to conclude that that body which holds these truths in their greatest purity, and most comprehensive manner, and exhibits them in their most permanent form, of all others demands our unqualified sympathy and cooperation, be our taste or previous education what it may? And such we claim for that venerable body, 'the Church of the living God the pillar and ground of the truth.' This, be it understood, is not a new thing, or the creature of modern origin. It is not a company of men calling themselves by the name of some modern saint, of however blessed memory he may be; but it is a body whose frame-work was drafted in heaven; whose ordinances and offices are of divine appointment; and whose birth takes date with pentecost of A. D. '33; and within whose folds Heaven's richest blessings are dispensed to men.

Is it said that such a body is only the eldest daughter of "Mystery Babylon, the mother of harlots and abomination of the earth"? Against this we enter our solemn protest, and ask by what logic this venerable body can be counted a daughter of that apostate power, while its acknowledged birth is several centuries previous to the great apostasy? It is well known that when Rome first sent her missionaries to Britain, they found the church (doubtless of apostolic planting) already there, with her preached gospel, her symbols of faith, her ancient hymns and solemn liturgy, wholly independent of the See of Rome. True, during the dark period of apostasy, the truth was held in abeyance, and the church of Christ prophesied in sackcloth; but the promise, "Lo I am with you always," failed her not in the years of her adversity, but was amply fulfilled, to the joy of many of her sons and daughters who faithfully held "fast to the form of sound words."

And when in God's good time she should no longer suffer in this wise, "the earth helped the woman," and this dark and tedious night passed away, she arose and purified herself, and put on her beautiful garments; so that of whatever good others may boast, her sons rejoice that in her ample store-house they find the same good, whether it consist in purity of doctrine, solemn forms, or blessed ordinances. So that one coming—as all may freely come—to enjoy the benedictions that are hers to dispense, needs not, as one has said, to "thrash the creeds of the churches with the stout flail of philosophy, and sift them as wheat, winnowing them with a rough wind, that great clouds of chaff may blow off"* in order to his finding what the same author terms "the old truth." The truths she inculcates are found in her Scriptures that have never been corrupted and are now fearlessly proclaimed in her pulpits, commemorated in her fasts, and celebrated in her holy feasts. To the weary, sin-burdened, and heavy-ladened, who seek refreshment, she bids a hearty welcome; to the rich and to the poor, to the high and to the low, of every name and nation,—because within her hallowed precincts there is room for all. But the adventurer who has a name to make, or who would have the glory of discovering or creating a new religious world, may find what will seem to him more profitable threshing and winnowing in another field.

Let it not be forgotten that the only glory of the church is, the presence of Him who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks—Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of men—whose doctrine is to be preached, ordinances celebrated, and by the merits of whose blood alone sinners can be saved. And in weighing the merits of an ecclesiastical organizaton we say, that alone has claim upon us which, by its credentials, can show how we can most effectually and practically "hold fast the form of sound words."

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

There are always some little necessary things to be attended to in a meeting of this kind, that are often forgotten. First, clothing that is suitable for the occasion. It is no place for dandy or foppish clothing. Get good thick soled boots or shoes to keep the feet dry. Bring your bedding, and leave the extras at home. We will furnish tent room, but cannot bedding. We can furnish any with meat, bread and vegetables, cooked or raw, cheaper than you can bring them, if you wish to board yourself. We have an extra stove on purpose to accommodate those that want hot water. So leave all your tea kettles at home. Dishes we cannot furnish.

Each tent frame, or a spot that was occupied last year, will be preserved for the same until Wednesday morning; after that, forfeited, unless I am notified by letter that the tent is coming. Any one can pitch Saturday the 23d, if they wish, as we shall be on the ground to take care of them until you get there. There will be preaching on the ground, Sunday the 24th, if the weather is suitable.

Come, all ye soldiers, and go into camp once more, before the enemy gets full possession. There will be some new recruits there, and every tent on the ground will be a recruiting tent for a week. This is the fifteenth year since I commenced the yearly campaign in Wilbraham. It may be the last, and we expect it will be the best, if all come to make it so.

Hiram Munger, for the Committee.

P. S.—If any wish to send tents or other baggage before, or at the meeting, they will direct as usual to Hiram Munger, Wilbraham camp-ground, which will be safe until the owner comes.

Ghostology.

Bro. Grant:—I have just read Bro. Wm. Sheldon's pamphlet, entitled "Ghostology," and think it well calculated to open the eyes of those who are not bound to creeds more than truth. I rejoice today that I was ever led to examine and embrace these precious truths of life and immortality only through Christ, "by patient continuance in well doing." I hope this book may have a wide circulation, and do much good.

Tour into Connecticut.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from a tour of which I will sketch a little account for the readers of the Crisis. Wednesday, July 16th, I left my home, bidding all farewell, and with horse and carriage drove to Worcester in time to preach in the evening; and although it was excessively warm, a good congregation came together to hear about the certainty of a coming Lord. Their cheerful countenances indicated their love for the doctrine, and that their heads were uplifted, knowing redemption is nigh.

The 17th, I rode to Palmer, and found a welcome home for the night with Bro. Higgins and family, who are still interested, and doing what they can to keep others alive and ready to meet the Lord, by holding meetings and preaching the word of life.

The 18th, I rode leisurely to Springfield, calling upon my true friend Bro. Ladd and family. Here I stayed long enough to rest and refresh myself; then continued my journey, and soon found myself in Conn., which I learned by the absence of guide-boards at the forks of the roads. Here we have to get along the best way we can, by the use of our tongue, if we can see any one of whom to inquire the way; if not, we use our best judgment and take all the comfort we can by thinking we are on the right road. But I found both failed. Like many theologically, I was out of the way. But before dark I found I was in Canton, and soon brought up to Bro. Woodruff's, where I was as glad to stay as they were to have me. Here I was well cared for, and ere the morning had risen, myself and steed were somewhat rested. I resumed my journey over the hills to Newfield. After my patience had become almost exhausted, going up and down and crooking about, at length I met a country woman. Said I, Is this the right way to Bakerville? "It is, and perfectly straight." So I rode on, making a few zig zag turns, thinking it was like most of the religious teachings of the day—crooked, although called straight. After much perseverance, I found myself at Burrville, the place of that fearful catastrophe caused by the breaking away of a reservoir, when the water came rushing down upon the village, with fearful velocity, uprooting large trees, sweeping everything in its course, carrying away mills, bridges, a house, and doing much damage. The people had to evacuate in a moment. Some were carried down stream by the water. One little boy was lost out of his father's arms, in the water, and has never been found. After viewing the fearful work the flood had made, I went on, and called to make some inquiry about the way; and, to my astonishment, I was at the birth-place of Bro. Miles Grant,—the old homestead. Bro. D. Grant resides there; so I soon found where I was. After a stay of a few hours, I next called on Bro. Fyler and their numerous family, whom I found well. They cheerfully granted me a welcome privilege to the hospitalities of their pilgrim home.

Sunday morning. It looked like rain, but we made our way to the house of worship, and found a good number there, and more coming. While dispensing to them the good news, the rain commenced in good earnest, but they stayed all day; and it was a good day for the word of the Lord to freely run. All seemed interested to hear this gospel, so I gave another appointment in two weeks. After resting two or three days at Bro. Fyler's, with Sister Fyler I visited Bro. Davis and family at Goshen. Here I found those of like precious faith, and spent the night, having a pleasant time in talking over the good things of our pilgrimage.

Friday, I went to Plymouth Hollow to look after the little flock I had not seen for six years. Although they did not know of my coming, yet they called out a meeting, and I preached to them the soon coming of our Lord. It was good to see a few here holding fast amid the perils of this fearful hour. I did what I could to strengthen their faith, and encourage them on. Staid with Bro. Cables, and called upon Bro. Adkins of Plymouth. Found them looking for the same "blessed hope."

My next appointment was at Winsted. Our meeting was at Bro. Neal's. They came from all the region. It was what Bro. Whitehead called a "general muster," when all come out for inspection. We had three meetings to look after the readiness of the soldiers for the coming conflict. We found most of them shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. They have been chosen out from the world, and have cast their lot with the company that use only "the sword of the Spirit," and are minute men, ready for any emergency,—heads uplifted, knowing redemption and victory are nigh.

Monday, I rode to Bro. Beach's, New Britain, where I found Bro. J. S. White. Tarried with them for the night, having a pleasant time in visiting, and in the hay field, which Bro. White was enjoying. Next day, left for Hartford, and here I [illegible] but a short stay, not having time to [illegible] the brethren. Things have [illegible] "The world is dark and dreary." I visited the widow of our once loved, able, and faithful defender of the gospel,—Bro. Turner; pointed her for consolation to the living fountain. Shaking the hands of a goodly number of old friends, I spent the night with Bro. Tenant, leaving in the morning, regretting that I could not have the privilege of meeting where we could exhort one another.

Wednesday I returned to Winsted in time for meeting in the evening. Here I met Sister Howell. She is a lonely pilgrim. As this was her first visit since her loved one fell a victim to death; and as this was the place where he labored much, and all were attached to him; our meeting was made solemn on this account, in calling to mind the former days, when some came into the faith through his agency. We felt a good determination to be faithful, and meet Bro. Howell in the kingdom of God. Sister H., although lonely everywhere, has bright anticipations of a better day, when eternal life will be had by the resurrection from the dead.

Friday Eve, I met an appointment previously made at Wrightville, in the school-house; and though very warm, and in hay time, yet a good congregation came together to hear the gospel. I did for them the best I could. I found some of the real lovers of Jesus and his appearing, in this village. All seemed to give the hearing ear, and I hope it did them good.

Sunday, Aug. 3d, I was at Newfield again, and the meeting-house was quite filled with attentive hearers. Some came quite a distance to hear the trump of alarm blown. The Lord, by his Spirit, was present with us. I gave some indications of our whereabouts, the time of trouble soon coming, and the readiness necessary in order to be hid in the day of the Lord's indignation. In the afternoon still more were out, when I had a blessed good time, in Jesus' name, inviting all to come to him and lay hold of the hope set before us in the gospel, promising them one hundred fold with tribulation in this world, and in the world to come life everlasting. It did seem as though many were almost inclined to say, "I'll go, and venture on the promise of salvation through Christ." This is a good place to have meetings every Sunday, where great good might be done with the blessing of God. I purpose to visit them once more. I returned from meeting to my good home Bro. Fyler's, and after taking supper with the family, bidding all farewell, I left for a meeting in the evening at Pleasant Valley. The brethren gathered at Bro. Jones', where we exhorted one another. Thank the Lord, it does good to stir one another by way of remembrance. Although I found the church low and hungry, for want of meetings and food, yet I found the bread of heaven did the children good.

I left Monday, returning through Brimfield, but did not hold a meeting on account of a shower. In this three weeks' tour into Conn., I have greeted many old soldiers, who are fighting "the good fight," and have done what I could to enlist recruits, and urge all to active service, and have the consolation of having done what I could for the good of the cause. I have traveled by horse and carriage in three weeks four hundred and sixteen miles. I am now at home, in good health and good courage, ready to hear the Macedonian cry.

In love, L. Boutell.

Take Notice.

For the good of others, I will warn all not acquainted with the fact, that they should not eat lobsters in dog days, especially with milk. I like to have died last week by so doing. Not knowing this fact, I ate them together as they were set before me; but another time I shall ask questions before I eat, conscience or no conscience. Many that live back in the country, do not know that eating these things together has caused fits, and often death in a few hours. This I have learned of those living by the salt water, since I took my lesson five hours long; some of the time out in the lot on the ground, in the dead of the night, casting up all my accounts with pain and sorrow. Talk about pork killing people! This is a thousand times worse! and while others warn against eating pork, I shall warn against eating lobsters; for they look more devilish than a hog, and I know they are by experience. But I have got about over it, by the help of Dr. Pierce's Restorative Bitters. Hiram Munger.

Beware!

We understand that the notable G. J. Adams, alias J. G. Adams, alias George Washington Jones Adams, etc. etc., ex-play-actor, ex-Morman Elder, Ex-teacher of elocution, and liar, drunkard and swindler, without any "ex," is operating somewhere up in New Hampshire. As usual, he is a much abused individual, as his cousin, or brother, or some other Adams, cuts up all the deviltry, and he has to suffer all the sins of the Adamses since the original fall of Adam in the garden.

He told the same yarns in Springfield, and found folks that believed them, till they saw him drunk in the street; and [illegible] was about played out.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 20, 1862.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

On the Conn. R. R., tickets will be furnished those who go to the campmeeting by the Conductors—not by the agents at the stations. Passes will be given, which must be indorsed by G. T. Adams, or they will have to pay full fare when they return. We find the only trains from Boston which stop at the camp-ground, leave the city at 4.15 A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M.

Our Coming Meeting.

Our campmeetings at Wilbraham are probably the largest held in the United States by those who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ; and the one about to be held, we may expect to be one of more than usual interest. All things indicate that we shall not meet in that hallowed spot many times more before the coming of our King. The coming one may be our last. We shall expect to see a large number of christian soldiers at camp Wilbraham next week. Let all come fully equipped, having on "the whole of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Be sure and "have your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Without these shoes, we shall be unable to march upon the rough ways of the enemy. See that every part of the armor is in good order before you leave home. Come determined to do your whole duty, and you will receive great strength.

Those who go to campmeeting should go as early in the week as they can, and remain to the close, if they expect to get a rich benefit. By no means go as a spectator, if you wish to get any good. We know of but one sure way to enjoy a campmeeting, and that is to take an active part in the prayer meetings; and by all means do it as soon as you can after you go upon the ground. Those who have had experience need not to be told the importance of this course. It is very seldom that a spectator enjoys a campmeeting. Make some tent your home for meetings instead of wandering around to all. Dr. Franklin said, "a rolling stone gathers no moss," we may say, a campmeeting rambler is a religious spendthrift. If you do your duty at the meeting, you will find it a heavenly place. Resolve, in the strength of the Lord, to consecrate all to his service. Let there be no reserve whatever. Our work is short, but earnest. Feeble resolves, and heartless efforts accomplish nothing in these days. Now is the time for brave men, and daring deeds like those of Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego. Let none fear the fiery furnace, or the lion's den.

Camp Furniture.

Those who have not attended campmeetings, may need a little advice. All should bring their over shoes, umbrellas, over coats, and shawls. You will find them very useful, no doubt, during the meeting. Always go prepared for rain. Bring your own bedding. A quilt for each individual will be sufficient. You can put one half under you and cover yourself with the other half. Bring a pillow case and fill it with straw, or leaves, after you get there. Some bring bedticks and fill them with straw; but you can fix a pretty good bed in the straw of the tents, without the bedticks,—much better than the soldiers have.

Put a piece of soap and a towel or two into your bag, a hair brush and comb.

Each tent's company will need a wash basin, wooden pail, looking glass, some nails, hammer, awl; and if you can bring a crowbar, an inch-and-a-half or two-inch auger, you will find them convenient in pitching your tent, and for other purposes. Bring a few tacks and matches. Lamps and oil will be furnished on the ground.

There will be extra tent room for those who cannot provide tents; but we hope all who can, possibly, will bring them. Wear plain clothing that you will not be afraid of soiling by sitting on the straw. If you wear jewelry—hope you do not—you will do well to leave it at home, as you will be liable to lose it on the campground. Have stout boots or shoes that will be a match for sticks and stubs. Come to work for the Lord, and you will go home rejoicing.—G.

Baptism.

We would remind those coming to campmeeting, who have not been baptized, that there is a very nice place near the campground to administer the ordinance of baptism, where many in past years have been buried with Christ in baptism, and received very rich blessings. We hope many more will come prepared to follow their worthy example, thus showing to an infidel world that they believe Jesus died and rose again; and that their only hope of a future life, if they die, is in "the resurrection of the dead."—G.

Appointments.—As we purpose to get our paper off one day earlier than usual next week, those who wish to have appointments inserted should send them so that they may be received as early as Monday morning, Aug. 25th.

Drafting.

Since publishing the proposed petition to the President to exempt our brethren from the use of carnal weapons, which we believe no christian should employ to the injury of his fellow man, our highest civil, military and State authorities have been consulted on the subject of drafting, and they inform us that there is but little probability that a draft will be necessary; but in case it should be, we must take our chances with the rest. They say the President has no power to exempt us. They think we need not worry about the matter, but had better be quiet. The advice is probably the best they can give at present. The worst that will probably be done to any for refusing to kill their fellow beings, would be to put them in prison. Then, perhaps, the Governor, or President, might have compassion on us and grant a release, in compliance with our petition. It will be no worse for us to be put in jail than for Paul and Peter. We have the same Lord to deliver and comfort. Let us be christians at all hazards.—G.

No Paper week after next.

We purpose to give our faithful compositors a chance to rest during campmeeting week, as has been our practice each year; consequently no paper will be issued the week after campmeeting. We propose that our paying subscribers consent to give the cost of No. 25, the omitted number, for the benefit of the poor, who are not able to pay for the paper. This will be but four cents apiece. We think all will gladly make this little sacrifice for their benefit. On this account, the last paper of the volume, dated Sept. 10th, which will contain an account of the campmeeting, will be numbered 25 and 26,—two numbers in one.—G.

Encouraging.—Notwithstanding the hard times, we receive new subscribers about every day. Since Aug. 1st [now 13th], we have received thirty-eight new ones, and had one stoppage. Let the friends of truth double their efforts, as we have but a short time to work before the coming of the everlasting kingdom.—G.

Voting.—We suppose it is understood that all preachers, co-operating with the Advent Christian Association, can vote at the annual meeting of the same, without any appointment by their respective churches; and that delegates are to be appointed in addition to the preachers.—G.

☞ It will be noticed that the Maine Central Quarterly Conference is changed from Bowdoinham to Richmond, Me.—G.

☞ We are requested to say that the Maine State Conference is to be holden in Portland; time not decided.—G.

Horrors of War.

The war is daily becoming more terrible in its aspects. The "black flag," which says to the beholder, "we take and give no quarter," is evidently about to be the ensign of the combatant armies. The following extract from an order of the rebel government gives us an idea of what is coming.

"Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, Richmond.

General Order, No. 54."

After stating their grievances, in several specifications, we read the following:—G.

"Therefore it is ordered that Maj. Gen. Pope, Brig. Gen. Steinwehr and all commissioned officers serving under their respective commands, be, and they are hereby expressly and especially declared to be not entitled to be considered as soldiers, and therefore not entitled to benefit or cartel for the parole of future prisoners of war.

Ordered, further, that in the event of the capture of Major General Pope or Brig. Gen. Steinwehr, or of any commissioned officer serving under them, the captive so taken shall be held in close confinement so long as the orders aforesaid shall continue in force and unrepealed by the competent military authority of the United States, and that in the event of the murder of any unarmed citizen or inhabitant of this Confederacy, by virtue or under pretext of one of the orders herein before recited, whether with or without trial, whether under pretense of such a citizen being a spy or hostage, or any other pretense, it shall be the duty of the commanding General of the forces of this Confederacy to cause immediately to be hung out of the commissioned officers, prisoners as aforesaid, a number equal to the number of our own citizens murdered by the enemy. By order.

The Papal Question.

The Papal question is again engrossing the attention of Europe. The time appears to be at hand to dispose of the Pope and his capitol—the Vatican—and all connected with the seven-hilled city. The Italians are most firmly resolved that Italy shall be free, and that Rome shall be the capitol, which can never take place so long as the Pope holds authority over the city. The taking of Rome seems to be the next event in order, upon the programme of the Italian liberators.

"In a speech lately made at Palermo, Garibaldi said of Napoleon:—'The master of France, the traitor of the 2nd of December, under the pretence of screening from harm the person of the Pope, of protecting religion, Catholicism, occupies Rome. A lie! a lie! He is actuated by covetousness, by a robber's lust, by an infamous thirst for empire, he is the first supporter of brigandage! the chief of Southern assassins! People of the Vespers! people of 1860! Napoleon must depart from Rome. If it be necessary, we must resort to a new rehearsal of the Vespers.'"

It is evident the time is not far off when the "ten kings" will commence their terrible work of destroying the harlot. All is working in harmony with the view that Jesus is soon coming. The events of every month add new strength to the argument. To the close student of prophecy, there is now a certainty in the evidence never before presented. We can see no room to doubt that we are in the last generation of christian dispensation. Let every one watch and pray and stand ready to welcome the return of our dear Savior.—G.

Sound Words.

"Hold fast the form of sound words."—2 Tim. 1: 13.

(Concluded.)

Such a presentation of the doctrines of Holy Scripture are sure to carry a saving and sanctifying influence with them. Their power must be felt. They are the arguments which our adversaries can neither gainsay nor resist. In this is discovered the solid foundation and bulwarks of the church, the value of which no man can realize who does not intelligently understand and becomingly appreciate sound doctrine. It is with this view St. Paul exhorts his son Timothy—"Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." And yet many men are indisposed to hear upon the doctrines of the Scriptures. They say, "prophecy unto us smooth things." And an exceedingly attenuated form of christian morals are preferred, with a generous admixture of elegant and pert expressions, to the substantial facts—the bone and marrow of the christian system.

The consequence of this is, the existence in many instances of a very defective form of christianity, professed christians without moral stamina; men lacking in scriptural intelligence and in well settled principles, and liable to be carried by every wind of doctrine that blows; the stern and radical principles of the Gospel being often supplanted by a sickly sentimentalism, that opens the heart to every whim and caprice of Satan. It is on this account the church has been so grievously afflicted, during the few years past, with rationalism, formalism, and the subtle manœuvreings of erratic men, that it is to be feared have insidiously instilled a semi-infidelity into its very life blood. Whereas, pure christianity is invincible to every foe. Its principles cannot be compromised. With its eye fixed upon its pole-star, it drives right on, through fields and seas of blood. Its language is, "God forbid I should glory save in the cross of Christ." Though the very symbol of death, it delights for Christ's sake to take it up, and bear it on as its glorious standard to its journey's end; neither currying the favor nor fearing the persecutions of a God-hating world.

Yet it is perhaps but reasonable to believe that in many instances people are indisposed to listen to very much relating to the doctrines of the Bible, because of the fragmentary and distorted manner in which they are presented, often the skillful appliance of hermeneutics being necessary to cover the most glaring contradictions. Whereas, the truths of inspiration properly and fairly presented, could not fail to convince and please the honest listener; it being a well established fact that the teachings of Holy Scripture are exactly suited to the inherent wants of the human heart. The mind that can discern the beauty of nature in the distant landscape, or in the ornate temple, should not and would not fail to discern the symmetry and tracery of God's hand as displayed in the proper presentation of the doctrines of Christ. So presented, they, instead of repelling, attract; and, instead of making christianity the complex or ungenial thing that some suppose, it is the sine qua non, the very panacea for human sorrow or human woe. It is the glad tidings of pardon to the guilty, life for the dying, and salvation for the lost, over which angels rejoice and cherubim and seraphim give glory to God in the highest.

To such wholesome and sound doctrine we are to hold fast, not only for the value in itself considered, per se, but as the only effectual barrier against the oppositions of a cruel foe. Apostasy after apostasy has come in the church, and yet the enemy is ever on the alert, waiting for the unwary moment when he can give another fatal thrust. So far from his being vanquished, or driven from a single hiding place, he has, like a roaring lion, come down "in great wrath, knowing that his time is short." And now, if ever, the christian needs the exhortation to take unto himself "the whole armor of God." So far from finding the difficulties of these last days less than those of former days, we find, to the contrary, they are increasing on every hand as we near the longed for haven. On the high seas the winds blow fiercely, often threatening to send down the tempest-tossed bark into the deep, yawning abyss below; but on drawing near to port, a double watch must be kept; here are the hidden reefs, the quicksands, the whirlpool, and the distant rocky shore. New skill must be exhibited in governing the ship now; the chart must be carefully studied, and the compass unceasingly watched. So is it with the church in this nineteenth century. Infidelity appears in new but more subtle and not less dangerous forms; the foe is found within and without, as hostile and determined as in former years, and nothing but the most stern, diligent, and manly christian efforts will save us from the threatening perils.

In conclusion, we remark,—1st. From the Scripture argument now adduced, it is evident that the well being of the church, and the final salvation of responsible individuals, depend upon their holding steadfastly the truth as it is in Jesus. Hence the exhortation to "hold fast the form of sound words." St. Paul declares the Gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes." And again: "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain." St. Peter declares in his first general Epistle, "Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren." So also St. James exhorts to "receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls."

2nd. It is also evident that not only the truth, but the whole truth, is necessary to the faithful maintenance of our standing in Christ Jesus. It is the doctrine that God, undertaking the salvation of mankind as rational beings, has given just that which was requisite to effect so desirable an end—neither too much nor too little; and that, therefore, whosoever will withhold or add to that which God has given by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, whether it be the apostate church of antiquity, or the short lived sect of but yesterday's birth, incurs the fearful responsibility of giving, in lieu of heaven's gracious councils, the paltry schemings of fallen and depraved mortals. Such are blind leaders of the blind, and both fall into the ditch together. "All Scripture is given by inspiration, and is profitable." The exhortation is, "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

3d. We cannot too strenuously urge upon the attention of faithful men the peculiar dangers of the last days that are now upon us. We count the Reformation as in the past, and so it is; but that colossal system of idolatry—from whose corruptions the church, by the grace of God, once purged herself—is yet in every land. And though in its temporal relations it is now in its dotage, and with every indication of shortly being cast down, like a great millstone cast with violence into the sea, yet, in the language of the prophet Daniel, it continues to "make war against the saints, and prevail against them." And the same prophet assures us it will continue to do thus "until the Ancient of days" comes, and the judgment is given to the saints of the Most High. See Dan. 7.

The spirit of lawlessness is everywhere present, breaking away from the old and venerable forms of faith; ignoring the wholesome and saving truths and restraints of Holy Scripture, and pressing on as with a frenzy for some new or strange thing that shall satisfy the morbid imagination and the cravings of the depraved mind. On the one hand schools and systems are multiplying, whose watchword is "Reason." Would they speak plainly their sentiments, like the French infidels they would say, "We acknowledge no God but the goddess of Reason." While on the other hand millions are bowing down to their modern Moloch, and invoking the diabolical forces of the unseen world. Surely these are no times for the faithful to sleep at their post! The world, the flesh and the devil are threatening with unheard of dangers the precious interests of Christ's church everywhere. "This know also," saith St. Paul, "that in the last days perilous times shall come."

Finally: While we find in the truths we have contemplated that catholic character that, in the nature of things, utterly precludes their being monopolized by any party or sect, yet is it not reasonable to conclude that that body which holds these truths in their greatest purity, and most comprehensive manner, and exhibits them in their most permanent form, of all others demands our unqualified sympathy and co-operation, be our taste or previous education what it may? And such we claim for that venerable body, 'the Church of the living God the pillar and ground of the truth.' This, be it understood, is not a new thing, or the creature of modern origin. It is not a company of men calling themselves by the name of some modern saint, of however blessed memory he may be; but it is a body whose frame-work was drafted in heaven; whose ordinances and offices are of divine appointment; and whose birth takes date with pentecost of A. D. '33; and within whose folds Heaven's richest blessings are dispensed to men.

Is it said that such a body is only the eldest daughter of "Mystery Babylon, the mother of harlots and abomination of the earth"? Against this we enter our solemn protest, and ask by what logic this venerable body can be counted a daughter of that apostate power, while its acknowledged birth is several centuries previous to the great apostasy? It is well known that when Rome first sent her missionaries to Britain, they found the church (doubtless of apostolic planting) already there, with her preached gospel, her symbols of faith, her ancient hymns and solemn liturgy, wholly independent of the See of Rome. True, during the dark period of apostasy, the truth was held in abeyance, and the church of Christ prophesied in sackcloth; but the promise, "Lo I am with you always," failed her not in the years of her adversity, but was amply fulfilled, to the joy of many of her sons and daughters who faithfully held "fast to the form of sound words."

And when in God's good time she should no longer suffer in this wise, "the earth helped the woman," and this dark and tedious night passed away, she arose and purified herself, and put on her beautiful garments; so that of whatever good others may boast, her sons rejoice that in her ample store-house they find the same good, whether it consist in purity of doctrine, solemn forms, or blessed ordinances. So that one coming—as all may freely come—to enjoy the benedictions that are hers to dispense, needs not, as one has said, to "thrash the creeds of the churches with the stout flail of philosophy, and sift them as wheat, winnowing them with a rough wind, that great clouds of chaff may blow off"* in order to his finding what the same author terms "the old truth." The truths she inculcates are found in her Scriptures that have never been corrupted and are now fearlessly proclaimed in her pulpits, commemorated in her fasts, and celebrated in her holy feasts. To the weary, sin-burdened, and heavy-ladened, who seek refreshment, she bids a hearty welcome; to the rich and to the poor, to the high and to the low, of every name and nation,—because within her hallowed precincts there is room for all. But the adventurer who has a name to make, or who would have the glory of discovering or creating a new religious world, may find what will seem to him more profitable threshing and winnowing in another field.

Let it not be forgotten that the only glory of the church is, the presence of Him who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks—Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of men—whose doctrine is to be preached, ordinances celebrated, and by the merits of whose blood alone sinners can be be saved. And in weighing the merits of an ecclesiastical organizaton we say, that alone has claim upon us which, by its credentials, can show how we can most effectually and practically "hold fast the form of sound words."

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

There are always some little necessary things to be attended to in a meeting of this kind, that are often forgotten. First, clothing that is suitable for the occasion. It is no place for dandy or foppish clothing. Get good thick soled boots or shoes to keep the feet dry. Bring your bedding, and leave the extras at home. We will furnish tent room, but cannot bedding. We can furnish any with meat, bread and vegetables, cooked or raw, cheaper than you can bring them, if you wish to board yourself. We have an extra stove on purpose to accommodate those that want hot water. So leave all your tea kettles at home. Dishes we cannot furnish.

Each tent frame, or a spot that was occupied last year, will be preserved for the same until Wednesday morning; after that, forfeited, unless I am notified by letter that the tent is coming. Any one can pitch Saturday the 23d, if they wish, as we shall be on the ground to take care of them until you get there. There will be preaching on the ground, Sunday the 24th, if the weather is suitable.

Come, all ye soldiers, and go into camp once more, before the enemy gets full possession. There will be some new recruits there, and every tent on the ground will be a recruiting tent for a week. This is the fifteenth year since I commenced the yearly campaign in Wilbraham. It may be the last, and we expect it will be the best, if all come to make it so.

Hiram Munger, for the Committee.

P. S.—If any wish to send tents or other baggage before, or at the meeting, they will direct as usual to Hiram Munger, Wilbraham camp-ground, which will be safe until the owner comes.

Ghostology.

Bro. Grant:—I have just read Bro. Wm. Sheldon's pamphlet, entitled "Ghostology," and think it well calculated to open the eyes of those who are not bound to creeds more than truth. I rejoice today that I was ever led to examine and embrace these precious truths of life and immortality only through Christ, "by patient continuance in well doing." I hope this book may have a wide circulation, and do much good.

B. S. Jackson.

A Request.

For the Crisis.

The sisters are requested to leave their sugar scoops at home, and wear a hat to campmeeting, for their own convenience and the good of our eyes. Bring your thick boots, rubbers, and warm clothing. We will do all we can to make you feel comfortable, and then you must try to help yourselves. Come on, and we will greet you on the mountain.

H. MUNGER.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Dayton, 14th inst., NATHANIEL CLARK, aged seventy-six years.

He was born in Elliot, but in early life moved to this town, where he has resided. Although he had exceeded the allotted time of man, yet every thing betokened that he would live to a good old age; but he was suddenly stricken down by accident, and after a week of intense suffering, was finally relieved by death. For more than forty years he has been a practical professor of religion, and throughout life, a zealous advocate of the christian religion. He leaves a large number of relatives and friends to mourn his loss, but who mourn not as those without hope; for when the earth shall give up her dead, we trust that grandfather will come forth, clothed with righteousness, and destined to an eternal inheritance with the people of God. The funeral sermon was preached by Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell, from Heb. 2: 6.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamships Glasgow and Anglo Saxon, we have foreign news from Liverpool to the 7th inst., and Londonderry the 8th.

The Times editorially argues that if England wishes to give the Federals a new impulse, she has but to take some step which can be represented as an interference, and President Lincoln will soon get his 300,000 men, and the chances of peace be indefinitely postponed.

The Journal de St. Petersburg denies the rumors that Russia has joined France in propositions to England for a recognition of the Southern Confederacy and also for mediation.

Parliament was winding up its business The prorogation will take place on the 7th inst.

Garibaldi has issued a proclamation urging the young men to arms in spirited terms.

Victor Emanuel has issued a counter-proclamation denouncing revolutionary schemes, and threatening the rigor of the law on those who disobeyed. He declares that he will move himself in the matter of Rome at a fitting time.

These events attracted great attention. The English journals generally regret Garibaldi's course.

TURKEY.

A telegram of the 7th from Cettigne asserts that 50,000 Turks attacked the Montenegrins on the 2d inst., in their intrenchments at Dokotis, but were victoriously repulsed by the Montenegrins under Mirko Omar Pasha, on the contrary, claims to have driven the Montenegrins from all their positions.

FRANCE.

It is rumored that an amnesty will be proclaimed on the Emperor's fete day It is also stated that Napoleon will probably deliver a brief speech to the diplomatic corps on that occasion, and allude to the Italian and Mexican questions.

There are vague rumors that the Emperor will visit Cologne on the 20th to meet several European sovereigns

The Siecle and Opinion Nationale, while blaming the course of Garibaldi, insist on the necessity of promptly solving the Roman question by delivering Rome up to Italy.

ITALY.

Affairs in regard to Garibaldi's movement remain unchanged. Garibaldi received the King's proclamation from the hands of a deputation in the midst of his friends, and repelled the entreaties of the deputation to regard it.

The Times' correspondent at Turin says Garibaldi had gathered together at Naples about five hundred adventurers from the mainland. Altogether his force does not exceed eight hundred and fifty men and boys. They were at first unarmed, but were afterward supplied by stratagem with a few hundred muskets.

Garibaldi was in no lack of money, more than three millions francs having been sent him from Mazzanian and the Garibaldian committees in England.

The Papal Minister of War has represented that the French army takes on itself the entire responsibility of whatever may occur on the frontier and in the Pontifical States in the provinces of Frinone and Veletri.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the Steamship Europa, we have advices from Liverpool Aug. 9th, Queenstown the 10th.

It is asserted that the Confederate Envoys at Paris and London have demanded the recognition of the Southern Confederacy. It is said that England refused, and that France has not yet replied.

Garibaldian manifestations have taken place in the Lascota theatre at Milan and in other parts of Italy.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A New Order from the War Office.

Washington, Aug. 11. The following circular has been issued to-day:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., Aug. 11, '62.

Military Commandants, Provost Marshals, U. S. Marshals and Police Officers:

You will receive herewith an order of the War Department to prevent the evasion of military duty and for the suppression of disloyal parties, dated Aug. 8, 1862.

This order, to be efficient, is necessarily very comprehensive in its terms, and its proper execution requires the exercise of sound judgment and discretion by the officers to whom its enforcement is entrusted, and to guard you in its execution, the following instructions are to be observed:

First, the order comprises two classes of persons, viz: those who are about leaving the United States to evade military duty, and those who for the same purpose leave their own State; leaving the United States until the military draft is perfected is absolutely prohibited. But it was not the intention of the order to interfere with the transit from State to State, of any persons but those who designed to evade military duty. Whenever you have reason to believe that the purpose is to evade military duty, the order will authorize the detention of any person leaving his own State, county or military district.

Second, any person detained may be released on giving bonds to the United States, with sufficient security of $1000 conditioned for the performance of military duty, if he should be drafted, or the providing of a proper substitute.

Third, Immediate report is to be made to this office of all persons detained, with the cause of their detention.

Fourth. You will exercise the powers of arrest and detention with caution and forbearance, so as to avoid giving annoyance or trouble to any persons excepting those who are seeking to evade the performance of their duty to their country.

Fifth, the Governors of the respective States are authorized to give passes and permits to their own citizens desiring to leave the State without intent to evade military duty.

By order of the Secretary of War.
L. C. TURNER, Judge Advocate.

New York, Aug. 10. The Herald's special Washington dispatch says it is probable that the time for drafting will be extended to the first of September.

Aug. 12. The correspondent of the Times, writing under date of the 10th says, Gen. Hooker retired from Malvern Hill on account of 75,000 rebels being sent against him. As yet no fighting of any consequence has taken place on the south side of James river.

The Times correspondent says, in the late battle more than one half of the men of the 28th New York regiment were killed and wounded. Col. Connelly, commanding, was mortally wounded. Lieut. Col. Brown and the Major are both wounded, and there is not a captain of a company left to the regiment.

Culpepper Court House, Va., Aug. 12. The battle of Saturday, 8th, is one of the most important of the war, not merely on account of the desperate valor and unfaltering discipline displayed by our troops, the obstinacy of the contest and the heavy loss on both sides, but because of its important effect upon the campaign, of which it forms a part.

The flight of Stonewall Jackson shows that he fears our troops. On Saturday he engaged with his whole force, numbering at least 30,000 men, a portion of the corps of Gen. Banks, who behaved most nobly, holding the enemy in check, and with the aid of one division of Gen. McDowell's and Sigel's corps, which arrived late in the day, driving the enemy from several positions, and finally from the field of battle.

Jackson's loss can scarcely be less than 1500. Our loss is much less.

The battle was decidedly the bloodiest of the war.

On Sunday Jackson remained idle, the troops on both sides being exhausted. On Monday Jackson sent in a flag of truce asking permission to bury his dead, a large proportion of which still lie on the field of battle, pending which he escaped with his trains. This morning Jackson's whole army was gone.

The Times' Washington dispatch states that it is considered certain that highly important army movements are either in progress or completed, but it is not regarded as proper yet to implicate their nature.

Much more cheerful impressions are prevailing concerning Gen. Pope's engagement. Jackson's retreat is known here to have been a necessity He had evidently become aware of the trap into which he was being beguiled, and retreated to escape from the danger which the execution of our plans threatened. His eye was on Fredericksburg as well as Culpepper Well informed persons freely declare that Gen. Pope will be in Gordonsville by Saturday at the farthest, though perhaps not without fighting, which may be going on now.

The Tribune's correspondent at Culpepper says, relative to the late battle, the position of our army on the battle field could not have been worse. The enemy had every advantage in position and numbers. Gen. Banks covered himself with glory. There is not a man living who could have managed his men with more skill under the same circumstances. He was constantly in the thickest of the fight, and shared all the dangers of the common soldier. His brave little army was sacrificed for want of reinforcements—nothing else.

New York, Aug. 14. The World's Washington dispatch says one of the most important movements made since the war commenced is now in progress, and will probably result in an important victory, being no more or less than the speedy downfall of Richmond. That it is nearly accomplished without the rebels being aware of it, is of itself a cause for sufficient congratulation, while it opens the broad field of vigor and energy in the long promised new policy of the government on the war. But a short time will elapse before publicity will be given to this movement, which it would be quite improper to give in detail now.

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 14. The following order has just been received by the Governor

Ordered first—That after the 15th day of this month bounty and advance pay shall not be paid to volunteers for any new regiments but only to volunteers for regiments now in the field, and volunteers to fill up new regiments now organizing, but not yet full.

Ordered second—Volunteers to fill up new regiments now organizing, will be received and paid the bounty and advance pay until the 22d day of this month, and if not completed by that time, incomplete regiments will be consolidated and superfluous officers mustered out.

Ordered third—Volunteers to fill up old regiments will be received and paid bounty and advance pay till the 1st day of September.

Ordered fourth—The draft for 300,000 militia called for by the President will be made on Monday, the 1st day of September, between the hours of 8 and 9 A. M., and 4 and 5 P. M., and continue from day to day between the same hours until completed.

Ordered fifth—If the old regiments should not be filled up with volunteers before the 1st day of September, a special draft will be ordered for the deficiency.

Ordered sixth—Exigencies of the service require that officers now in the field should remain with their commands, and no officer now in the field in the regular or volunteer service will under any circumstances be detailed to accept a new command.

By order of the President.
EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

New York, Aug. 15. The Fredericksburg correspondent of the Tribune gives an account of the expedition under Gen. Cutler on Wednesday to Fredericks Hall station, where they tore up 80 lengths of the Virginia Central Railroad, cut the telegraph, burning the wire and poles, and blew up, the road bed with powder.

They also destroyed the water tanks, telegraph wire, and fifty thousand bushels of grain, and a large lot of whiskey and other army stores, which were awaiting transportation to the enemy at Gordonsville. A party was also sent down to Bombas, to blow up the track and switches, which was accomplished in a most thorough and satisfactory manner. At this point the water tanks and depot were burned, the track destroyed and a small culvert was blown up with powder.

Hearing that three trains were expected up with troops from Richmond, the expedition commenced its return march. A large bridge over the Pamunkey was burnt to prevent the enemy from following, and the force rejoined their commands. Another expedition lost several wagons and 60 men.

Culpepper, Va., Aug. 16. Gen. Sigel, who occupied the advance near the Rapidan, reports that this morning the enemy made a feint or an attempt to cross that river, but he drove them back.

Washington, Aug. 16. Col. Corcoran, Col. Wilcox, Lieut. Col. Brown and Major [illegible] reached Fortress Monroe this afternoon, and are expected to start at once for Washington. Three hundred and twenty officers have been exchanged. Among them is Lieut. Col. Kane.

New York, 17. The Steamer Trade Wind, from New Orleans 6th, arrived to-night. Her passengers report that the rebels under Breckinridge attacked Baton Rouge on the 5th, but were repulsed. Gen. Williams had his head shot off by a cannon ball.

Harrison's Landing. The Ariel arrived here this morning with one hundred and forty-seven Union prisoners from Richmond.

Our officers of high rank state that they have been treated with marked indignity by the rebel authorities.

Memphis, Aug. 15. Reports from White River say that Gen. Hovey's division had a fight on Monday near Clarendon, Arkansas. The Federal force consisted of six regiments of infantry and the rebel force of eight regiments of cavalry and part of Hindman's brigade. The battle raged fiercely for some time with destructive effect to both sides, but resulted in the defeat of the rebels and the capture of 700 prisoners.

Fortress Monroe, Aug. 16. Harrison's Landing was entirely evacuated by the Union troops this morning, and at about the same time General McClellan's advance arrived at Williamsburg. The public property was all removed in safety, and all is quiet.

One hundred rebel cavalry drove in the Union pickets last night at Suffolk.

Nashville, Aug. 17. Two bridges on the Kentucky and Edgefield Railroad were burned by the rebels to-day, one over the Red River. The track is reported torn up this side of Tullahoma.

Leavenworth, Kansas, Aug. 18. Owing to the presence of a large body of rebels in Jackson county, Mo., and the neighborhood, and a threatened attack upon Kansas City, the Provost Marshal of the city, under orders from the headquarters of the department of Kansas, has ordered the citizens en masse to enroll and arm themselves for military duty, and any one failing to do so will be arrested. Business is mostly suspended.

Fortress Monroe, Aug. 18. The Newbern (N. C.) Progress of the 12th inst., in speaking of the election in that State, which was held on the 7th says, "The final result indicates the defeat of Johnson, the secession candidate for Governor, by the unparalleled majority of 40,000. The glad tidings comes to hand just as we go to press, of the compete overthrow of secession of this State

The Union opposition party have elected nearly every member in both branches of the Legislature, by still greater majorities. Every candidate who advocated a continuance of the war and a separation from the Union has been defeated in every instance.

New York, Aug. 18 The steamer North Star has arrived, bringing the particulars of the defeat of the rebels at Baton Rouge.

A letter from Baton Rouge says Nims' Battery thrice repulsed the foe and did great slaughter Breckinridge lost his right arm by a cannon ball. The loss of the enemy was severe. We have taken three guns, and captured a large number of prisoners.

Our loss was 250 killed, including a large proportion of officers. The rebel loss was immense.

Later accounts state that the Arkansas was aground above Baton Rouge, where the Essex and other gunboats set her on fire, when she soon after blew up

F. H. BERICK, MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS, } Committee of Arrangements.

The camp ground at Wilbraham is pleasantly located in a neighborhood noted for sustaining good order, and for acts of kindness towards those who assemble there from year to year to worship the God of our fathers. We hope to see a goodly number of the Lord's dear children, and that much good will be accomplished. Those who were present last year will remember that the great object of the meeting was for the salvation of sinners and the comfort of saints, and that the effort was greatly blessed. We hope that our brethren and sisters will come again this year, strong in the Lord, and bring their unconverted children and neighbors, for the purpose of persuading them to be christians.

All who believe in Christ as our Savior, and are willing to labor for the salvation of sinners, are invited to take part in the meetings. We would earnestly request all to make this meeting a subject of special prayer, that many wanderers may be reclaimed, the saints greatly strengthened, and the name of the Lord magnified among the people.

"Ghostology."

Packages of "Ghostology" have been ordered for the following persons by mail:—Eld. A. S. Calkins, Eld. H. A. King, John McKee, Eld. F. S. W. Deyo, John Sturdevant, Eld. C. L. Page, C. F. Burroughs, Eld Peter Mision, W. Rowell, and Eld. J. W. Burrell.

☞ Friends may write to me in care of Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass., till further notice. W. SHELDON.

Great Campmeeting in Maine.

On account of the lateness of the season, the Committee have deemed it best to change the time of our campmeeting at Corinna, Me., from the first to the second week in September, giving them one week longer to complete their harvest labors.

We would say to the brethren, one and all, rally again to the standard of truth, and enjoy the privilege of attending one more meeting, if the Lord will, before he shall return. We are happy to say we have obtained the best ground this year for our meeting that we ever have had, and the conveniences outside are far better than formerly. The grounds are situated in the west part of the town, on Mr. Weston Nutter's place, being two miles from Moor's Mills, so called, and six miles from Newport, a point on the Penobscot and Kennebec R. R., where brethren coming from the west by railroad, or to Bangor by boat, will stop. Those brethren who would like conveyance from Newport to the camp ground, will be accommodated if they will inform either of the Committee what time to meet them there.

Conveniences for the Lord's poor will be ample, and we wish none to stay away on account of their not having the means. There will be a commodious boarding tent on the ground, where brethren not having tents, but who have means, will be accommodated reasonably. Come one, come all, and let us have the greatest meeting of the kind ever yet held in Maine.

B. C. MOORE, ALBERT DOOR, GEO. H. FISHER, } Committee of Arrangements.

Notice.

To the Brethren in Eastern Conn., scattered through Woodstock, Putnam, etc —I wish to say that a few who look for the Lord from heaven are anxious to establish a regular meeting at Muddy Brook; but it is desirable that a more united effort should be made on the part of the brethren and sisters living in the surrounding districts. As there are many who do not attend any regular meeting from one year's end to the other, we think much good might be done by establishing a meeting at the above named place, as it is a new field. Why not come together, and try and sustain a meeting at this place, and make an effort to attend, even if it is a little trouble. You will get your pay in getting good and in doing good to others. We think the church has a duty to do in this respect, that is sadly neglected. Read Malachi 3: 16, 17 The few who are already interested in this meeting, are anxious to establish a regular appointment once in four weeks, commencing the first Sunday in September.

We hope the brethren and sisters living in this vicinity will take the matter into consideration, pray about it, and act accordingly Preaching might be sustained in this place, at least one half of the time, provided those living in the surrounding districts manifest as much interest, and have as much a spirit of sacrifice as others do who help sustain meetings in other places in Eastern Conn It is time to act, as well as talk. Now, now, let us act in regard to this matter as for eternity. D A. JONES.

[We hope our brethren and sisters will listen to this call —ED ]

Campmeeting Notice.

According to previous appointment, there will be a campmeeting in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co, Mich, on the farm of Bro. John Arable, commencing Aug 27th, 1862. This meeting is appointed for the express purpose of calling together all such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ in this State; and if brethren from other States, or from Canada, wish to attend, of course there will be no objection. Come, then, dear brethren and sisters, come with your tents and provisions, come well furnished with materials to take care of yourselves and others, come with warm hearts in the fear of God to labor for the salvation of souls, and be sure that you come at the commencement of the meeting. Our meeting last year was a blessed one, and we anticipate a more glorious one this year Bro and Sr Mansfield will be there to aid in the proclamation of the gospel.

P S. Brethren coming on the cars, from the East or West, will stop at Holly The meeting is to be some twelve miles north of Holly. Stages run within three miles of the meeting. In behalf of the church,

A N SEYMOUR.

Notice.

The next meeting of the Eastern N Y. and Western Mass and Conn Second Advent Conference will be at Otis Centre, Mass., commencing by preaching Tuesday evening, Sept 24. Come, Brn. and Srs., to this meeting, filled with the love of God. Come with a determination to do good and get good. Those coming from the South will call on Bro Waterman, Cold Spring Those from the North, stop at Well's Forge, at Bro. Brazee s, or Bro Breckenridge's. Those that cannot come of our preaching brethren, also churches that cannot send a delegate, please let us hear from you by letter. Address Geo L Teeple, Otis Centre.

G L. TEEPLE, Sec of Conf.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct, has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting, to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule, let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. PRATT.

It is somewhat probable that Bro. H. L. Hastings will be at the meeting.

Camp Wilbraham.

We purpose to be at Camp Wilbraham the Saturday previous to the commencement of the campmeeting, and hold a meeting there on the Lord's day, Aug. 24th, at 10 1-2 A. M., and 1 1-2 P. M. Any brethren who wish to put their tents up on Saturday, Aug. 23d, will have them cared for till Monday. We hope to see a good gathering at the camp-ground on Sunday the 24th.—G.

Notice.

Do the brethren in Goshen, Savoy, Hawley, and in that region, desire a camp or grove meeting the second or third week in Sept.? If so, forward the notice to the Crisis. Will Bro. Healy officiate? "Ye valiant soldiers of the cross," to your post, every one of you. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." The "long roll" is sounding. The "rushing" and "dashing" of the nations is upon us, and "who shall be able to stand?" H. PRATT.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Bowdoinham, Lancaster school-house, commencing Thursday, August 28th, at 6 o'clock, P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad can call on Brn. Ebenezer Lancaster, E. Densmore, S. Graves, E. Hatch, J. Dickerson. May God display his power there in converting sinners.

H. B. SEVERY, Chairman.
H. G. SMITH, Secretary.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

To the brethren in Christ, and churches of the Lord who "serve the living God," and "wait for his Son from heaven," Greeting:—The Board of Managers, after due consultation, have decided to appoint the third annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, at Wilbraham, Mass., to commence Tuesday, 4 o'clock, P. M., August 26th, 1862.

Two reasons have led them to decide upon this time in preference to October, as heretofore. First—A larger attendance can be secured; Second—Much expense can be saved. These are weighty considerations. The business to be transacted at the annual meeting of this Association is very important. The interests of every church, and every individual, "looking for the blessed hope," are involved in its proceedings. This Society controls the World's Crisis. It appoints its Editors and Managers. It decides what its character shall be, and marks out its policy, whether it shall give expression to every idea, however fanciful or absurd, which may demand its columns; or whether it shall select such only as are "meat in due season." It becomes necessary, therefore, that every church be represented, that our family paper be sustained in such a manner as to "feed the flock," that we may know whether its Editorship, eminently successful thus far, shall be changed or not.

A full representation, so desirable, can be best secured during campmeeting week Distant churches in the South, West and East, are usually represented then, while they cannot afford six weeks afterwards to send other representatives so far to attend the Association alone. Having, for these reasons, fixed upon this time for our third annual meeting, it is hoped that we may have a large and profitable one. Lest we be disappointed, let earnest prayer be made to God daily, that whatever shall be done at that time may be done, not in the name of man, self, or party, but "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

DANIEL T. TAYLOR, Chairman.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

June 7th, 1862.

NOTE. The Board of the Advent Christian Association are requested to meet at Wilbraham on Tuesday, August 26th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. A prompt and punctual attendance desirable. D. T. TAYLOR, President.
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk

NOTE. Letters are solicited from churches and ministers who cannot possibly be otherwise represented They may be directed to H. F. Carpenter, Poultney, Vt., till Aug. 18th, after that to Collins Depot, Mass.

All pastors and evangelists, and delegates from churches co-operating with this Society, are members. Each church is allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members. None can vote by letter.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind., commencing Thursday evening, Sept 25th, and continuing over the Sabbath following Bro and Sr Mansfield will be present (Bro Sevirs and I. Damman are expected) to preach the word of life. We hope to see a good attendance at this meeting Come, brethren and sisters, come praying that we may have a good, old-fashioned meeting at Union Mills. This is a time of trouble, and we should not forsake "the assembling of ourselves together," but exhort "one another; and so much the more as" we "see the day approaching"

By request of the Church,
A. FREEMAN, JR.

The Pilgrim.

TUNE.—Nelly Gray.

I want to be a pilgrim, and walk the narrow way
 That leads from the city of despair;
I want to join the army who love to sing and pray,
 And for the coming kingdom now prepare.

CHORUS.

Then we'll watch for the shore, as the wild breakers roar,
 For in Jesus our hope will abide;
Our trials will be over when we reach the other shore,
 Safe anchored beyond the rolling tide.

The beacon lights are shining, and our compass points the way,
 And the angels now line the heavenly shore;
They are shouting us a welcome to the realms of endless day,
 Where farewells and partings are no more.

CHO.

Cheer up, then, lonely pilgrim, glory gilds the distant skies,
 And the dark, stormy ocean's almost past;
Soon the day-star of glory will greet our longing eyes,
And our vessel be anchored safe at last.

CHO.

We'll bid farewell forever to care and earthly pain,
 We'll stand on the glorified shore;
We'll shout a loud hosannah to the Lamb that once was slain,
 And praise the King of glory evermore.

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Reimer.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Our old venerable brother,—H. Grew—yesterday [Aug. 8th] breathed his last breath. He is waiting with Paul for the redemption of his body. His loss is mourned deeply by every one of us, as he was much beloved and highly esteemed among us, as a christian brother whose example in every respect was worthy of imitation. Even those who could and would not agree with his religious views, were compelled to say, "He is a good man, a good christian." O, that christian love and meekness about him; that mild and forgiving spirit in his heart; his forbearing with the faults of others; his deep humility; his strong faith in God; his activity in the Lord's vineyard day by day, though old and weak; his willingness to comfort and assist the poor; his almost unlimited charity—all these characteristics were found in our beloved brother, who is now asleep in Jesus, in a degree which is seldom witnessed in our days of coldness and lukewarmness. During the last week or so he was not able to recognize his friends and brethren any more.

All the time he was afflicted, since the last four or five months, he was constantly praising the Lord for his mercy and love towards him, a poor and sinful creature of the dust; no murmur ever past over his lips; on the contrary, they were overflowing with praise and thanksgiving for the unbounded love of Him who gave his only begotten Son for us, that all who believe in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Christ was all to him; he never believed that he could find everlasting life in anybody else but him. Christ was his great pattern, whom he endeavored to imitate in every respect; he was to him the only way, truth and life; he gave him all the honor and glory which the word of God ascribes to him. In short, Christ was his great High-priest, in whom he put his entire hope for eternal life. And yet, some would not call him a brother, because he did not believe in the trinity, in the way the so-called orthodox church holds this doctrine. Would to God that all Trinitarians were as our highly beloved Bro. Grew, full of the Spirit of love, pure and holy love; then the christian church would not be as corrupt as we find it at the present day.

Peace be to his ashes. But a little while and we shall see him (if we are found worthy to enter into the kingdom of God) in his glorified body, at that great and glorious day of resurrection, which is hard upon us.

L. REIMER.

From Bro. G. H. Fisher.

BRO. GRANT:—I write a few lines, for the first time, to be inserted in your paper, which, by the way, I prize next to my Bible, on account of the disclosure of such great and precious truths, and the bold and dauntless position it occupies against error in all its forms; and I truly feel glad that we have an organ through which the church may be edified, and the wicked and sleeping world may be warned of its coming doom. But the unwise and foolish will pursue their course and be punished; while those who are truly wise and prudent will foresee the evil and hide themselves in Christ.

The glorious time of deliverance hastens greatly, and with what joy do the real children of God anticipate the day which shall introduce them into the presence of our Lord and Master and all the holy an- [illegible] not only this, but we shall en- [illegible] of that innumerable compa- [illegible] come up "out of great tribu- [illegible] washed their robes and [illegible] in the blood of the Lamb." [illegible] till then, all nature shall [illegible] ity, and God's dear chil- [illegible] more suffer, sicken and [illegible] Eden home, which I am [illegible] faithful, we soon, yes, very soon shall possess. My prayer to God is, speed the day when the ransomed of the Lord shall sing redemption's glorious song, and forever dwell safely and secure in Christ's glorious kingdom. This, I am happy to say, I have been striving to obtain for some time past; and although I have not yet realized my hope, which I believe is a good gospel hope, still my courage is good, although tempted at times and cast down, yet it is not to be wondered at in these trying times.

I truly believe we are living in "perilous times," and I feel that God's people will yet meet with severe trials of their faith; but if they have that faith that was "once delivered to the saints," and contend earnestly for it, they will surely be victorious. This world is truly a gloomy place, and nothing but black clouds of distress and gloom brood over it; yet, thank God, his people can already see the silvery lining behind them, and with the lamp to guide, we soon shall behold the glorious sunlight of that day which knows no end. I feel glad that God still has a people on the earth; and were it not for them, this world would be a still gloomier place than it now is; but I am confident that there is still faith on the earth, for there will be those living when Christ comes, who will be caught up to meet him in the air, and so for ever be with the Lord. I am not at loss to know who they are; for it will be those who are saying, My Lord is coming; and how glad I am that in this age of pride and great wickedness, there are a few humble children of God.

The church in this place is struggling along, trying to obtain the kingdom at last, but we have experienced some very sad times for a few months past; yet I think our trials will work together for good in the end. May the Lord help us, is my prayer. There seems to be a strong determination throughout the entire church in this part, as far as my knowledge extends, to have nothing to do with the war. We believe the gospel of Christ plainly declares that we shall not kill. And again we learn that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." I believe those who love this world will fight for it, and will go to perdition with it; but those who look for the one that good old Peter according to the promise looked for, will not and cannot be made to fight for this doomed earth.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I am striving to do the will of my Master, that I may be ready to meet him when he shall appear. It is truly cheering to know that we are almost to our journey's end. O praise the Lord for the bright prospect that is just ahead. It is blessed to think that we are almost home. Soon all of Father's family will be gathered there, then we shall meet our dear loved ones, who are now sleeping in Jesus, and meet to part no more for ever. Then we shall never more be sick or weary. How good the Lord is to his children. Although our trials may be many, yet they are for our good. They are the tokens of my Father's love. Shall I murmur? shall I despise the chastening, or faint beneath the correction of my Father? Save me from it, gracious Lord. Help me to be humble, patient, right and good. Purge away my dross, make me pure and holy. Be thou my strength in these dark, weary hours. Let me know thy faithfulness, even in the fiery furnace. Let us even feel that the Lord does all things right.

What a "blessed hope" is ours. It is big with immortality. Dear children, let us strive to do all that the Lord would have us, that we may enjoy his smiles and have abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom, where we shall no more part, but where the saints of God shall dwell forever. The Lord help both reader and writer to be ready to enter in through the gates of the city.

From G. W. Gillespie.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I have not seen my much prized Crisis till to-day, for over eight months. Bro. D. kindly loaned me the last two numbers, and since meeting was out, I have been eagerly devouring their contents. Bro. Wellcome's piece, encouraging the loyalty of christians to the constitution of Jesus, was encouraging indeed to me. Connecticut may have to draft to fill her quota, and as they have enrolled my name, I may be drafted. But I can't go. My term of enlistment Jesus holds good till death, for I promised to serve him during life, in consideration of the greater bounty which he offers to all; namely, eternal life.

If the people of the world get mad because I don't enlist, or yield to their draft, if drafted, they may fine, imprison, or shoot, just as they please. I will not fight. I thank the Lord that I have, by his grace helping me, kept myself clear from politics, having never cast a vote in my life. When I left the world, I left it and joined myself to Christ and his kingdom. I will fight for my country. My weapons are not carnal. No, I had rather a bushel of bullets would perforate my body, than to send one to the heart of my enemy, whom Jesus commands me to love.

Yours for the kingdom.

From Eld. Thos. W. Smith.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Having just returned from a visit to Sr. Henry's neighborhood, I thought that I would send you a few of the many thoughts that came rushing through my mind at different times while there. I thought that it was not strange that Sr. H. was so well liked in that section, because she is so deeply interested in her work, and takes so much pains in instructing the people from the Bible. She is well qualified for such a work, being "apt to teach." I thought that she should write for the Crisis more than she does.

I found Spiritualism prevailing extensively in that section. I thought what a good work would be accomplished in opening the eyes of many in the church, and of convincing many of the designs and dangers of the "Satanic delusion" if Bro. Lombard's book was published, and in the hands of many who are "weak in the faith," and of those who have begun to give heed to seducing spirits. I thought that if the brethren would send enough money to the Crisis office at once to publish "The Coming Struggle," a great benefit would be conferred on the cause we have espoused. I thought that I would be glad to go to the help of those good brethren in Iowa, who ask for laborers, if I had the means of traveling there, as I am anxious to find a new and different field of labor.

Time is short. "The end of all things is at hand." As public teachers, we must be careful to teach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. May the Lord help us.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. P. S. W. DEYO, Strawberry Point, Iowa, writes:—"I immersed two at Cascade, and others intend to follow their example at the next opportunity. We held a quarterly meeting at Boyling Grove, and had a good time. Two made a start in the service of the Lord. The church in this place, numbering about thirty members, united with the conference. I think they will thrive, if they keep clear from the war spirit. I had an interesting meeting with the Marble Rock church. The people manifested a great interest to hear.

At Floyd, we had a profitable meeting, when two were immersed. O how cold the churches are generally,—religion turned into politics, and but few praying members. Some of our churches have passed through the ordeal, and are coming out, hope they will shine more than ever.

Glad to see you take a stand on total abstinence. I have been there for twelve years. Be assured my influence shall be on the right side, for the reform of such habits. I am well pleased with the Crisis. Shall do all I can to circulate it. May God bless you with wisdom, and preserve us until the coming of his heavenly kingdom, is my prayer."

BRO. H. M. BRYANT, Northwood Narrows, N. H., writes:—"There is a goodly number in this place who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ to establish his kingdom; and who, I think, are willing to suffer persecution, and endure the scoffs of the world, and be called fools for his sake. Thank the living God for his great goodness and mercy toward us. Let us be good and humble, and 'by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality.'

I thank God for his goodness to me and my friends around me, and that many are being purified and made white. I enlisted under the blood-stained banner of Christ about four months ago, and, by the grace of God, I will fight the good fight of faith manfully, and 'endure hardship as a good soldier' of the cross, till 'the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High.'"

BRO. W. MORPLY, Massena, N. Y., writes. —"I think we have great reason to thank God for light in these trying times. How few there are that really believe the Bible. How many cling to their fanciful interpretations of Scripture, and reject the plain literal word.

Brother, my prayer is that the Lord may keep you, and preserve you in good working order till he himself shall come, which I hope will not be long. It is now over six months since I wrote for the Crisis. We are very much pleased with it, and feel as though we cannot do without it, so long as it is conducted in the same spirit as it has been for the time we have taken it."

BRO. J. V. HIMES writes:—"GOOD TIMES. In every place, Bro. G., God is with me, and blessing me, and the people with whom I have met and labored. The Spirit has been poured out, and glorious refreshings have been given us. Since I saw you, I have visited Worcester, Three Rivers, Albany, and now I am in Esperance, N. Y. We begun last evening, and had a real pentecost season. Praise the Lord. We are seeing good times, and shall see better ones soon. I mean here, in this dispensation. We shall see many souls gathered to Christ for the coming kingdom. And soon, O blessed be God, we shall see the King in his beauty."

BRO. D. T. TAYLOR, Castleton, Vt., writes: —"Three to baptize next Lord's day, [Aug. 17.] Congregations increasing—straight times these!"

We are rejoiced in the fact that our dear Bro. Taylor is again able to enter the vineyard of the Lord as a laborer, and that the church in Castleton is enjoying his healthy instruction. May the Lord give him great success in leading men to Christ.—G.

SR. S. A. INGHAM, Nova Scotia, writes: —"Bro. Burnham has paid us a visit. He staid ten days. A number professed religion, and ten were baptized before he left. He was the means of removing a great deal of prejudice in this region. We are trying to live in readiness to meet the King in his beauty."

SR. M. TORREY, North Benton, writes:— "Shall we not lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draws near? Yes, glory to God, I feel that every child of his can rejoice that deliverance is soon coming. May the Lord help us to be faithful unto the end."

The Lord's Prayer.

Our Father who art in heaven,
 All hallowed be thy name!
Thy kingdom come, thy will be done,
 Through all the earth the same.

CHORUS.

Lord, hasten the joyful day,
Lord, hasten the joyful day,
When Christ shall reign o'er the New Earth,
Oh! hasten the joyful day

Give us from day to day
 Thy grace as we shall need,
And feed us with our daily bread,
 As we shall others feed.

CHO.

Lord, keep us in thy way,
 Obedient to thy will,
And shield us from each tempting snare,
 That we may love thee still.

CHO.

And thine shall be the praise,
 Both now and evermore,
And when thou com'st on earth to reign,
 Our sorrows will be o'er.

Campmeeting in Grand Blanc, Mich.

While perusing the Crisis for last week, my eyes fell upon the notice for a campmeeting in Grand Blanc, and I could but praise God for its timely appearance, realizing we are living in perilous times. The strength of the wicked waxeth strong, and because iniquity abounds the love of many waxeth cold. How necessary it is, then, that we should be up and doing, that we should work while the day lasts, with all of the energies of our being; yea, and with all over which God has made us stewards. Think for a moment, my dear brethren and sisters, of the great sacrifice our blessed Redeemer made, that we might have eternal life, and share with him the glory, the riches, the blessedness, yea, the exceeding and eternal weight of glory in the kingdom of God—that kingdom so soon to be given, those blessings so soon to be realized. But a little way in the future, and we shall behold the King in his beauty, and our vile bodies, now the prey of disease and death, will be fashioned like his glorious body, to die no more, to suffer no more pain. O glorious thought! to be forever with the Lord.

Is any sacrifice that we can make too great to purchase such a possession for ourselves or our neighbors? Nay, verily. What saith the apostle? "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Behold the world lying in wickedness. What do they know about the coming of Jesus? Are they not like blind men thronging the broad road to destruction? and will not their blood be required at our hands, my dear brethren, if we withhold from them the light which we might shed upon them by making a sacrifice on our part? This is a serious question, and I hope you will ponder it well. Settle it between yourselves and your God, with reference to the coming campmeeting. Much depends upon this meeting. Will you make a sacrifice to attend it? Come, richly imbued with the Spirit of Jesus; come to do good, and get good, so shall you be blessed abundantly, and much good will be the result. Make a sacrifice to come, so as to take care of yourselves and others. Help bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. I know not as I shall be with you in person, but I shall in spirit; and oh! may you have a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. I pray that the blessing of God, which rested upon you last year, may be but a drop compared with what you shall receive this year. "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord"; ever ready to do with willing hearts whatsoever your hands find to do. Remember, what you do must be done now. Will you fold your hands in lazy look on the very confines of glory? O! arouse, and trim your lamps, and do it NOW. Behold the Bridegroom cometh! and that speedily. ARE YOU READY? IS YOUR NEIGHBOR READY?

Campmeeting.

Who that has ever been does not like to go again? Methinks I hear a multitude saying, "Not I, not I." Come, brother and sister, you that have never been; and you that are almost discouraged, and think that you and a few others are about all the Advent people there are in the world, go to Wilbraham; and my word for it, you will never be sorry. You will get something that will last you all the year. It will do you so much good to see so many dear brethren and sisters that have sacrificed all for Jesus; not only costly dress, and jewelry of all kinds; but all hatred, malice, prejudice and hobby-horse doctrines, and who love one another, with the determination to get into the kingdom, let the world say what it may.

Why, it does one's soul good to think of it; much more to be there. I know of no place on earth so profitable to attend. I love to think of it, and long to be there. In a short time, old Wilbraham mountain will again be inhabited; and if the Lord will, and my life is spared, I hope to be there and enjoy the company of the saints of God. Come, brethren and sisters, all, we would love to meet you there. Come, backslider, we will do you good. Come, sinner, this will be the place for you; here you may have your sins forgiven, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; be baptized, and start with us for the kingdom. The Lord help you to come; and us to be ready for his kingdom.

Seven-year-change Theory.

That theory which claims that the human organism undergoes an entire change once in seven years, and that consequently the man at the age of seventy years has had ten different bodies, in all of which he has done works of righteousness or unrighteousness, for which he must be judged and rewarded, and then proudly inquires, Which one of these ten bodies is to be raised and judged, and rewarded, should be held to explain why a man can have certain diseases but once in his life. If the theory is true, why can not a man have the small pox, or the measles, once in seven years? Why should not the second or third body be as really afflicted with these diseases, as the first? Will it be said that the same soul dwells in them that dwelt in the first?

Well, who will claim that an immortal soul can have the small pox? If not what difference does that make? If this theory is true, man might live for ages, unless accidents should befall him, or fatal diseases fasten upon him, for as the first seven-year body shows no signs of being worn out, why should either of its successors, seeing they are of the same age? If the first and second body never die of old age, why need the tenth or twelfth, seeing they are no older? Why should one seven-year body wear out sooner than another, with old age, seeing they are of equal age?

W. SHELDON.

"Quit you like men."

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It seems to me that we are living very near the day of God, and what is done by us in the vineyard of the Lord must be done soon. Truly it is a time of darkness, when men's hearts are failing them for fear; but it is a time when the child of God can lift up his head and rejoice, knowing that his "redemption draweth nigh." It appears that we have come to a time that will try our faith, whether we will take up arms and fight for our country, or whether we will suffer death, or any other punishment, rather than do those things that are contrary to the teachings of Christ.

Brethren, let us be faithful to our God, let come what will. O let us trust his grace to save and deliver us; pray for our enemies, but never fight them. The reason why is not because we love our country less, but because we love our Savior more. O then be faithful, and if need be, seal your testimony with your blood, and say unto the Lord, as did one of old, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

Why a woman remembered a sermon.

A lady was complimenting a clergyman on the fact that she could always recollect and recite more of the matter of his sermons than those of any other minister. The clergyman thought he could explain the cause. "I happen," said he, "to make a particular point of classifying my topics—it is a hobby of mine to do so; and therefore I never compose a sermon without first settling the relationship and order of my arguments and illustrations. Suppose, madam, that your servant was starting for town, and you were obliged hastily to instruct her about a few domestic purchases, not having time to write down the items; and suppose you said, 'Be sure you bring some tea, also some soap, and coffee too; by-the-by, some powder blue; and don't forget a few light cakes, and a little starch, and some sugar; and now I think of it, a little soda,—you would not be surprised if her memory failed with regard to one or two of the articles. But if your commission ran thus, 'Now, Mary, to-morrow we are going to have some friends to tea, therefore bring a supply of tea, and coffee, and sugar, and a few light cakes; and the next day, you know, is washing day, so that we shall want soap, and starch, and soda, and powder blue;' and it is most likely she would retain your order as easily as you retain my sermons."—Sel.

ILL HUMOR.—Never do anything that can denote an angry mind: for although every body is born with a certain degree of passion, and from outward circumstances will sometimes feel its operation, and be what they call "out of humor," yet a sensible man or woman will never allow it to be discovered. Check and restrain it; never make any determination until you find it has subsided: and always avoid saying what you may wish unsaid.—[illegible]

Divine Generosity.

O, friends and brethren in Christ! Be generous! In your thinkings, your actings, your givings, be generous. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. Give as the Son of God has given you. All in the Bible is generous; yet we are not generous! All in God is generous; yet we are not generous! We give little to God, and we grudge the little that we give. We spend our money on dress, or luxuries, or vanities, till we have none left for God. We love our apparel, our comforts, our meat, and our drink, better than we love our Lord! The drunkards of this land spend their millions on strong drink, the christians only their thousands. The drunkard loves his glass better than the christian loves his Lord! O, shame, shame! Is this christianity? Is this religion? Are these the followers of him who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor?—Christian Treasury.

Promptness in Duties.

There is always a joy in duties performed, and promptness in the execution heightens that joy. To wait and look on a business we ought to do at once, enervates and disheartens; to arise and do it immediately strengthens and enlarges the heart. Delay begets hesitancy and timidity; direct performance brings zeal and courage. They that wait upon the Lord renew their strength; but they that postpone till tomorrow become weak. Promptness in duties, then, gives greater strength for new duties. Enduring hardness as a good soldier in one campaign, qualifies the christian for more manly feats in the next. We grow on food and exercise morally the same as we do physically. Christian fortitude helps develop that noble, full stature of character and life which the gospel enjoins—gives grace to discipleship, and energy and efficiency to the church.

A QUESTION.—At best, life is not very long. A few more smiles, a few more tears, some pleasures, much pain, sunshine and song, clouds and darkness, hasty greetings, abrupt farewells—then our little play will close. An injurer and injured will pass away. Is it worth while to hate each other?

☞ Keep out of debt—out of quarrels—out of law—out of politics—out of idleness—out of damp clothes—out of the reach of brandy and water—out of public office—and keep clear of the monstrous sin of cheating the printer!

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul

Drinking.

Man is the only animal that drinks without being thirsty, swallowing whole quarts of water when nature does not call for it, with the alleged view of "washing out" the system. When persons are thirsty, that thirst should be fully assuaged with moderately cool water, drank (in summer time or under great bodily heat or fatigue) very leisurely, but not within half an hour of eating a regular meal. Eminent physiologists agree that drinking at meals dilutes the gastric juice, diminishes its solvent power, and retards digestion, especially if what is drank is cold. Persons in vigorous health, and who work or exercise a great part of every day in the open air, may drink a glass of water, or a single cup of weak coffee or tea, at each meal, and live to a good old age. But it is very certain that sedentary persons and invalids can not go beyond that habitually, with impunity. The wisdom of such consists in drinking nothing at all at the regular meals beyond a swallow or two at a time of some hot drink of a mild and nutritious character. Feeble persons will be benefited by hot drinks, because they warm up the body, excite the circulation, and thus promote digestion, if taken while eating, and not exceeding a cupful.

Cold water ought never to be drank within half an hour of eating; for the colder it is, the more instantly does it arrest digestion, not only by diluting the gastric juice, but by reducing its temperature, which is near one hundred degrees. Ice-water is something over thirty-two degrees, and when swallowed, mixes with the gastric juice, and lowers its temperature, not to be elevated until heat enough has been withdrawn from the general system; and that draft must be made until the hundred degrees of warmth are attained: but some persons have so little vitality, that the body exhausts itself in its instinctive efforts to help the stomach, from which its life and strength come; and the person rises from the table with a cold chill running down the back or over the whole body. Sometimes these drafts upon the body for warmth to the stomach are so sudden and great, that they cannot be met, and instantaneous death is the result. Many a person has dropped dead at the pump or at the spring; such a result is more certain if, in addition to the person being very warm at the time of drinking, there is also great bodily fatigue. A French general recently fell dead from drinking cold water on reaching the top of a mountain overheated and exhausted in the effort of bringing up his battalions with promptitude. Under all circumstances of heat or fatigue, the glass of water should be grasped in the hand, held half a minute, then, taking not over two swallows, rest a quarter of a minute; then two swallows more, and so on, until the thirst is nearly assuaged. It will seldom happen that a person is inclined to take over half a dozen swallows thus.

No case is remembered in the practice of a quarter of a century, where malt liquors, wines, brandies, or any alcholic drinks whatever, have ever had a permanent good effect in improving the digestion. Apparent advantages sometimes result, but they are transient or deceptive. If there is no appetite, it is because nature has provided no gastric juice; and that is the product of nature, not of alcohol. If there is appetite but no digestive power, liquor no more supplies that power than would the lash give strength to an exhausted donkey. If torture does arouse the sinking beast, it is only that it shall fall a little later into a still greater exhaustion from which there is no recovery; so with the use of liquor and tobacco as whetters of the appetite, when at length the desire for the accustomed stimulus ceases, and the man "sickens;" there is no longer a relish for the dram and the chew, and life fades apace, either in a stupor from which there is no [illegible]

Take Care of the Feet.

"Of all parts of the body," says Dr. Robertson, "there is not one which ought to be so carefully attended to as the feet." Every person knows from experience that colds and many other diseases which proceed from colds, are attributable to cold feet. The feet are at such a distance from "the wheel at the cistern" of the system, that the circulation of the blood may be very easily checked there. Yet, for all this, and although every person of common sense should be aware of the truth of what we have stated, there is no part of the human body so much trifled with as the feet. The young and would-be genteel footed, cramp their toes and feet into thin-soled, bone-pinching boots and shoes, in order to display neat feet, in the fashionable sense of the term. There is one great evil, against which every person should be on their guard, and it is one which is not often guarded against—we mean the changing of warm for cold shoes or boots. A change is often made from thick to thin-soled shoes, without reflecting upon the consequences which might ensue. In cold weather boots and shoes of good thick leather, both in soles and uppers, should be worn by all. Water-tights are not good if they are air-tights also; india rubber overshoes should never be worn except in wet splashy weather, and then not very long at once. It is hurtful to the feet to wear any covering that is air-tight over them, and for this reason india rubber should be worn as seldom as possible. No part of the body should be allowed to have a covering that entirely obstructs the passage of the carbonic acid gas from the pores of the skin outward, and the moderate passage of air inward to the skin. Life can be destroyed in a very short time, by entirely closing up the pores of the skin. Good warm stockings and thick-soled boots and shoes are conservators of health, and consequently of human happiness.—Scientific American.

Teeth set on Edge.

All acid foods, drinks, medicines and tooth washes and powders, are very injurious to the teeth. If a tooth is put in cider, vinegar, lemon juice, or tartaric acid, in a few hours the enamel will be completely destroyed, so that it can be removed by the finger nail as if it were chalk. Most people have experienced what is commonly called teeth set on edge. The explanation of it is, the acid of the fruit that has been eaten has so far softened the enamel of the tooth that the least pressure is felt by the exceedingly small nerves which pervade the thin membrane which connects the enamel and the bony part of the tooth. Such an effect cannot be produced without injuring the enamel. True, it will become hard again, when the acid has been removed by the fluids of the mouth, just as an egg shell that has been softened in this way becomes hard again by being put in the water. When the effect of sour fruit on the teeth subsides, they feel as well as ever, but they are not as well. And the oftener it is repeated, the sooner the disastrous consequences will be manifested.—Scientific American.

IMPORTANCE OF EXERCISE.—For the preservation of health, exercise is of the utmost importance. Respiration, circulation, digestion, secretion, and all the bodily functions are assisted by it; causing at the same time clearness of mind and cheerfulness of heart. The evil results of the want or deficiency of exercise are seen in persons of indolent life or sedentary habits. Indigestion, costiveness, congestion, and a multitude of chronic maladies are produced besides the general derangement and discomfort of the whole system under which nervous and hypochondrical patients suffer. The robust health commonly enjoyed by the working classes, compared with those engaged in sedentary pursuits, is chiefly owing to their bodily labor. In every period and occupation of life, exercise is essential to health, but most of all in the young.

FLANNEL.—Flannel should be worn summer and winter, during the day, but should be taken off at night. In summer it allows the perspiration to pass off without condensing upon the skin, and prevents the evil effects of the rapid changes of temperature to which we are liable in our changeable climate, when out of doors. In winter, as a non-conductor of heat, it is a protection against cold. At night the flannel jacket or jersey should be exposed to a free current of air and allowed thoroughly to dry; it should never be put in a heap of clothes by the bedside. Flannel is usually only worn over the chest and abdomen.

Be Kind and Forgiving.

AIR.—"Be kind to the loved ones at home."

Be kind and forgiving! The Lord is at hand,
The day of His judgment is near,
Soon nations assembled before him shall stand,
And all at his bar will appear;
Then cherish no feeling of evil or hate
Toward any frail mortal on earth,
Though some may seem sinners however so great,
The Judge will determine their worth.

Be kind and forgiving! thy brother may err,
And his words harshly grate on thine hear,
Repair to thy closet, the matter refer
To Him who is ready to hear,
Pray earnestly for him, perchance he may see
The wrong he hath done, and confess.
Such a course will at least be far better for thee,
For God hath so promised to bless.

Be kind and forgiving! no evil return
To him who hath rendered thee ill,
And never let anger within thine heart burn,
Or vengeance its poison instil,
But rather like him, thy blest Master, be meek
And patient, though wounded and tried,
The language of kindness and love ever speak,
Should even a brother deride.

Be kind and forgiving! then peace will abide,
Sweet peace evermore in thine heart,
While envy and passion, and hatred and pride,
With all kindred foes will depart.
The smile of our Father will ever be thine,
His favor enlighten thy way,
And soon thou wilt dwell in his kingdom divine,
Outshining the orb of the day.

Fighting Israel.

War! war! war! Men feel war, talk war, act war, dream war, and "prepare war." Ministers of the gospel (?) join loudest in the war-whoop, and, by "handling the word of God deceitfully," would justify the "sheep" of Christ in becoming "ravening wolves" thirsting for the blood of their fellow men, while they condemn the just who have conscientiously "put up" their sword into his place, and resolved to "do violence to no man." Of course they must say, "It is written." This was Satan's masterpiece of temptation to Christ. It will preface his last temptation to the followers of Christ. Why wonder, then, that a war speech is introduced by, "It is written." But where is it written? Among the teachings of Christ? O, no; but among those of Moses. "We are Moses' disciples." Here is an instance. The Rev. Mr. ——, in the town of D—, Ct., takes his text, Num. 32:20–23,—"If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the Lord to war, and will go all of you armed over Jordan before the Lord, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, and the land be subdued before the Lord: then afterward ye shall return and be guiltless before the Lord and before Israel. . . . . But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord, and be sure your sin will find you out." From this scripture it was argued that the present call for soldiers was the call of God; military service in this time of need, a christian's duty; a refusal of the call, a sin which would by no means go unpunished. Such efforts to pervert the conscience of God's devoted ones, aided by a time-serving press that heralds forth such sentiments as the gospel for the times, are truly painful. I was led to inquire, how far should the example of Israel, as given in the scripture above quoted, go to justify christians in bearing arms in the present dispensation?

1st. It proves that it has been right for the children of God to war. Shall we say that right is eternal and unchangeable? Shall we say that what was once right must always be right? It was once right to offer bullocks and rams and heifers in sacrifice to God. Is it now right? It was once right to have a plurality of wives. Is it now right? It was once right to make enemies bondmen and bondwomen. Is it now right? It will be right for the saints to "judge the world." Is it right now? Right is constituted by the authority of God. It was right for Israel to fight, for God commanded it. God now speaks to us by his Son. When He commands his disciples to learn war, it will be right; till then it is wrong.

2nd. Israel fought alone. They fought as God's people. They did not join in alliance with wicked nations, to fight with and for them. Whenever they joined with ungodly people, to war with them and for them, they were punished for it. They fought for their inheritance, their institutions and privileges, as the children of God. Now if we learn our duty from Israel's warfare, we must say that the Church of Christ—God's only people now—ought to fight for their rights. The martyrs should have armed themselves to put down popery. What would be thought of one who would declare that if the world did not treat christians well, every christian would become a soldier, and christians would form an army and put down the world!! Israel fought her foes with carnal weapons; ought christianity to do so? Israel was not allowed to form alliances with the nations. If, therefore, we are to learn from them, let us be consistent, and "be separate" from the nations now in this time of their anger, and let us tarry "without the camp," whither we have gone forth unto Christ, bearing his reproach.

3d. The text referred to proves that christians should arm themselves, and subdue all the land before the Lord, and drive out all his enemies. This would make sad havoc with the North, as well as with the South. Yea, it would set the christian against his own household, and desolation would cover the earth. It proves, furthermore, that unless they do this, and drive out all his (God's) enemies from the land, which he has promised them, (the whole earth), they will sin against the Lord, and then sin will early find them out. Now, unless an individual is prepared to say that christians as a body ought to arm themselves with weapons of deadly warfare, and fight against all the enemies of the cross of Christ, till the whole land is subdued before the Lord, let him no more present the warfare of ancient Israel to blind and mislead the christian into the use of "carnal weapons."

The Discerning Principle.

The reflex of a man's character will find an outward expression through some channel or other. It is just as natural for a man's heart to turn itself inside out, as selfishness is to be found a ruling element of his nature. There is no living individual but that is a slave to some sort of conventionalism or other. Whether in spiritual or earthly life, the principle developes the shackle which fetters him. It is a happy result, too; but it is the spirit of the effect that guages its value. An economical industry, that works the acquisition of gain, will quite as quickly develop an inordinate lust as the more passive, but generally by an easier method. But then it is the cost of the former that tempers the better conception of its general worth. Still, the spirit of its possessor will be seen in one extreme or the other,—in the stoic indifference of the claims of humanity, or the prodigality with which he comprehends its thousand methods of distribution. Of course, to such a rule there are honorable exceptions, but it is certainly a distinguishing phase of human nature.

In spiritual life, the application of this rule settles merit and demerit where they belong. There is a line of demarkation drawn,—a line which no man can pass, without betraying his voluntary allegiance. Heaven is acquired "without money and without price"; yet it requires an intense moral struggle,—a high conception of the worth of immortal life,—to tear from the heart the crude propensities of his nature, and submit it to the dictates of a spirit which is at the farthest possible remove from its original occupant. But this is the very cause of its inestimable worth. It is this which creates within us an undying solicitude for its presence. It is the instinctive appreciation of its ulterior benefits, which makes it live radiant in the features of the face, felt in the grasp of the hand, and beheld in the governing, dictating principle that swallows us up in the will of Christ. Indeed, it is not too much to say, that that individual who will not let the spirit of Jesus Christ govern him in all his dealings among men, is a good ways from Heaven's entrance. In acquiescing abstractly to the claims and benefits of religion, he not only questions the reasonableness of a divine law, but repudiates its legality: while he betrays an imbecile propensity by pandering to restrictions which he honestly does not believe to be consistent with a more general truth, no matter what his professions are. Simon Magus might have professed to all eternity that he was a disciple of the Lord, but that would not have militated against his hypocrisy. And that young inquirer for "eternal life," might have for years given a speculative assent to God's commands; yet, practically, cared for nothing greater than his corruptible substance. Such a miserable subterfuge for an unconditional surrender of sin will prove a man of straw before Him who "will judge the world in righteousness."

It is written, "By their fruits ye shall know them." It is also written, "Judge not, that ye be not judged"; but there is nothing in this last behest that conflicts with the former. Who ever heard of submitting a self-evident fact for judgment? Such a notion is sheer nonsense. Christ says, "Ye shall KNOW them." There is no cause for judgment in an already developed case. And the man who is satisfied to rest his hopes and prospects of a higher life on the supposition that he once knew Christ, or thought his Spirit once witnessed with his spirit and purged him a fit subject for his glorified kingdom, makes the mercy of Jesus a base assumption. He has mistaken a fog bank for the resurrection shore; and will find, too late, that the drifting current of his life has borne him far out into eternity's shoreless sea, without helm or pilot, or Pharos light to lure him home.

Neither let that man endeavor to persuade himself that his salvation is a foregone conclusion, because respectability prompts him to occupy, by person or proxy, a few square feet of church timber, and sit passively for a life time, a representative of respect for the cause of Christ. If the kingdom of our Savior depends for its development on the usury of that man's talent, its establishment on this earth is an everlasting failure. Nobody supposes that all that congregated on Mt. Olivet to hear Christ's sermon were possessors of his spirit, but it was those that feared God and worked righteousness that were accepted of him. I sometimes think that the conservative element of christianity is not to be found within the pale of any ecclesiastical organization, for the reason that its unrestricted tolerance is viciously opposed, and a large liberty of conscience is circumscribed by the petty annoyances of bushels and backloads of theological whims, some of which, to a woman who would speak of Him for whom he gave his very life to save, are more terrible than the reality of the symbolical nondescript with seven heads and ten horns. One would think the mansions in our Father's house were classified and graded for their respective occupants in accordance with their peculiar dogmas, and the stiffest conventionalist, who is horrified and disgusted at public prayer, and a baptismal BURIAL, is to be the sovereign potentate to which all other castes and cliques are tributary. Good Lord, deliver me from water-gruel christians.

But the time has come when we are to live with eyes single to the glory of God. We may do the best we can to be prepared for the judgment, and still we shall be unworthy. While we give assent to the reality, let us not fail to investigate its evidence; and if we attain no higher exaltation in this life than did God's Son, we shall not only be pecuniarily poor, but the humility of Him will live in the lives and deeds occasioned by a divine relation to One who is now the "King of kings", and oh! when the angel of judgment heralds His return, may an independence life, guaged by his hallowed spirit, be the only garment of righteousness we need to identify us as the accepted guests to that immortal banquet of the Lamb.

The World's Crisis.—Its Mission.

It has accomplished much good, especially within a few months past. Its friends are forming a stronger attachment for it, and its former enemies are becoming its friends. It has done much good in the past, and it must do much more in the future. Its character should be "first pure, then peaceable." It should steadfastly proclaim the "pure" truth—undiluted—which is "meat in due season" to the household of faith. It should not be a mere "slop-dish," into which every experimenter may put a dose of poison, to gratify the deranged notions of some people concerning a free paper. It should be a free paper for a PURE PURPOSE, leaving it discretional with a competent (not infallible) Editor what will best subserve the interests of that cause. It is too late in the day to palaver about any other freedom. It is death to the cause to do so. We have found it out by bitter experience. The churches see it, and will no longer be deluded into the belief that they must drink dish-water, instead of pure milk, to suit those who have no clearer conceptions of a free paper. It must "feed the flock." Its former peaceable character has proved almost an inestimable blessing to the cause. Such should be its future character. It should continue to breathe the spirit of peace. Bitter contention and sour strife never bring any permanent benefit to the cause. Let the Crisis still breathe the spirit of purity and peace.

W. SHELDON.

Our Motives.

That we are condemned or rewarded according to the motive by which we are actuated, is a plain principle incorporated throughout the Sacred Volume. Our motives may be impugned by our fellow beings, through "envy" or other selfish designs, or from ignorance of what is in our heart. But no such thing can happen between us and our Creator. Our Father well knew the infirmities incident to our nature, and that often our best and most vigorous exertions might to us appear wholly abortive, and thus we be disheartened and discouraged. But are such efforts considered useless by Him who says, "Go work in my vineyard"? Will our heavenly Employer complain of us or threaten to discharge us under such circumstances? Nay, verily. What if I lack discernment so that I cannot descry a false prophet, and I divide my loaf in obedience to the command—"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers," and after all find I have entertained a base hypocrite—a "wolf in sheep's clothing"—shall I despair, or conclude to discontinue my labors of love? By no means. My wages are to be the same, as though my labors had accomplished all I designed.

It is true these mistakes TRY us; but we should be consoled with the fact that they do not influence our Employer to withhold our wages or to discharge us. No, never. Let us turn to Matt 10:41, and read his encouraging words under such circumstances: "He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward, and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward." Ah! yes. He well knew the motive which influenced us to entertain those we considered as belonging to Christ, and the Apostle shows us in Heb 6:10, that God will not forget that motive.

But perhaps the Scriptures do not afford a more striking precedent of the appreciation of the motive by the Master, than the case of the woman who broke the alabaster box of "precious" or costly ointment and poured it profusely upon his person. This ointment or perfumery was indeed costly, its value amounting to forty-one dollars and fifty cents, and the disciples not understanding the real motive of the woman, "troubled" her with accusations of prodigality, addressing to her the following question: "To what purpose is this waste?" and then suggested the superior utility of that amount used in a different direction. But He who well knew the motive which actuated every heart, gave them a gentle reproof for their parsimonious prudence, and highly commended this woman for her noble generosity and heartfelt devotion, and then assured them this magnanimous deed should not be hid in the grave with this woman, but be reiterated wherever the rays of the gospel sun should shine throughout the whole world "for a memorial of her."

Now is it not quite obvious that this encomium was not bestowed with the promise of celebrity and renown, on account of the real utility of the deed, that is, that which is strictly needful for the perpetuity of animal or spiritual life? That Christ did not value this perfumery on his person for the gratification of his physical senses, or to please the olfactory nerves of those around him, is quite evident—his whole pilgrimage in this world proving the contrary. But it was the generous devotional motive of the heart which drew forth this strong language of approbation from Him that "spake as never man spake." Then it it is the kind and benevolent motive of the heart, even in the absence of real utility, which is so highly appreciated by our Master, shall we not value every outward act, however trivial, prompted by kind and friendly feelings?

Let us try to learn, to appreciate, what God appreciates. Flowers are the boon of a munificent Creator, created solely for the affectionate gratification of one or two of our senses. But are not flowers necessary for the production of fruit? Were the delicate and variegated colors necessary for the production of fruit, unless our Creator had had some design of gratifying the sense of the beautiful? Would not our golden, scarlet, and delicately tinted fruit taste just as sweet divested of its painted beauty?

Again. How many thousands of flowers, exquisitely formed, sweetly blending the richest and most beautiful of colors, subserve no purpose except the gratification of the eye! What shall we conclude was our Creator's motive in giving us so many rich and beautiful flowers, unless they were to stand as a token of his desire to please; of his affectionate regard and deep friendship? If so, what is the motive of intelligent beings, made in the image of God, who proffer each other these choice though short-lived mementoes, but a desire to please, evidencing thereby the friendly emotions of the donor; while it sweetens and cheers the heart of the donee. What benevolent heart will not almost involuntarily breathe out a blessing upon one who shall place within its hand a collection of nature's sweetest and choicest beauties? How such favors serve to enliven and burnish all those finer feelings so necessary to the happiness of society!

Shall we not be careful, then, to cherish "friendship"—the sweetest boon of heaven, by using all those facilities kindly placed within our reach—a kind look—a pleasant word—a beautiful flower; in fine, anything to smooth and cheer life's rough and uneven path; that at last we may be gathered where friendship is never blighted, where flowers never fade, and where every motive is pure?

Pray.

Life's pilgrim, sad and lonely,
Now peering through shadows drear,
Bereft of hopes that only
Were left thy heart to cheer
Grieve not, but pray,
That hope's bright ray
May joy impart
To thy sad heart.

Brood not in gloomy sorrow
O'er dangers past and gone,
But rise to greet the morrow,
That will with sunshine come.
Sink not below
The tide of wo,
But earnest pray
For gleams of day.

When sunny joys delight thee
With quiet scenes of peace,
As when dark sorrows blight thee,
And wildest storms increase,—
Thou still should'st pray
For that bright way,
To cheer thy sight
With joyful light.

Is Man Immortal?

If so, why is it that a pressure on the brain causes immediate insensibility? Could the mind, if it were immortal, be affected in this way? Could its consciousness be affected by sleep? If all possess immortal spirits or souls, why is it that we have youthful idiots and adult simpletons? Why is it, if we possess immortal souls, that the blaze does not kindle and burn with equal brightness, in youth, manhood, and old age? If the mind be immortal, why is it dependent upon the organization? If men can think and reason without a brain (that is, when they are dead,) what should hinder them from thinking with an improper brain? And if they cannot reason with an idiotic or an improper brain, how can they do so without any brain at all? If the mind or spirit is immortal, why is it that the atmospheric changes will either elevate or depress it? Is an immortal being subject to atmospheric changes? Why is it when the body is diseased the mind is affected? What then must be the consequence when the body is dead? Will some one reconcile the above questions with the idea that man is immortal? If I am in an error by believing that mortal man does not possess an immortal soul, will some one show me the error from the word of the Lord? I am confident we do not enter upon our reward at death, and that we are dependant upon Christ at the resurrection for immortality and eternal life.

Hobbies at Campmeeting.

BRO GRANT:—As the season for campmeeting is drawing near, and as many brethren are prone to bring their hobbies with them, would it not be well to suggest that they leave them all at home? I do not wish to be understood that I believe it wrong to agitate the doctrines of the gospel, and to discuss them at proper times; but I think the campmeeting is not the proper place for such discussion, but more especially for prayer, praise, worship, etc. We know that the harmony of many campmeetings and conferences, and other meetings, has been disturbed by a few brethren giving undue prominence to some favorite doctrine or theory, which generally calls up an opposition, and when doctrinal discussion commences in a social meeting, peace and harmony spread their wings for flight.

I think the two grand objects of a campmeeting should be, an increase of the spirituality of the church, and the conversion of sinners to God, not to men's theories or opinions. One of the rules of the Methodist campmeeting is, that no discussion be allowed inside the circle of the tents, and I think if our Advent brethren would adopt a similar rule, it would add much to the success of their meetings. I make these suggestions because there are many brethren whose only mode of conveyance to the kingdom is on hobbies, and they are sure to ride them to the campmeeting, which is often disturbed thereby.

Let us look into a social meeting in a tent for a moment, in which are some of the bobby riders. We will suppose the leader has opened it with a few appropriate remarks and a short prayer, in which all have joined, and then the brethren and sisters begin to talk, sing and pray, and the Spirit begins to be shed abroad in their hearts, which causes them to shout aloud for joy. The meeting goes on awhile in this manner, when in crowds some brother or sister who think they have a special message for this company, and it must be delivered. They get up and commence to talk, and they talk and talk and talk, and deprive many trembling ones of an opportunity to testify for Jesus; and if they don't drive half the occupants of the tent away, it is quite perceptible that the spirituality of the meeting has declined, and every one wishes they would stop; and if the meeting does not wind up in a discussion, it is very fortunate. This is no fancy sketch.

A campmeeting should be like the gathering of children and grand-children at the old homestead at Thanksgiving. They do not begin to dispute and wrangle, but each one tries with pleasant words and kind offices to add to the happiness of the family. Doctrinal discussion merely for conquest shows a sordid mind, and no one filled with the love of God will engage in it with such a motive, and few will be won to Christ by such means. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

In conclusion, shall we not have the best meeting at Wilbraham this year that has ever been convened at that pleasant grove? In order to have it so, there must be much prayer, praise, and worship, and but little discussion. Let the weary pilgrims lay by for one week the cares and troubles of these trying times, and come up to this feast, to gather new strength to do battle in the conflict with sin, and the perils of these days. Much more might be said upon this subject, but my motto is, short prayers, exhortations, and communications.

Closing the Sisters' Lips.

Lose by it, brethren? Yes, you do lose by it—immensely, incalculably! There is no calculating how much you lose by this gag-law! The loss cannot be reckoned up in order till heaven and earth pass away! Look at your meetings for prayer, praise and conference! How are they? full of life, hope, spirit, glory? or are they dull, formal, lukewarm, cold as an iceberg? Are not your social meetings for worship formal, generally—lifeless, spiritless, profitless—where the sisters are prohibited the expression of their religious views and feelings audibly? where their lips are closed in prayer, testimony, and exhortation? Can you deny the fact of this lack of energy, life, power, soul-kindling, the tongue of fire, wherever this prohibition exists? It as clear as the noonday sun. Where permission is given to pious, godly females to open their lips for Jesus in social worship, speak for God, declare what great things he has done for them, there you perceive a holy, life-giving, soul-cheering impulse, the fire of gospel truth. The atmosphere is heavenly—God, himself, sets his seal of approbation. There is something in the very nature of sanctified female influence, elevating and purifying. The voice of a meek, modest, lovely sister in Christ Jesus, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, is harmonious and attractive!

"Grace was in all her steps, heaven in her eyes,
In every gesture dignity and love."
"There doth beauty dwell,
There most conspicuous, even in outward shape,
Where dawns the high expression of a mind."

And when she rises to witness for Jesus, with modest, dignified assurance, moves as the Spirit moves, speaks in wisdom as God gives utterance, the fire kindles from heart to heart, burns brightly; souls, moreover, are often convicted and converted to God savingly under this benign influence. . . . Furthermore, by withholding their testimony, you deprive them of a God-given right—the right and privilege of God's house—the sanctuary of the Most High. How many beloved sisters in the Lord, curtailed in their christian graces by this cruel, unscriptural monopoly, become barren fixtures, mere cyphers in the church of Christ, that might have shone as lights in the world, been the salt of the earth, cities set on hills! "Wo to the world because of offences; for it must needs be that offences come; but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh." Friends, you had better have a mill-stone about your neck, and be cast into the depths of the sea, than offend one of these "little ones."

"Speak for Jesus, sisters, speak!
Go with faith, and tears, and pleading,
Point the dying to the Savior,
For them ever interceding!"

The Fellow Servant of John and the Prophets.

"Then he said unto me, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God."—Rev. 22:9.

"Then he said unto me, See thou do it not; I am the fellow servant of thee, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of those that keep the words of this book. Worship God."—Wm. Kelly's translation of the book of Rev.

That the angel which served John was the fellow servant of the prophets, appears a matter of certainty when we compare the personal appearance of each as given by Daniel and John.

DANIEL'S ANGEL.

"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold, a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz."—Dan. 10:5.
"His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning."—Dan. 10:6.
"And his eyes as lamps of fire."—Dan. 10:6.
"And his arms and his feet like in color to polished brass."—Dan. 10:6.
"And the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude."—Dan. 10:6.

JOHN'S ANGEL.

"And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle."—Rev. 1:13.
"And his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength."—Rev. 1:16.
"And his eyes were as a flame of fire."—Rev. 1:14.
"And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace."—Rev. 1:15.
"And his voice as the sound of many waters".—Rev. 1:15.

Whether this angel of Daniel be the Son of God himself, or "one like unto the Son of man," as both Daniel and John express it, matters but little since two angels were present in both cases; the Son of God and his angel both resembled each other in personal appearance. We learn from Daniel (8th chap.) that the name of one angel is Gabriel; and (10th chap.) that Michael was sent to help Gabriel, and that there is "none that holdeth with me (Gabriel) in these things but Michael, your prince." Daniel 10:21. Then if the unfolding of prophecy be committed to Michael, our great prince, and his angel Gabriel, who only also resembled Michael, we know what the Revelator meant when he said that Jesus Christ received the revelation from God, and "he (Christ or Michael) sent and signified it by his angel (Gabriel) unto his servant John."

More may be learned about this [illegible]tial servant Gabri[illegible] by consulting Luke 1:19, 26. This same man (for thus Daniel calls him) clothed in linen, swore that three times and a half and these "wonders" should "be finished." Dan. 12:6, 7. And this same angel swears (and the only angel we have any account of that ever swore) to John (Rev. 10:5–7.) that the three times and a half are ended, and then the "mysteries" or "wonders" are finished. We also have in the 10th of Daniel the secret why angels are so frequently called men. In verse 5th he is called "a certain man." Verse 16, one like the "similitude of the sons of men," "the appearance of men."

Then if the angel which served Daniel, John, and the prophets, is called a man when he was a man only in "similitude or "appearance," let us not countenance this fable of these last days, that angels are the spirits of dead men; but let us rather believe that man (like Jesus when he took upon him the form of man,) "was made a little lower than the angels."

Since angels then, though a higher order of beings than man, are yet the servants of men, from this let us learn a lesson of humility, and become the servants of mankind, that we may one day be (not angels, but) "as the angels of God in heaven." Matt. 22:30.

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL."—Rom. 13:9. These are the words given to Moses upon tables of stone by the eternal God. What then shall I do? Trample the law of God under my feet, and yield obedience to the law of man? Never! If Baal were God, him would I serve. But I know that the Lord of heaven is God, and him only will I serve. We have come into the valley of decision when men must decide for the future. Therefore I must say that I have decided to serve God, and that I never will put my trust in the arm of flesh. My feet are firmly planted upon the rock of strength. My hope is anchored within the vail. My life is hid with Christ in God. I am saved now, and hope to be saved eternally. The warnings that are given to-day are the last. "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven."—Heb. 12:25.

RECIPE FOR A HAPPY HOME.—Six things are requisite to create a "happy home." Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed with affection, lighted up with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity, day by day; while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except a blessing from above.

World's Conversion.

This is still, more or less, the favorite theme of the popular pulpit preaching. The religionists of the day cannot bear the thought of Christ's coming quite yet. They have a certain amount of work (which seems to increase on their hands) to accomplish before they would have the Lord make his personal appearing.

Not long since I was conversing with a Congregationalist minister, who in the course of his remarks said he believed that the prophetic dates run out in 1867–8; still he did not believe that the second coming of Christ, or the literal resurrection of the dead, would transpire at that time. His view was, that about 1867–8, all political and ecclesiastical despotism would be broken down, slavery done away, and the nations of earth joined together in one great and grand republic, proclaiming liberty and peace to the world, resulting in the universal spread and belief of the gospel, and the conversion of all mankind.

But while this is the faith of one, it is also of many; perhaps the great majority of religious teachers in this country hold and advocate the same sentiment; hence the great mass of professed christians are taught to believe that we are on the eve of the world's great and glorious good time, so long looked for, of which poets have sung, and philosophers predicted, as "the golden age," the crown of human progress. But how is this glorious era to be introduced? By the coming of Christ? Nay, verily. "We have no such expectation." The coming of the Lord has no place in their thoughts,—anything else but the advent of Messiah now. It would be a terrible interference. That he should dwell in heaven, they have no objection, but on earth, they have no room for him; and strange to say, yet true, his own enemies are not so much startled and displeased at the news of his coming as are his professed friends. The news of Messiah's coming makes the popular church feel uncomfortable. They have no desire to hear it, though calculated to be the most cheering, encouraging, and life-giving news to the saint; yet to the popular church it is like the sounding of the death knell which they cannot bear to hear.

"The golden age"—the millennial era for which they look, is not to be inaugurated by the presence of the Lord. He may overrule and providentially direct things in heaven; but they have made no calculation for his commanding things in person on earth. Human instrumentality and the arm of flesh are thought to be sufficient for the task without further aid. But, alas! for those that walk in blindness, for they have no just conception of what is coming. Their millennium is the conversion of the world by the gospel, subsequent to the triumph of republicanism over despotism; whereas it ought to be the triumph of Christ over both republicanism and despotism, and the destruction of the world instead of its conversion. Though strange, yet 'tis true that scores of religious teachers, yea, the majority of them are, with the zeal of Paul and the eloquence of Apollos, advocating no other gospel than Republicanism, and no other millennium than the triumph of Republican principles, followed by the universal spread of the gospel and the conversion of the world. Alas! for their efforts, vain and foolish as they are, for sudden destruction cometh upon them.

The doctrine of the world's conversion will prove terribly disastrous to those who are thus blinded by it; for upon them the advent of Christ will come as a snare. They earnestly desire the day of the Lord, but they do not realize the nature of that day. They look for a day of light, liberty, and the world's conversion; but the prophet says, "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness and not light. Shall not the day of the Lord be darkness and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it!"—Amos 5 : 18–20. Thus will those who are looking for the world's conversion be sorely disappointed. Instead of its being a day of gospel triumph and brilliant light, it is, on the contrary, a day of darkness; "even very dark, and no brightness in it." But if the doctrine be true that the world will be converted before the advent of Messiah, it is high time to see some omens of it. Mankind should be growing better. The world by this time ought to be nearly converted, the majority at least ought to be christians; while among the heathen, Mohammedans and Jews, the gospel ought to be accomplishing wonders in turning men from their idols to serve the living God; war, and bloodshed, and political commotion ought to be ceasing; slavery and despotism ought to be in the past; and instead of the national trouble, distress and perplexity that now exist, there should be freedom, prosperity, peace, and confident security; and if, hand in hand with the world's conversion, Republicanism is to be universally triumphant, then, certainly by this time, it should have nearly conquered the globe. But no, we can see no such progress toward the world's conversion; no significant sign, or heavenly light, or rising star, is to be seen, either in the religious or political world, that in the least indicates the dawning of that glorious era,—the world's conversion, of which men are vainly dreaming. On the contrary, all is dark! dark! Mens' hearts are growing hard, and their ears dull. The many have no relish for the word of God, and multitudes have turned and are turning away from the truth, and "giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," while infidelity threatens to sweep the land.

That religious teachers should persist at this late day in looking for the world's conversion seems hardly possible. The history and experience of the past should have taught them better; but if not, the startling facts of the present, and the gloomy prospect of the future, are enough to banish their dreams forever. When danger threatens, and destruction stares one in the face, men should awake and cease to cry "peace and safety." This is the condition of the world now. Instead of conversion, the great and terrible day of the Lord is at hand. The whirlwind is rising, the tempest blowing, and the dark, thick clouds of an angry storm cast their shadows over an ungodly world, ripe for destruction. Foreseeing the world's present condition, the prophet could say, "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly; even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty men shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord: and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as dung."—Zeph. 1 14–17. No language could be better descriptive of that state of things that seems to be rapidly approaching and coming on the earth. It is trouble, distress, and destruction, instead of peace, prosperity, and conversion. O! may some be converted before that day shall come, for mid all the darkness, trouble and distress, Jehovah will not forsake his people. Though awful judgments are in store for this world, yet the same prophet that announces them, also says, in that day "the Lord will be the hope of his people." If our trust and confidence is in God, all is safe, for he knoweth them that trust in him. Geo. Moyer.

Brief Journal.—No. 2.

While on board the steamer "Wisconsin," it was my pleasure to form an agreeable acquaintance with Prof. Walker, of Ohio, a Congregational minister of high standing, and an author of several theological works. I was astonished to hear him boldly confess that he fully believed in the "annihilation of the wicked," and had been inclined to it for several years. He was, however, destitute of the true light upon the state of the dead. But he presented but one argument in favor of the separate existence of the soul, and that certainly was new and original. It was this:

"Inasmuch as the wicked are finally to be annihilated, it would be reasonable to suppose that they had received a part of their punishment between death and the resurrection, as mere annihilation would be an insufficient reward."

"Well, Professor, your own argument is at war with itself, for, as people die at the rate of 82,000 per day, many will die just prior to the resurrection, who will not have time to share in this intermediate punishment, so if they can be justly annihilated without an intermediate punishment, why could not their predecessors?"

The Professor evinced consciousness of his inability to extricate himself from the dilemma. To enlighten his mind upon this subject, I gave him a copy of "Ghostology." After reading enough to get an insight into the nature of the work, he appeared much pleased with it (not knowing that I was its author), and tried to make me take pay for it. I offered to forward him other works on the same topic, as he wished to read more on the subject.

On Sunday, Aug. 10th, by the request of the Captain and passengers, I preached on board the boat, in the middle of Lake Erie. Presented to an attentive audience the condition of the christian in this world, in contrast with his condition when immortal, in the world to come.

During our Lake voyage, we encountered several severe storms, and after they were over we passed several wrecked vessels. There is such an immense amount of shipping done on these western lakes, that I wonder there are no more wrecks. I have stood and counted fifty-five vessels, all in sight at once.

After a safe voyage of fourteen hundred and ten miles by water, without change of boat, through Lakes Michigan, Huron, Erie and Ontario, and down the bold St Lawrence river, we reached Ogdensburgh on the 13th of August, from whence we took the cars to Chateaugay, N. Y., where a portion of my relatives reside, reaching the place on the 14th of August. Tarried over Sunday, and preached to them. Here I found a letter from Bro. Grant (forwarded from Wis.), containing $10 from Bro. Stetler of Philadelphia, to aid me in my mission of love. God bless the generous donor. Also, letters from other brethren, containing words of cheer. Though now in the East, I am not unmindful of my western friends. Be faithful. W. Sheldon.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 27, 1862.

☞ Please remember to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—o.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

On the Conn. R. R., tickets will be furnished those who go to the campmeeting by the Conductors—not by the agents at the stations. Passes will be given, which must be indorsed by G. T. Adams, or they will have to pay full fare when they return. We find the only trains from Boston which stop at the camp-ground, leave the city at 4.15 A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M.

Talk with him.

Why did you come to this campmeeting? "I felt the need of more interest in the cause of Christ, and I thought this would be a good place to receive strength."

Well, persons gain strength by exercise. Let me show you a short way to accomplish your object. Go and talk with that man yonder who is evidently a stranger here, and ask him if he is one of Jesus' friends? If he is, you will meet a hearty welcome, and you will both be comforted; if not, tell him how to be a christian, and ask him to come into the prayer meeting. By so doing, you may save a soul from death, and will certainly kindle up "more interest" in your own heart. The secret of enjoying religion consists in well-doing. As soon as we stop working in the vineyard of the Lord, we begin to grow cold and stupid. If you have been idle in time past, now begin to work. Do not leave the ground without doing something for Jesus, who has done so much for you. Try to cheer up some drooping soul, or lead some wanderer back to the fold. In this way you will gain what you so much desire,—"more interest in the cause of Christ," a stronger faith and love, and a brighter evidence of your acceptance by the Lord. Come, try it. Do not hesitate. Now is the time. Take up the cross, and a blessing will follow.—o.

The Petition.

In three days, we have received three hundred and sixty-two names. We shall expect many hundred more in a few days. Recruiting goes on well. We hope to have the first regiment full before the first of September. Those who have volunteered appear to be true "Union men," determined to obey the orders of our Captain. We trust not one will ever favor rebeldom. Every soldier should see that he is clothed with the "whole armor of God." Remember it is death for every deserter, and "eternal life" is the bounty for all the faithful. A severe contest is at hand. Gird on your armor. "Quit you like men, be strong."—o.

Meetings in Concord.

The church in Concord, N. H., is getting along finely. It is heart-cheering to hear the stirring testimonies of this young pilgrim band, bound for the land of glory. Two more were baptized last Lord's day, (17th), making thirty-six in all since the 4th of last May. Five rose for prayers in our last meeting, which was one of the best we have had. The Spirit of the good Lord was upon us in power, causing the saints to rejoice, and sinners to tremble. We all felt resolved to obey the orders of our heavenly Captain, till he comes to give the saints the kingdom. We could truly say, the hope never looked more blessed than now. Glory to the Lord!—o.

☞ We hope all will read Bro. D. N. Smith's article on "Hobbies at Campmeeting." His hints are worthy of a careful consideration.—o.

☞ If possible, we purpose to be at the campmeeting in Corinna, Me., the second week in Sept.—o.

The Signs of the Times.

That we have fallen upon strange times—"perilous times,"—no one will dispute. This is a dark hour in the history of our world, and there are no signs of light, but of an increase of darkness, sorrow, sin and misery. The tide of iniquity is setting in upon us with an overwhelming power. Every thing seems to be giving way before its mighty pressure. The Pittsburg Catholic, of Aug. 16th, very truly says:—

"Though the last-born of the nations, we rival the oldest, and the worst of them in evil doing. Debauch has already tainted our blood, and disfigured the fair face of our youth.

Where, within the limits of this Confederacy, can we now find the 'justice' that 'exalteth a nation;' where do we not see the 'sin that maketh nations miserable?' We have a newspaper press with hardly a particle of principle; its managers seeking only self, to put money in their purse, or themselves in political place. We have legislatures that must be bribed to cast even an honest vote; so corrupt that not one of them is able to furnish a sufficient number of honest men to investigate the conduct of the rogues. The same may be said, and with more reason, of our municipal corporations. Nor have our business men much more to boast of in this matter of honesty than our politicians. From among them has come forth, ready trained, and at a moment's warning, that host of sharpers who have already grown rich on the army and navy contracts for this war. The nation seems to be fast losing all regard for the virtue of holy purity. It is seldom that one can now go abroad without meeting something to shock his sense of modesty. Almost the only restraint on the ribald tongue, even in public places, is, not the fear of God, but the presence of woman. An impure literature floods the land in every direction, rotting the very sills of society, in the persons of our youth. Wantonness has become so wide spread, that its stench must have already ascended to heaven against us as a people."

The questions may well arise, "What is coming?" "What do these things mean?" He who looks from a worldly stand-point has no intelligent answer to give. He can only say,—"I cannot tell. These are strange times. I am unable to account for this terrible state of things." But to the Bible student, all is clear. The present state of things is just such as the Scriptures have said should exist a short time before the personal return of our Savior. Just before the end of this dispensation, the church power upon the seven hills at Rome, is to become an object of hatred by its former supporters, and be left desolate. At the same period, according to the instructions of Jesus, there is to be "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity." At the same time also, "Spirits of devils" [demons,] are to "go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." It is evident, beyond all doubt, that the demons have begun the work of gathering the nations for the great battle. When we arrive at this state of things, the next great event is the coming of Christ. Immediately preceding his advent, he tells us "men's hearts" will be "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

We must firmly believe that we are now at this thrilling point of time. O sinner, backslider, prepare for the great day of the Lord. Christian, cheer up; the day of eternal glory is about to dawn. Your loved ones, now sleeping in Jesus, will soon come forth singing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Dear reader, let us be ready to share in their triumph.—o.

"Religion of Human Nature."

Truly these are perilous times. Had the men who lived fifty years ago been informed that in 1862 the world and church would be as we now see it, they would have called him an idle dreamer who should promulgate such monstrous notions, and said he was a fool who believed them. Those who have been proclaiming the conversion of the world for a number of years, must stand confounded before the present state of things in our world. Every thing seems to be rushing to destruction, with no prospect of deliverance. The great mass of our race have rejected God and his word, and are left to "believe a lie," and indorse the "strong delusion" of these last days. They now take "pleasure in unrighteousness," and tell us to follow the "religion of human nature," thus setting aside the plain teachings of the Scriptures, which most expressly inform us that the "natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him." Again the scripture says, "The carnal mind is enmity against God." Whoever follows nature must go to perdition. This is just what the mass of the world are doing. This is the religion of demons, and is taught by Spiritualists as the only true religion. The Bible assures us that we are "by nature the children of wrath."

Satan is now trying by every possible means to get people to throw off all restraint and follow nature, hence it is necessary first to destroy all confidence in the "old paths," as taught in the Scriptures, and by the ministers of the gospel, whom the Lord has appointed to proclaim his word to a guilty world. For this purpose, the arch deceiver has succeeded in raising up many popular teachers to proclaim his gospel of natural religion, or "religion of human nature."

Said Gerrit Smith, in a speech delivered in Boston, Sunday, June 15th, 1862, reported in the Herald of Progress, Aug. 2d,

"There is another great evil . . . in the world. It is far greater than any I have spoken of. It is the priesthood—the sacerdotal or clerical order of men. The priests, be it those of China, Hindostan, Arabia, Persia, Europe America, or elsewhere, and be they however honest, are the worst enemies of mankind. . . . A priesthood is not necessary to teach religion. It is as unnecessary as would be a professorship to teach the necessity of breathing. It is not religion that calls for a priesthood. . . Oh no, religion needs not a priesthood! . . . The religion of human nature is harmony, not only with human nature, but with all nature and with God."

It is very true that "the religion of human nature" "needs not a priesthood." Why did not the Lord find this out before Gerrit Smith and some other modern teachers? and then all the labor of the ministers of Christ might have been saved and devoted to other purposes. Why did not Jesus and the apostles teach us such a religion, if it be the true? Mr. Smith goes on to say:—"The God-made, or true religion, 'babes' had, for they were born with it. All are born with it." If we are born with "true religion," then follows of course that all other religion is false, and all the labor of Christ and his ministers for over eighteen hundred years to get men converted from their natural ways, has only been an effort to get men out of the true religion. This being true, the following remarks of Mr. Smith are quite consistent:—

"To get rid of the priesthood is the greatest need of the people. . . . The people will not get rid of the priesthood so long as they admit the authority and conclusiveness of the Bible, the Koran, and the other sacred books. . . . And they will continue to admit this authority and conclusiveness so long as they believe in the miracles by which these books are authenticated. . . . The only way to get rid of the priesthood is to educate the people to require evidences of what they believe, and to form habits of mind which shall make them as skeptical as they now are credulous. Skepticism is the first step in the world's progress from a blind and false to an intelligent and true faith; and whenever this first step is taken, then the occupation of the priesthood is gone—gone forever."

It will be seen that the Bible and the Koran are classed together, and that we should not admit the authority of the one more than the other. We must also disbelieve the miracles performed by God and his Son. "Skepticism," we are told, "is the first step in the world's progress." If this is not the religion of demons, originating with the father of lies, combined with the "doctrines of devils," we know not where to find it. But as glaring as is this infidelity, there are those who profess to be the followers of Jesus, who are greedy after such preaching as given by Mr. Smith and others of the same school.

He remarks—"I am free to say that a man had better throw away the Bible than retain it as an authority." Still, Mr. Smith, and others who hold similar views, profess great love for the Bible. He says:

"Finally, what will become of Jesus when the age of superstition shall be past, and the priesthood and the authority of the Bible shall be no more?"

We will let the reader answer his emphatic inquiry.—o.

"The Work of Spiritualists."

Under the above heading, we find some interesting remarks in a leading editorial in the Banner of Light, Aug. 2nd. A few extracts will give the reader some idea of what is going on in these last days. It is high time every christian was awake, and clad in "the whole armor of God, that" he "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, [against men], but against . . . spiritual wickedness," margin, "wicked spirits." The marginal reading we think gives the true idea. The Syriac reads, "Evil spirits that are beneath heaven", Whiting—"Wicked spirits in high places", Wesley—"Wicked spirits in heavenly places", Dickenson—"The spirits of iniquity"; Mace—"Wicked ærial spirits"; Macknight—"Wicked spirits in heavenly regions", Scarlett—"Wicked spirits in the ærial regions", Shuttleworth, Paraphrastic Translation,—"Against spiritual beings leagued for his eternal destruction, the various orders of evil angels who rule over the dark elements of this world, and who surround the earth."

We think Shuttleworth expresses the true idea of the text. When such are our opponents, truly we need the whole christian armor, that we may "stand against the wiles of the devil." We now turn to the article to which we have referred.

It commences as follows.—

"It is no mere play that now presents itself to the attention of all spiritual-minded men. The times are changing very fast—are so changed already as to challenge the guesses of the coolest and shrewdest to say where they really are. What was wont to be done in the old time, is going to be of not much further use among the people. . . Multitudes will be overtaken with panic, in spite of themselves, this will be owing to ignorance. . . . Financial systems will suffer first. Then will come the woes of battle and sickness right upon the heels of the other. Passion will in due time exhaust itself; prostrating those who have indulged it, and relied on its always treacherous power. They who are worth the most in lands and moneys, will actually be the poorest; for, by reason of taxes and other responsibilities, the very grasshopper will be a burden. To be rich, will be to be poor. The new epoch is so very near to the door, that we shall soon witness for ourselves, and hardly think to confess ourselves astonished."

As the demons have already made known their plans to their mediums, sufficient to have some preliminaries arranged relative to the new form of government about to arise, this change will not surprise Spiritualists, as it will many others, who neither know what the demons are doing, nor see the light now shining from the prophetic page, showing what the Lord is about to do; but the worst panic will seize the followers of Spiritualism, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven." If we did not see just such movements as are now before us, and at hand to come, of which the Spiritualists are speaking from week to week, we should not have reason to believe, as we have now, that we shall very soon see Jesus himself "coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."

The Banner goes on to show that a class of men needed instruction before the new government was inaugurated, in order that they might act understandingly; and then shows that Spiritualists have received this intelligence through the spirits. The writer speaks as follows:—

"The world, or this portion of it, at least, is just about to reach an experience which will positively demand a new order of men to master and manage it. Are these men ready for their work? They cannot be summoned on a sudden from the mass of those whose thoughts have been steadily turned in another direction, and expected to perform a service altogether foreign to their education, their habits, their tastes, and their capacities. Certainly not. What then? It follows that the new men who are to come up must somewhere have been going through a course of preparation and training for what they are about to do. They may have been kept in entire ignorance of it themselves, and probably have been; but that makes no difference."

Once more, we would say to all christians, gird on the armor. A conflict is at hand, when only true men of God will be able to stand; when mere human strength will be as Goliath before David. My brethren in Christ, you will need to "take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day." Now is the time for brave men,—men who love the truth,—to stand up boldly in its defense. There are thousands who will enlist to fight with carnal weapons, and face the cannon's mouth on the battle field, where there is one who has the courage to be a soldier of Christ, and arm himself with "the helmet of salvation," "the breastplate of righteousness," "the shield of faith," "the sword of the Spirit," having his "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," and the "loins girt about with truth;" but no other armor is the "armor of God." Without this, none will "be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Creeds and popish titles, forms and ceremonies, liturgies and heartless prayers will not answer for these times, if we expect "to stand" when the coming storm bursts upon our wicked world. Every unholy thing must be given up, or we are without "the breastplate of righteousness," and if destitute of this, our destruction is sure. We must have "the sword of the Spirit," or be like a man in a battle field with no means of defence. We must love the truth, and be "girt about with" it, or be left to "believe a lie" of Satan's coining. Our feet must be "shod with the . . . gospel of peace," or we shall not "be able to stand" in "the coming struggle." If we are armed with carnal weapons, we shall show to the world that we are destitute of "the shield of faith," and, consequently, exposed to "all the fiery darts of the wicked." If we expect to be approved by the King of kings when he comes, we must "arm" ourselves "with the same mind" that was in him; "who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered, he threatened not." "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Are we ready for the last struggle?—o.

The Safe Position.

A brother writing from Tassinong, Ind., subscribes for the Crisis, and says he is "waiting to see what the signs of the times will reveal." "It is truly an awful state that this nation has come to at last! May God direct the storm that seems to be gathering!"

It has happened at last that in our own country, as well as in Europe, we can trace the hand of God in making ready for the final storm. But whatever occurs on this continent can amount to no more than a single item in the grand sum total. And be the final storm nearer or more remote than we suppose, the spirit and temper of the present movements in this country—as well as the precise period of their occurrence—clearly indicate that they are introductory to, if not emphatically a part of, the great world-battle before us. Let us suggest, in confirmation of this statement, that students of prophecy who had never studied political economy, and cared nothing for what is called "politics," were a few years ago made the subjects of ridicule because they preached, and affirmed they looked for national calamities in this country, just such as we now witness; although how such a state of things would be brought about, no one could tell. And although in our humanity we may ardently hope, if time is to last a few years, this bloody war will speedily come to an end, and prosperity come again to our nation, yet we must acknowledge the prospect for a final peace looks exceedingly discouraging at present, although we conquer the rebels.

Nor is this gloomy prospect confined to this country. Every newspaper reader knows how terribly portentous are the war-clouds that have been gathering these several years over Europe. All who have made the subject of prophecy their special study, clearly see that our world is about to be deluged in a sea of troubles. "A time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." It is before us. We have nearly come to it; and to avoid it we cannot, except by hiding in the ark of safety provided by Jesus Christ. To be indifferent now is criminal: to sleep is madness: like the madness that would let one go to sleep beneath an avalanche, or on the crater of a burning mountain. All things in heaven and earth adjure us to maintain the most steadfast faith, and to cease not, day or night, to look for the sign of the Son of man.

We say then, in studiously watching the signs of the times—in paying good heed to the "more sure word of prophecy," "until the day dawn"—and withal having a firm trust and active faith in God, who will "direct the storm," is the only safe position for those who will be found ready for the coming kingdom.—m.

A FEW WORDS TO HIS MEMORY.

Another soldier has fallen upon the battle field! A veteran in the most honored army of earth has gone to rest. Peace to the sacred dust! May the words that he uttered for his Master abide with us, that it may be said, "Though dead, he yet speaketh."

I have never had a personal acquaintance with our brother, yet through his writings have known him for many years. And it has ever been my conviction that he was a firm, tried friend to the cause of God. On most points he seemed to me sound in matters of faith, and in matters of controversy ever exhibited the Spirit of Christ. How often have we heard him enjoining upon brethren the pure and blessed traits set forth in the gospel, ever magnifying that grace which exalts the children of God above those of the world. He seemed frequently like the beloved apostle to give the exhortation—"Little children, love one another." It is my opinion that he has always been ready to sacrifice reputation to that which he regarded as truth. I remember, when quite a child, hearing it said of him that he advocated some strange notions. We resided in the same place (Hartford, Conn.), and my impression of him was, that he was peculiar. What those ideas were, whether relative to the Son of God, the Sabbath, or something else, I know not, but since that time, am sure he has been one of the "peculiar people" in advocating the doctrine of Christ's speedy advent, and immortality only through him. After his supposed recovery from recent illness, I wrote to him expressing the sympathy felt for him during that season of trial, and my joy in his recovery. Soon after, I received a reply, which now lies before me, and which is so full of comforting assurances and holy thoughts, it is my desire that others should receive the benefit of its perusal; and so copy it for an insertion in the Crisis.

Phila., July 9th, 1862.

My Dear Sister:—Your kind, christian letter was duly received. I well remember the name of your respected father, although I had no personal acquaintance with him. How glorious will be the union and fellowship of all the redeemed family in the coming reign of our blessed Lord. How light and transient are all present trials of faith and patience compared with the 'far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.' How cheerfully should we bear, dear sister, the little suffering we are called to endure for His truth who bore our sins in his own body on the tree.

'Our sufferings are not worth a thought,
When, Lord, compared with thine.'

I sympathize with you and your dear partner in joy and tribulation, and pray that you may ever remember the words of Jesus to his disciples,—'Have faith in God.' Also his animating promise—If I go away, I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am, there ye may be also.

Be careful for nothing, but in every thing, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, (and that for trials, too), let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus. I am still weak, but through divine goodness improving slowly. Your affec. brother in Christ,

Henry Grew."

And now he sleeps in Jesus! Peaceful sleep,
To hear no more the sorrowful report
Of war's dread evils—to be tried no more
With the heart-sickening woes of sin-cursed earth.
Never again to feel his frame bowed down
By sickness, or infirmities of age.
Peaceful that slumber. In a "little while"
"Death will be swallowed up in victory",
Our brother will awake to blissful life,
Glowing all brightly in immortal youth.

Groaning in Spirit.

Bro. Grant:—Truly I may say that the sight of my eyes affecteth my heart. We are in the midst of the hour of trial. For many years have the religionists of this country striven with a good deal of success (and their zeal has been commendable) in efforts for the moral culture of the youth of the land. Sunday Schools have taken the business of the pulpit. Every attention has been given to that enterprise, that every attendant should learn the ten commandments. The society of the young has been strictly watched, and every thing that would contaminate has been quickly marked and guarded against. But a great change has come. Since the Rebellion has broken out in this land, those young men who were required to repeat the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," are fitted out, even in the Sunday School, with revolvers and Bibles, to go forth to kill,—are prayed for, that if they fall on the battle field they may be found in heaven with the saved. The sons of the pastor, the sons of the deacons, are urged to fall into the ranks, and go forth to battle. Young men in the church are appealed to from the pulpit to be patriotic and stand for the right.

The picture does not stop here. These same young, inexperienced men, that are leaving the enclosure of moral culture, are in a short time encamped with the vilest of associates, placed under the most debasing influences conceivable. They are to go to defend "religious liberty," the "laws of God and the land." In the school-room hang the cards on which are printed, "Blessed are the peacemakers,"—"Blessed are the merciful." But now this hangs over the gate of the Old South Church in this city,—"The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." A rendezvous is kept in the yard for enlistment of church members, Sabbath School youth and others, to go in battle array. They are to show no mercy, but to shoot down as many as they can. As said one minister in addressing some that were departing for the scene of strife, "Go out as christians. When you see the enemy, be sure and take good aim, and fire in the name of the Lord." (I think the Lord would say, "Not in my name.")

Said a prominent Deacon, "We had a very interesting scene last evening at the gathering of our Sunday School. Fourteen young men, who have been in the School, came to take their final leave to join the army,—my own son among them, not quite eighteen years old." Said another Deacon, "I have sent one son, and if I had two more I should want them to go." Said a third, "My son, who was converted a few months since, I have given up. He is going. I want you to pray for him and these other young men, that God would shield them in the day of battle. I am fearful of the influences that will surround them, for the sailors and soldiers swear terribly. I never heard anything beat it" (and he had followed the sea many years). Said a chaplain of the army, who was home on a furlough, speaking of the troops, "They swear awfully, and they fight as terribly." And at a large meeting he said, "When they come you will have a great work to do for them, for I awfully fear the effect on the minds of so many young men that go out. On one Sunday morning I went outside of one of the camps. There I found seven or eight squads of them gambling. I told them that would not do. I gave them some tracts and told them to read them to day—it was Sunday." Thus we see the influences that these deacons' sons have been and are being sent among.

Ministers hereabouts close their services in the afternoon of Sunday and invite the congregation to the vestry, where may be found recruiting officers to receive the signatures of those who will join themselves to the army. This we learn took place last Sunday. Others appeal from the desk with all the eloquence of politicians.

Where is the professing church going, if not to perdition? The God of the Bible, I fear, is not the God they worship. The standard has been lowered so far that Satan has almost complete control. Pride has crowded in, and meekness, kindness, gentleness and the love of God are crowded out. We have come about to the time when we may "discern . . . . between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not. For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven." W. C. Stone.

The Love of Money.

Paul says, "the love of money is the root of all evil"; and James, "ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." And now they are paying it out by thousands. Brethren, what shall we do? We want volunteers for the kingdom of God. Let us send them the truth. Bro. Hastings has made an appeal to us who have means to spread the truth, and shall we not be as free as our neighbors?

We, pardon me, I should say I, love the stars and stripes, and if I must live under an earthly government give me this; but I love the banner of Jesus better, and for this may be called disloyal, and all I have will and must be sacrificed. We cannot carry our money much further if we are in the narrow way. We cannot be loyal to the North and South at the same time. We cannot fight under two opposite banners. We are one thing or the other. Now let us wake up and show our love by our works.

I am ready to do all I can. I am not able to buy tracts, but I will carry them to every house on my way. I have sacrificed all for the truth, and I bless God he has sustained me thus far, though sometimes the pittance is small; but I remember the promise, "Go, and whatsoever is right I will give you"; and I shall get it. Come, brethren, let us rally.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Benj. Spaulding.

Dear Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say through the Crisis to my brethren scattered abroad, that I am well, body and mind, and in the field laboring to promulgate the great truths of the present age,—the coming of Jesus, the setting up of the glorious, everlasting kingdom; the resurrection of the dead, their unconsciousness between death and the resurrection, and the destruction of the wicked. My health is good. I feel like spending and being spent in the cause. I love the work. Since I was in Boston, about ten days ago, I have visited Martha's Vineyard, and traveled the whole length of the island, visiting most of the families on the route, giving a large amount of tracts on these great Bible subjects. I think there has been but little said here on this important doctrine, for the people seem quite ignorant of it.

One young lady, a school teacher, of a very intelligent mind on most subjects, was amazed at the light which shone on the subject. Said she had considered these subjects of little importance, and had never investigated them at all. She probably will do it. She took her pencil and paper, and noted down the proof texts on several of these subjects. She wondered she had not seen things in this light before. Said it looked reasonable and philosophical, as well as scriptural. What an account will her religious teachers have to give. I left her several tracts, which may lead her into the truth, and felt encouraged in her case.

I have visited the Aborigines of this island,—the Guy Head Indians,—the remains of a once powerful tribe. I visited most of their houses, but as it happened at campmeeting time, many of them were absent, as help, at the meeting, hence I did not see perhaps half of them. They received me very kindly indeed. I felt perfectly free among them. Went just as I would among Yankees, being very familiar, making many inquiries, noticing the children in particular, giving them little children's books, and Sabbath School papers, and they in turn inquired where I was from? who sent me? how I got my pay? etc., etc. To all such questions I have ready answers, and it seems to gain their confidence, when they see my motive is not money. Let me relate my visit to one family, as a specimen. I was drawing near the door, when a young lady met me with a smile of approbation, and her hand extended to shake hands, with the salutation,—"How do you do, sir?" I was not afraid to shake the hand of the dark-colored lady, with her brawny high cheek bones, and her well proportioned person, although she had on a somewhat ragged dress, about the same size at the bottom as at the top. "I am a colporteur," said I,—"have tracts and papers to give you." "Walk round to the other door," said she. Evidently she did not want me to come into the kitchen; so I was ushered into the great room, and immediately I was surrounded by the father, mother, and six children, from four to sixteen years of age. I began to question each separately, suiting my questions to their circumstances and age; giving each a book, tract or paper; giving much exhortation, then proposed to pray. The children were all gathered round, and I said, "Now, children, I am going to pray; and when we pray, we talk with God. He is a great being. He has eyes to see and ears to hear, and we ought to be very quiet when we pray." I knelt down, used very simple language, so that a child could understand. All was very quiet. Then I inquired whether they could keep me over night. "Well, we have plenty of lodging, but our fare is very coarse," was the reply. "I like coarse fare," said I. It was settled I should stay. I partook of their coarse fare with a good relish, and had a neat, clean bed. In another bed slept an Indian. I had neither bowie-knife, pistol nor dirk, for the weapons of my warfare are not carnal. I found myself safe and well in the morning. I partook of breakfast, expressed my gratitude to mine host, and went on my way rejoicing.

I met a little girl seven years old. "How do you do, sir?" said the little lady. "I am well, and I have little books and papers for children. "Where do you live?" said I. "Up there," pointing to a house. "Well, I am going there," said I. She said she would go back. "No, no," said I, "go and do your errand first." "I am going to aunty's, and will come right back and show you my doll." O the simplicity of a little child's heart! I had gained her confidence by a one cent book. Don't I buy children's confidence at a very cheap rate? "Do you go to Sabbath School?" "Yes." "Well, I shall be there, and tell the children little stories to-morrow." "Well, you will see me then," said the little miss; "and I shall be all dressed up." And sure enough she was there, and all dressed up, with bows, wreaths, and ribbons on her little hat. Yes, these Indians have a meeting-house, a Sabbath School, and a minister is sent to them, and paid out of a fund for supporting preaching on the Islands.

There is a settlement of colored people on another part of the island, composed of ten families. I have visited them too. I find them very ready to receive me, and I purpose giving them some lectures. Bro. Knobb has presented the Advent truths to them, and says they do not oppose them. I purpose visiting all the families on the island, the Lord willing, and shall want more tracts. If any of my brethren or sisters sympathize with me in this good work, and feel it a privilege to lend a helping hand, let them send in to the World's Crisis office their offerings. I enjoy this work,—rather be in it than to be a king on a throne.

Tisbury, Mass.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to brethren in the Illinois conference that, the Lord permitting, I shall be at the quarterly conference in New Rutland, Sept. 2nd, and have a supply of our works and of tracts to give out for the Publication Society. I will also take subscriptions for the Society and for the Crisis, and forward money for any who wish to pay on subscriptions. I design to spend September and October in the bounds of the conference, and aid in protracted efforts. Any wishing me to visit them, can send or write me at the conference, or to Chicago, care of my son, Dr. W. D. Blain. He will know where to forward to me. Since the conference at Amboy, in May, I have preached in Earlvill, Papa, Shabbona Grove, Kewanee, Victoria, Henderson, Ionia, Bro. Porter's neighborhood, Mt. Pleasant, Mound Station and Buckhorn; and Aug. 15th am to hold a grove meeting with Eld. Scott at Rough and Ready, Hancock Co. I rejoice that this conference has mostly kept out anti-Bible doctrines, such as no Spirit, re-immersion, infants lost, etc etc, which are ruining our cause in many places, and bringing upon us general reproach. They will not take a paper which advocates, or admits writers to advocate, such delusions. May they ever discard them. I hear of but one church in this part of Illinois where these errors have been admitted, and that, I am informed, is divided and ruined, as all will be, ere long, where they are fellowshiped.

In all the places I have preached, the people turned out beyond my expectations, and much feeling was manifested as to our doctrine; while there is evidently a lack of deep feeling as to vital piety, or experimental religion, and the unconverted seem to be hardened. I sigh for a revival season. Brethren, let us use more "importunity" in prayer for such a season, and preach and labor more to bring it on. If we use the means God has appointed, we may hope for it. It will take a great army to fill the "new heaven and new earth," and Christ has not enlisted enough yet, or he would come and end our toils and war against sin.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Europa's News.—From Liverpool Aug. 9th.

It is stated that Garibaldi refuses to obey Victor Emmanuel's proclamation. It is also stated that he held a council of war on the 14th, at which it was determined to march on Rome, notwithstanding the remonstrance from Turin.

The enthusiasm for Garibaldi is tremendous in Sicily, and it is reported that he will soon be at the head of 50,000 men.

FRANCE.

Many French journals speak with great anxiety as to Italian affairs under Garibaldi's movements.

The Opinione Nationale deplores the fatal hesitancy which makes the French Government shrink from the necessary solution, viz., the evacuation of Rome.

ITALY.

Garibaldi has chartered six large vessels. His plan is said to be to land in the Gulf of Palermo, and there be joined by an auxiliary force and march on the Roman States.

An official dispatch in the Turin Gazette says the Garibaldi volunteers would leave for Messina instead of Palermo. They number 3000 and are divided into three columns, one conducted by Garibaldi in person.

THREE DAYS LATER.

St. John's, N. F., Aug. 22d. The steamship Teutonia, from Southampton 13th inst., for New York, passed Cape Race this afternoon. She was boarded by the Associated Press news yacht, and the following dispatch obtained.

An Italian squadron has been ordered to Ancona to watch the Adriatic coast.

Garibaldi with volunteers is marching in the direction of Patra Pezzia and Sancataldo. His object appears to be to reach Messina. Public opinion favors conciliation, and by discussion to point out to foreign powers the dangers of a prolonged occupation of Rome by the French.

A Garibaldi manifestation took place at the Larcalla Theatre in Milan, during which shouts were raised of "Rome or death!"

A slight encounter had taken place between the volunteers and royal troops.

Garibaldi recently spoke as follows:—"The present state of affairs cannot continue. I go against the Government because it will not let me go to Rome. I go against France because she defends the Pope. I will have Rome at any price. Rome or death! If I succeed, so much the better, if not I will destroy the Italy which I made myself."

The departure of volunteers from Palermo had ceased.

Ratazzi's dismissal from the Ministry is considered the only means by which a solution of the present difficulties can be arrived at.

Mazzini had had a conference with Garibaldi and returned to Malta.

Garibaldi is at Caltaniztta.

The rumors that England had given her support to Garibaldi's schemes are denied.

The Constantinople Conference has decided that the Turks should continue to occupy the Belgrade Citadel.

It is believed that the Mexican expeditionary force will be very large. The choicest officers and men of the Versailles artillery are under orders. A division of gunboats for Mexico is being prepared.

Louis Napoleon will not deliver an official speech at the reception on the 17th.

The French had repulsed several attacks in Mexico.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Aug. 22. The Tribune has a letter dated Culpepper, 19th. It says the retreat of our army and the advance of the rebels in overwhelming force, are no longer secrets.

It was expected that the army would cross the Rappahannock by 10 o'clock, but the passage of the trains was so much delayed that it will not be attempted.

The corps of Banks is here, and McDowell is coming in. Both will wait the arrival of Sigel, who covers the retreat, and will not be hurried.

New York, Aug. 22. The Commercial says it has information that a junction of Generals McClellan's, Pope's and Burnside's forces is effected.

The same paper states that the rebels occupy Harrison's Landing, and that their pickets extend as far as the Chickahominy.

A large portion of our gunboat flotilla were above Harrison's Landing, and would probably give the rebels a taste of their quality.

It is stated that at the rate the new levies are now moving forward to their destinations, 60,000 reinforcements could be given Pope and McClellan within the week, and that an equal number can be forwarded to the Western armies.

It is said that the Confederates are preparing, with all the force they can forward, to make an attack on Gen. Pope's front. A terrible conflict is expected.

Springfield, Mo., Aug. 22. Col. Wright of the Federal forces passed Carthage yesterday in hot pursuit of the guerrillas under Coffee, Hays and Quantrell. On Wednesday he attacked the rebels' rear guard and killed twelve and captured thirteen of them.

The pursuit will not be relaxed until they are driven from the State.

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 18. The ferryboat plying between this city and Mound City, Arkansas, was burned by guerrillas on Saturday.

The stores in this vicinity have been robbed and many horses stolen.

Cairo, Aug. 22. The steamer Champion, on her last passage to Memphis, was fired into by guerrillas. She was struck by over 70 shots, but no one was injured.

The Steamer Swallow, in the Government service, was burned by the rebels twenty miles below Memphis.

Two bridges on the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad were burned yesterday, supposed by rebel sympathizers. A freight train ran through one of the bridges, and three cars were wrecked. No one was hurt.

Nashville, Aug. 22. Yesterday noon Capt. Atkinson, of the 50th Ohio, with 20 men at Edgefield Junction, was attacked by 1000 guerrillas. He repulsed them three times, killing Morgan's Adjutant, seven privates, wounded 18, and finally after three hours' fighting drove them off.

Washington, Aug. 20. Hon. R. Johnson of Maryland has made his report to the government upon the points in the administration of affairs in New Orleans. He not long since went thither to investigate, and the President has approved his conclusions. It is understood that he recommends the return to the Consul of the Netherlands of the $800,000 seized by Gen. Butler, that the $716,000 be returned to the French Consul, and also that a large amount of sugar and other merchandise be relinquished to the Greek, British and other foreign merchants domiciled in New Orleans, as, according to Mr Johnson, these seizures by Gen. Butler cannot be justified by civil or military law.

New York, Aug. 22. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says:

"Two or three weeks ago the President laid before his Cabinet a proclamation of emancipation, abolishing slavery wherever it exists on the 1st of December, if the rebellion should not be crushed by that time, and asking the opinion of his Ministers touching the propriety of issuing it. All but two (Secretary Smith, we believe, being absent) approved of it. Secretary Seward and Postmaster General Blair, however, opposed it with all their might, and the result was it did not appear.

The World's Washington dispatch says it is openly stated by the emancipationists, that the President will issue a proclamation of freedom to all slaves by the 1st of September.

Horrible Outrages by the Indians.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 22.—Reliable information from Fort Ridgeley confirms all the previous reports. Mr. Wyckoff, the Assistant Superintendent, on his way to the upper agencies, met a messenger six miles from Fort Ridgeley, on Monday morning, announcing an outbreak at the Lower Sioux Agency, and the murder of all the whites except a few.

Captain Marsh set out immediately with forty five men. At a ferry opposite the agency he encountered a large body of warriors, who opened fire upon them, and after a few volleys a large body of ambushed Indians in the rear fired upon them, killing a number of men. A retreat was attempted across the river. While in the water the Indians killed the captain, three sergeants and four corporals. But seventeen men returned to the Fort.

On Monday night the light from burning buildings and grain stacks was seen in all directions. Escaped citizens came into the fort during the night, giving accounts of horrors too terrible for the imagination to conceive. Mothers came in rags and barefooted, whose husbands and children were slaughtered before their eyes. Children came in who had witnessed the murder of their parents or the burning of their homes. The roads in all directions to New Ulm are lined with murdered men, women and children.

The people of New Ulm are drilling with what arms they can get, and are fully awake to their danger and determined to defend the town. Governor Ramsey yesterday ordered the militia with horses to the scene.

Plain Talk to the President.—Mr. Steven Driver, or "Old Glory"—for he is familiarly known to the country as the staunch Tennessean who preserved the Union flag at Nashville to the last—had an interview with the President yesterday, during which he informed Mr. Lincoln of the great enthusiasm he had seen in the North during his campaign for two months past, and declared that the people were ahead of the Executive. "If you let the Governors of the Northern States," said he, "take this matter in hand, the rebellion will be put down in a short time. They demand more energy of you, Mr President, and your Generals. They have the utmost confidence in you, but they will have more vigor." The President was glad to hear this plain talk, and gave him assurances that all was going well. Mr. D. urged the rigid enforcement of the Confiscation law, as it would bring the rebels to terms in the shortest manner. The mild policy, he declared, was strengthening the rebels.—Corres. of N. Y. Commercial.

Concert of Prayer for the Country.—We find in several of our religious papers an invitation to the churches of every name, to unite in a general concert of prayer for the country, in their several places of worship, on the evening of next Sabbath, 24th inst., and to continue it hereafter on the fourth Sabbath evening of every month, during the war.

The Crops in Europe.—In France the crops are said to be excellent—much beyond an average, and instead of being under the necessity of importing corn, will have plenty to spare, after satisfying her own wants, for the necessities of her neighbors. The English harvest, from present appearances, is likely to prove an average one. In Ireland the prospects are also good.

Great Campmeeting in Maine.

On account of the lateness of the season, the Committee have deemed it best to change the time of our campmeeting at Corinna, Me., from the first to the second week in September, giving them one week longer to complete their harvest labors.

We would say to the brethren, one and all, rally again to the standard of truth, and enjoy the privilege of attending one more meeting, if the Lord will, before he shall return. We are happy to say we have obtained the best ground this year for our meeting that we ever have had, and the conveniences outside are far better than formerly. The grounds are situated in the west part of the town, on Mr. Weston Nutter's place, being two miles from Moor's Mills, so called, and six miles from Newport, a point on the Penobscot and Kennebec R. R., where brethren coming from the west by railroad, or to Bangor by boat, will stop. Those brethren who would like conveyance from Newport to the camp ground, will be accommodated if they will inform either of the Committee what time to meet them there.

Conveniences for the Lord's poor will be ample, and we wish none to stay away on account of their not having the means. There will be a commodious boarding tent on the ground, where brethren not having tents, but who have means, will be accommodated reasonably. Come one, come all, and let us have the greatest meeting of the kind ever yet held in Maine.

B. C. Moore, Albert Door, Geo. H. Fisher, } Committee of Arrangements.

Notice.

To the Brethren in Eastern Conn., scattered through Woodstock, Putnam, etc.—I wish to say that a few who look for the Lord from heaven are anxious to establish a regular meeting at Muddy Brook; but it is desirable that a more united effort should be made on the part of the brethren and sisters living in the surrounding districts. As there are many who do not attend any regular meeting from one year's end to the other, we think much good might be done by establishing a meeting at the above named place, as it is a new field. Why not come together, and try and sustain a meeting at this place, and make an effort to attend, even if it is a little trouble. You will get your pay in getting good and in doing good to others. We think the church has a duty to do in this respect, that is sadly neglected. Read Malachi 3: 16, 17. The few who are already interested in this meeting, are anxious to establish a regular appointment once in four weeks, commencing the first Sunday in September.

We hope the brethren and sisters living in this vicinity will take the matter into consideration, pray about it, and act accordingly. Preaching might be sustained in this place, at least one half of the time, provided those living in the surrounding districts manifest as much interest, and have as much a spirit of sacrifice as others do who help sustain meetings in other places in Eastern Conn. It is time to act, as well as talk. Now, now, let us act in regard to this matter as for eternity. D. A. Jones.

Campmeeting.

The great interest manifested at our tent meeting in New Preston, Ct., has induced us, with the advice of the brethren in that section, to appoint a campmeeting to commence Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 10 A. M. Some eight tents have already been counted up for the occasion, and we hope the number will be much larger. Brethren that want to work for the Lord will find here a new and interesting field.

We desire all who can, to bring provisions and tents for themselves and others. Plain food, and "all things common" is the Bible rule; let us practice it cheerfully. A daily stage from New Milford (Housatonic R. R.) at 12 will bring in all who wish. Distance eight miles. H. Pratt.

It is somewhat probable that Bro. H. L. Hastings will be at the meeting.

Notice.

The next meeting of the Eastern N. Y. and Western Mass. and Conn. Second Advent Conference will be at Otis Centre, Mass., commencing by preaching Tuesday evening, Sept. 2d. Come, Brn. and Srs., to this meeting, filled with the love of God. Come with a determination to do good and get good. Those coming from the South will call on Bro. Waterman, Cold Spring. Those from the North, stop at Well's Forge, at Bro. Brazee's, or Bro. Breckenridge's. Those that cannot come of our preaching brethren, also churches that cannot send a delegate, please let us hear from you by letter. Address Geo. L. Teeple, Otis Centre.

G. L. Teeple, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Union Mills, La Porte Co., Ind., commencing Thursday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over the Sabbath following. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield will be present (Brn. Sevirs and I. Damman are expected) to preach the word of life. We hope to see a good attendance at this meeting. Come, brethren and sisters, come praying that we may have a good, old-fashioned meeting at Union Mills. This is a time of trouble, and we should not forsake "the assembling of ourselves together," but exhort "one another, and so much the more as" we "see the day approaching."

By request of the Church,

A. Freeman, Jr.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

Our conference will meet this year in the month of December. Time and place given hereafter. Let friends in all parts of the State prepare to come. Will Eld. Barnes and Elder Turner consult the brethren with regard to the best location for the meeting?

W. Sheldon.

Notice for Maine.

Seeing the managers of the Corinna campmeeting have changed the time of their meeting so that it comes on the same week of the appointment for the State Conference, we change our time, that brethren may be able to attend both.

The Maine Annual Advent Conference will convene in Portland, Wednesday evening, Sept. 17th, at 7 o'clock, in the Second Advent Hall, on Congress street, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to see all the Advent ministers belonging in Maine, who can work together in union and harmony for the objects of the conference, which are the spread of "this gospel of the kingdom," the unity and health of the body of Christ, and the salvation of sinners. Let as many other such brethren and sisters as can, come also, in the Spirit of Christ, ready to work for him, praying that God may make this conference a blessing to us all, and an instrument of good to others. Brn will come mostly by cars and boats. Those who come with teams will be provided for, but must provide generally for their own horses. The Portland brethren will do all they can to entertain the friends who come. Call on Brn J. S. Brooks, 8 Summer street, Peter Johnson Elden, 16 Lyng street, Eld. B. Emery, Congress street; Charles H. Wyman, 12 Salem street, who will aid you in finding suitable places to put up.

O. R. Fassett, President.
I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

Yarmouth, Me., Aug. 13, '62.

Conference and Lectures.

I will hold a conference, and give lectures on the Advent, in Danielsonville, Ct., commencing Friday evening, Sept. 5th, and continuing till Sabbath the 14th, every day, as Dr. Jones shall arrange. J. H. Himes.

Note. The friends in Penn. and Iowa will be patient. I cannot leave New England till the latter part of October. I shall then visit Philadelphia, Milesburg, and other places, and thence to Iowa. Shall be glad to hear from any who wish my labors, as I will call on any who wish, when it may be practicable, on my route. J. V. H.

Conference Notice.

The Illinois conference of Adventists will hold their quarterly meeting with the church near New Rutland, Lasalle Co., commencing Tuesday, Sept. 2d, at 2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Those coming from the East or West will take the Burlington and Quincy R. R., connecting with the Central at Mendota, or the Rock Island R. R. connecting with the Central at Lasalle, stopping at New Rutland, on the Central R. R., where conveyances will be provided to the place of meeting. Preaching brethren in the conference are expected to be there. It will be held in the New England Mission Tent.

H. G. McCulloch, Sec. of Conf.

For the Crisis.

The Invitation.

Come unto me, ye weary,
The Savior smiling said;
Come unto me, ye hungry,
And feed on heavenly bread.

Come unto me, ye weary,
And drink of living streams;
Come, ye who dwell in darkness,
Where light eternal beams.

Come, ye who sit in darkness,
And I will give you joy;
Come, ye who live in sorrow,
Where sorrow ne'er shall cloy.

Come, ye who're sick of sinning,
And I'll your sins forgive;
Come unto me, ye dying,
Come, and forever live.

Come, ye who seek for riches,
My wealth can never fail;
All things are my possession,—
Go tell the wondrous tale.

Come, ye who seek for glory,
Seek that which cannot dim;
Seek not mid scenes of bloodshed,
Or in the haunts of sin.

Come, ye who have afflictions,
Cast your care upon the Lord,
And he will help you bear them—
He's promised in his word.

Those who in him do rest their hope,
Shall have a lasting home
(When present things are passed away),
In that bright world to come.

For the Crisis.

A Glance at our World.—No. 9.

We now copy the forcible language of G. B. Cheever on the state of Europe.—"Whether God be about to involve the nations of Europe in a complicated and dreadful war, or whether the selfish diplomacy of courts and cabinets shall work a present peace, there is matter already for solemn contemplation in the events and results thus far. There is that which looks very like positive and quick retribution for particular national sins, for being accessory to such crimes before and after the facts; and it is no new thing that God uses nations as his own hammer and battle axe on one another." Mark the language of God's chosen prophet when foretelling the destruction of mighty nations. Assyria shall destroy Israel, and they shall be destroyed for that very destruction, and Babylon shall be arrayed against both Egypt and Judah, and shall be God's triumphant servant for their overthrow, and they in turn shall be blasted forever. What then are we better than they? Selfish christian civilization and worship of Balaam and [illegible] anti-christian and pagan? For three transgressions and for four would God level the thunder and lightning of his wrath against nations living under so much dimmer gospel light than ours, that in comparison it was utter darkness, and for three and four and forty transgressions shall we escape? Had his providences and end a meaning then that they have not now, or were the principles on which he governed the world different at that time and this? For national sins all down God has first warned by his chosen people; then if unheeded, retributive justice follows and cuts them down. God has borne long with our nation. Long has the wail of the poor friendless bondsman gone up to Thee, and we begin to feel the terrible effects of God's viddictive ire upon us as a hypocritical nation. We fear that this ire will not pause and spend its fury upon the South, but the North are guilty of sins which call loudly for redress, and unless there is humiliation, and that speedily, they are gone. God has spoken as audibly as he did to the Egyptians in reference to the sins of which they are so guilty. But they have gone on heedlessly hugging their sins to their bosom, and now the ire of Him who warns not in vain is kindled, and he will make his might felt on this thrice guilty nation, living in the full blaze of gospel light, knowing the sin of human slavery,—it will evidently prove their guilty overthrow. We feel it. Men of eloquence have for years warned them of their downward progress, but it has no effect.

The present is truly a time of darkness and perplexity; a period in which wars and commotions are alarming the hearts of men. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world as those now passing over this nation. The statesman, the politician and the merchant, are all equally at a loss to comprehend the present or to predict for the future of this nation; but they admit there is an element at work destined to break up the social fabric of our government.

All nations seem to catch the contagion of war, and the whole eastern heavens will soon be lit up with the reddening conflagration. France is eager to join hands with the South, and inviting England and Russia to consolidate, and thus crush out the only republic on earth. The budding fig-trees do not more clearly indicate the coming summer, than the present signs indicate the soon coming of the King of Peace. Yes, the fuse is ignited, and will finally end in a terrible explosion among the nations. All things indicate it. God's word clearly defines the way for his followers to act in the emergency now crowding down upon them.

Let those who believe in war go to the scene of strife, but clear your skirts. Tell them of the awful consequences of those who take the sword, perishing by the same. The follower of Christ does not feel the spirit of war. Christ told them of old to conquer by love; and hence we deduce from this great fundamental fact, that those who at once grasp the rifle, and hie away for tented fields, are not imbued with the spirit of Christ. Oh! may the true church now awake and sound the last warning to fallen man, as they shall wish they had in the day of reckoning.

Remedy for Scolding.

Upon noticing a recipe for husbands, in the Transcript, the week one appeared in the Crisis for wives; and thinking great responsibility rests upon both classes, I extract the following recipe for husbands:

"Quite a sure remedy for scolding is to give no cause for scolding. Very few wives scold without cause, and to stop their scolding, stop the provocations. We cannot blame a wife for scolding when her husband only half provides for her, spends nearly all his time away from home, is particularly polite and attentive to any and every woman except his wife; never expressing himself pleased with anything she does, and is continually extolling the elegance, neatness, and economy of somebody else, is all life and gaiety in company, and drowsy and dull at home, speaking crustily to those around, and driving away what few gleams of sunshine might otherwise rest upon the brow of his toilsome, careworn wife."—Windham County Transcript.

We would not attempt to justify the above spirit of retaliation, whatever the provocation. Retaliation is unscriptural; consequently wrong; yet all must admit the extremely trying position of a wife,—one who knows the place she should occupy, the place scripturally assigned her in her husband's affection,—when she witnesses the bestowal of affection upon others, by her husband, to which she alone has claim. I regard that the commonness of this sin has occasioned the loss of its heinousness in the minds of some professing better things. May those looking for the Lord keep themselves so pure as to give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully in this respect.

From Fanny R. Calhoun.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say, that I have received your paper—the Crisis—and that for instruction and edification in Bible truth, especially the devotional portion of it (which to me has been of late of great interest), far excels any other I have seen, and is just what I want to help me to understand Bible truths more perfectly. The Lord has led me in a way that I knew not of.

Last winter Bro. H Pratt, an Advent preacher, delivered a course of lectures on the prophecies, and preached from other portions of the Bible in New Preston. I heard him, and became interested. The Lord opened my heart to receive the truth in the love of it. I did not confer with flesh and blood, but immediately confessed the change in my religious belief before the church and congregation,—that believers were the only fit subjects for baptism, not infants; that sprinkling is not baptism; that we have immortality, eternal life, only through Christ, who is our only hope, by the rejection of whom we must suffer eternal death, which is the penalty of the law, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.

I have ever in thought believed in the personal coming of Christ to judge the world and raise the dead, but of what use was it, with the delusive hope that we possess an immortal soul that cannot die, which leaves the body at death to dwell in heaven forever happy, or in hell forever tormented? That deathless soul is the foundation-stone that error builds upon. Take that away, and almost the whole falls. O vain, delusive hope, that is built upon such a foundation! It cannot stand the test. It is contrary to the word of God. Yet men will preach it, and the people for the most part believe it.

Mr. J. Strong, in a sermon last winter, asserted that man was immortal as God was; and that to deny it was worse than infidelity; though he did not bring a single text of Scripture to prove his assertion. His design was to overthrow Bro. Pratt's teachings, but failed. The work progressed and is still progressing. June 22d, four were baptized.

DEAR BRO. IN CHRIST:—Through the instrumentality of a friend, I have been permitted for the last year to peruse your valuable paper, the Crisis; and, believing as I do that it is founded on Scriptural truths, I feel it my duty to encourage you in still circulating it far and wide, and to continue in your labor of love, for, in God's hands, it may be the means of doing much good, and saving many souls from death. Although my name is enrolled with another denomination, I love all who love the Lord, and I mean to labor in his vineyard wherever I am placed; and although the church to which I belong seem to think that I shall apostatize if I embrace these truths, I can truly say I never saw God's truth in so plain a light as now, and never felt a greater determination to serve him. I am willing to be despised, and to have my name cast out as evil among the popular professors of the day, if I can but serve and honor Christ. I know that all who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. It is as true to-day as when the inspired apostle spoke these words, and I feel willing to be called a fool for Christ's sake, if need be, knowing that my reward is at the end.

From Bro. H. B. Cross.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I think there is an increasing willingness, in some localities, to hear and read the truths of the kingdom at hand." Several ministers of the various churches in this vicinity seem to be awaking to the subject. One of them, a man of talent, and of the Congregational [illegible] said to me, a short time since, "The hope of the christian is in the personal coming of Christ; and we have come to the time when we may consistently look, daily, for that event." He instructs his people that they are not to expect the conversion of the world through their cherished plans for so doing, and preaches to them the "gospel of the kingdom." He said he felt the need of some small book or tract setting forth plainly and concisely the millennial truth, which could be scattered broadcast among the people.

He thought the time had come when people would read on the subject if properly presented. And said that much vital truth was rejected, or was not read by many honest christians, because the article, the tract or the book, bore the imprint or signature of some individual, or society, against whom they had justly, or unjustly acquired a prejudice. I think we all know this is true to some extent.

The Orphan's Lament.

I wander in this vale of tears,
Of sorrow, sin and gloom,
I'm [illegible]
And waiting to go home.

A Father, mother, sister dear,
And brother, all are gone,
They now are sleeping in their graves,
And I am all alone.

Yet not alone, my Savior's near
He is the orphan's friend,
A Father to the fatherless
He'll guide me to the end.

If I am faithful to my God
And do my Master's will
He'll not forget me when he comes
The world with grace to fill.

He'll say—Well done, thou faithful one,
No more shalt thou depart,
But dwell forever with thy God,
And all the pure in heart.

Notes by the Way.

June 25th, I bade adieu to the friends in Syracuse, and started for the land of my adoption. Had a pleasant passage across Lake Ontario. June 27th, 28th and 29th, attended the annual conference of the Church of God of C. W., which was held in Darlington. The gathering was large. Preaching good. All the sittings were harmonious. Hence the influence left on community was good. I immersed one mortal soul into the Christ for the remission of sins. Spent a few days with the church in Cartwright. Gave them five discourses. Good was done in the name of Jehovah. Visited the friends in Whitby. Had a good time in talking upon the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of his Anointed. Immersed one.

Visited the church in Brooklin. Gave eight discourses to attentive congregations. Had the honor of immersing five mortal souls into the Christ. Spent a week with the church of God in Toronto. Our congregation continued to increase during our stay. The congregation was large and intelligent, and better attention I never saw. I immersed two. One of them had been brought up in the Roman Catholic Church. I visited the church at Thorold and Gainsborough. Had a good time in presenting the truth.

August 2nd and 3d I held a barn meeting in the township of Clark. Gave them five discourses. Gathering large. Attention good. Truth took effect, and I had the honor of immersing four into the Christ for the remission of sins. Glory be to God that there is a power in the gospel. I visited the friends in Coburg. Had a good time. On the morning of the 5th, I bade them adieu for a short time. Had a sick time in crossing the Lake. Last Sunday I preached in Syracuse. Had a good time, and on the morning of the 8th of July, I was immersed into the Christ beneath the beautiful waters of Lake Ontario. It was the most delightful morning that I ever saw. Amen.

From Plymouth, Mass.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—If my humble epistles can help you along in your pilgrimage journey, I shall rejoice in having a knowledge that my efforts are not made in vain. When I came to Plymouth, I had nought but a sling and a few pebbles, but going forward trusting wholly in the God of Israel, I have been enabled to witness great results. Since last September, we have held meetings every evening, with few exceptions, up to the present time. When I first came here, all the flock were scattered. My first duty was to go out into the streets, roads, lanes, by-ways, hills and valleys, to search for the sheep. Many were found much disheartened on account of past trials and difficulties, but by holding a little prayer meeting in each household, faith grew stronger, and the whole company in the course of six or eight weeks rallied to the call of their Master, and fought anew the battles of the Lord. As might be expected, sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and, as near as I can learn, fifty of these two classes of persons are now rejoicing in God.

Then came baptism. Here we had to labor earnestly. The result is, forty persons, eleven men and twenty-nine women, have been "buried with Christ in baptism," and others are to follow the example of Christ next Lord's day. Since I wrote last, we have had two baptisms, the first one, eight persons, the second, ten. Some of these persons have been professors of religion for years, but did not do duty in this direction until now. Quite a common objection urged against baptism is, "I am afraid that I shall not hold out." I answer this class of objectors by referring them to their exhortations to the unconverted, when they say, "repent to-night," or "to-day," for you may not live to see the light of another day." Then I ask them if they have "a lease of life" in this present world more than the sinner. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. Be baptized now, for you do not know about seeing another week in this life. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Three of the number baptized have been Methodists, four were Presbyterians, and one Orthodox. All now rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

Our prayer and conference meetings are exceedingly interesting. They have been held every evening since last September. It is quite a common circumstance to have forty persons take part in one meeting. The brethren and sisters pray much, which accounts in a great measure for the interest manifested. In two of our meetings sixteen persons in succession implored God for his blessing. Last Sunday evening fifty-seven persons took part in the exercises, and we had over seventy-five prayers and exhortations, and in addition to these some twenty-five verses were sung. All this required but two hours' time. The brethren and sisters know the value of short exhortations and short prayers. All have an opportunity to take an active part in the work, and no one has an excuse for not laboring. Quite a number have been added to the church, and we can say from our hearts, it is the work of the Lord, and we rejoice in it. Six weeks ago we commenced holding out-door meetings, and they have proved a success. These meetings are largely attended by attentive audiences. Last Lord's day Bro J. S. White preached on "the green" to a large audience, on "the two Adams." The entire town seems to be stirred, and the Lord opens the hearts of his children to receive me wherever I am called to labor. Of course I have encountered manifold temptations, a few trials, and some difficulties. I feel more and more the need of God's grace. Many of the children meet with a great amount of trials, and look to me for counsel. I have a "throne of grace" to go to, and there seek for and get wisdom from my heavenly Father. We are bound together by the strong cords of christian love, and pray that all may be "joint heirs with Christ" of "the inheritance." Many times my labors have been so arduous that I felt my bodily strength almost gone, but right there God gave me a "kid," and I have been strengthened for further exertions. I have more than one hundred families to visit, and my visiting territory is ten miles from one extreme end to the other. Sinners are under conviction, and scarcely a week passes but that we have some poor sinner or backslider brought back to Father's family.

Dear brethren and sisters, do not get discouraged. A year ago, affairs looked very unpromising here, but the children went to praying, and they took hold, held on, and would not let go "the throne of grace," and God has blessed, and is blessing them. Forgive one another, be tender-hearted and kind. Recollect the admonitions of Christ and the apostles. Give heed to them. Clear all rubbish, in the shape of contentions, disputings, variance, evil thoughts, worldliness and pride out of the way, and you will not have to wait long for an outpouring of God's blessings. The end is near. Sinners must perish. Do not quarrel amongst yourselves, and let them go on stumbling over your wickedness into destruction. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

Yours looking for Christ,
Aug. 11th, '62. F. N. BURBANK.

Rules for Public Speaking.

We are enabled to recommend with confidence, the following rules to those who would be successful public speakers:—

1. Endeavor to possess yourself wholly of your subject.
2. Be calm and self-collected, and speak to the audience under a lively consciousness that they are expecting instruction and edification, and of the importance of acquitting yourself well.
3. Be sure you pitch your voice low enough at the commencement of your discourse. It will then find its natural tone as you proceed.
4. Let your enunciation of every syllable and, so far as possible, of the sound of every letter, be clear, and distinct, and you will then be heard and understood in every part of the largest hall, though your voice may not be loud.
5. Keep the lungs well inflated, and speak mostly by the movement of the abdominal muscles.
6. Let your voice be flexible, undulatory, and rythmic in its motion; and mind your pauses, emphases, and intonations, according to the nature of the subject, and the passions that are to be expressed.
7. Keep the mind well concentrated, and enter thoroughly into the spirit of the subject.
8. Keep the limbs flexible, and let gesticulation be prompted by the impulse of feeling. Then it will always be natural.

Let each public speaker drill himself to these rules, until their observance becomes natural and spontaneous; and if the matter of his communication is of interest and importance, he will not fail to acquit himself to the satisfaction of his audience.—Life Illustrated.

False Proverbs.

"A young fellow must sow his wild oats." In all the wild range of accepted British maxims there is none, take it for all in all, more thoroughly abominable than this one as to the sowing of wild oats. Look on it on what side you will, and I will defy you to make anything but a devil's maxim of it. What a man—be he young, old, or middle-aged—sows, that, and nothing else, shall he reap. The one only thing to do with wild oats is to put them carefully into the hottest part of the fire, and get them burnt to dust, every seed of them. If you sow them, no matter in what ground, up they will come, with long tough roots like couch-grass, and luxuriant stalks and leaves, as sure as there is a sun in heaven, a crop which it turns one's heart cold to think of. The devil, too, whose special crop they are, will see that they thrive, and you and nobody else will have to reap them; and no common reaping will get them out of the soil, which must be dug down deep, again and again. Well for you if, with all your care, you can make the ground sweet again by your dying day.

"Boys will be boys," is not much better. That has a true side to it; but this encouragement to the sowing of wild oats is simply devilish, for it means that a young man is to give way to the temptations and follow the lusts of his age. What are we to do with the wild oats of manhood and old age—with ambition, over-reaching, the false weights, hardness, suspicion, avarice—if the wild oats of youth are to be sown, and not burnt? What possible distinction can we draw between them? If we may sow one, why not the other?—From "Tom Brown at Oxford."

The true Gentleman.

The following sketch is called the portrait of a true gentleman. It was found in an old manor house in Gloucestershire, England, written and framed, and hung over the mantle piece of a tapestried sitting room.

"The true gentleman is God's servant, the world's master, and his own manly virtue is his business, study, recreation, contentment his rest and happiness, his reward. God is his Father, Jesus Christ his Savior, the saints his brethren, and all that need him his friends; devotion is his chaplain, chastity his chamberlain, sobriety his butler, temperance his cook, hospitality his housekeeper, Providence his steward, charity his treasury, piety his mistress of the house, and discretion his porter, to let in or out, as most fit. Thus is his whole family made up of virtues, and he is the true master of the house. He is necessitated to take the world on his way to heaven, but he walks through it as fast as he can, and all his business by the way is to make himself and others happy. Take him in two words—a man, and a christian."—Ex.

☞ When I was a young man, there lived in our neighborhood a farmer who was usually reported to be a very liberal man, and uncommonly upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends, observing him frequently doing so, questioned him why he did it—told him he gave too much, and said it would not be to his advantage. Now mark the answer of this excellent man. "God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when I am gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this. But one journey through the world!

A KEEN REPLY.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining, with great earnestness, the doctrine of Vox populi vox Dei against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum, and said,

"I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."

"Yes," she replied, mildly, "it cried, 'Crucify him! crucify him!'"

A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is all pure, all sincere, nothing too much, nothing wanting. How that can be called the church of Christ which is established upon laws which are not his, and which excludes such persons from its communion as he will one day receive into the kingdom of heaven, I understand not.—John Locke.

Little Nellie Green;

OR, GOOD FOR EVIL.

"I wish Annie Howard would never come to see me again: I hate her!" exclaimed little Nellie Green, as she came into the room where her mother was sewing, one bright summer afternoon after her little playmate had been to make her a visit.

"Why, Nellie!" said her mother, "I am surprised and grieved to hear you speak so. What has Annie done, to make you hate her? Come here and tell me all about it, my dear."

Nellie, with tearful eyes, looked up and said, "Why, mother, she is always teazing me in some way. If I want to play with anything, she snatches it away; if I don't give her everything she wants, she says I am 'selfish, to keep things to myself.' She tears my books carelessly, tumbles my things all up; and to-day she broke my beautiful new doll, and because I cried, she said I was 'a little booby and cry-baby,' and laughed at me. I wish somebody would break her playthings"; and again the tears burst forth.

"Annie, no doubt, has treated you badly, my child, and I do not wonder that you should feel grieved and hurt. But would my little girl be doing right to hate her, and wish her ill, because she does not treat you well? Would Jesus have you feel so? You said the other day, that you wished you were like Jesus, for he was so good. Do you think Jesus hated anybody, and wished evil upon them?"

"No, mother, he was all good, and loved those that hated him."

"And do you remember his words, which we read this morning that you thought were so good, and in which he teaches us how we should treat those who ill-treat us?"

"Yes, mother, in his sermon on the mount, he said: 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.'"

"And now, my child, what will you do? Will you not try and be like Jesus, and do as he tells you? Perhaps you had better go into your little room now, and talk to God about it. If you ask him, he will help you to feel differently towards Annie, and find some way to make Annie do differently towards you."

Nellie kissed her mother, and did as she advised. Her mother did not see her again till tea time, when she was pleased to see that Nellie looked quite happy.

Nothing was said about Annie for two or three days, till one afternoon Nellie came running in, looking very happy, and exclaimed, "I have punished Annie Howard till I am satisfied. I guess she wont plague me any more!"

"Why, Nellie, what have you done?" inquired her mother.

"Done?" said Nellie, "why, I've burnt her!"

"Burnt her!" exclaimed her mother, "what do you mean, Nellie?"

"Well, mother," replied Nellie, "I thought of what it said in the Bible about heaping coals of fire on the head, and I've heaped coals of fire on her head, till I've burnt her well."

"What did you do?" inquired her mother, smiling.

"Why," said Nellie, "to-day Annie was walking along with a heavy basket of apples, which she had got in the orchard for her mother, and hitting her foot, she fell to the ground, scattering the apples in every direction. She began to cry bitterly, for she hurt her some, and I suppose she thought I would laugh at her. But Jesus helped me, and so I ran to her, and said, 'I am sorry you hurt you, Annie; don't cry any more, I will help you pick up the apples, and carry them home, too, for they must be heavy.' Annie only cried the more, and I thought she must have hurt her badly, and so I told her I would run for her mother. But she said, 'O no, you need not run for my mother—my falling did not hurt me much; it is you who hurt me, by being so kind, when I was so unkind to you the other day. If you will only forgive me, Nellie, I will try and do so no more. I suppose I was envious because you had more playthings than I; at any rate I was very wicked.'

"I kissed her, and told her I would forget it all; and then we picked up the apples, and I helped her carry them home, when she would have me go in, and we had a nice time. Every once in a while she would say, 'How naughty I was to you, Nellie, and now you are so kind!' I told her Jesus helped me, and he would help her, if she would only ask him. She said she would, for she was sure he must be good, and she should love him, if he made people do such good things, and forgive such naughty girls as she was. I kissed her again, and hurried home, for I was afraid you might be anxious about me."

The mother's eyes were full of tears, as she replied, "I am glad Jesus has helped my little girl to do right, and that she has followed his teachings. I hope you will always go to him for help"; and she tenderly kissed her.

My dear children, I trust you will try to follow the good example of little Nellie, when any of your mates are unkind to you, or injure you in any way. Try to do as Jesus would have you, and soon you will be with him, and dwell with him in glory forever.

A Child's Fable, versified.

A great king sought his garden, his pleasure and pride,
Where Art and where Nature together had vied
To make it eclipse in luxuriance and grace
All since Eden, our first parents' blest dwelling place.
But alas! a sad change he beheld with surprise,
Now, drooping and withering, before him all lies,
From the tall, stately Oak to the Lily's frail stem.
No account could be given what had happened to them.
E'en the Rose, queen of flowers, bent languidly down,
Unrefreshed by soft dews of the even and morn.
The king questioned of each, wherefore found in such case?
Each replied "that they envied some other one's place."
The Oak was too cumbersome, shady and high,
The Rose thought herself "useless," "so fleeting am I."
The Lily forgot the sweet lessons she taught,
Who "toil not nor spin," yet with loveliness fraught;
Were she but a Grape-vine, well loaded with fruit,
She might then have some hopes her owner to suit.
The Grape-vine was tired of dependance at last,
Discarding support, on the ground it was cast.
Her fruit was now worthless, and the king in despair,
Saw ruin impending on [illegible] once so fair,
When he spied a bright Hearts-ease, with cheer in its eye,
Mid its murmuring companions, retiring and shy.
"My dear little Heart's-ease, pray, why do you smile?"
"'Tis my mission," she said, "your cares to beguile.
You wanted me here, so I make it my plan
To be the best Heart's-ease that ever I can."
Here's a lesson, dear children, for you and for me,—
Be content with your station, whatever it be,
'Tis God who appoints it, then do with your might
What your hands find to do, and you're dear in his sight.

The Invitation.

Come unto me, ye weary,
The Savior smiling said;
Come unto me, ye hungry,
And feed on heavenly bread.

Come unto me, ye weary,
And drink of living streams;
Come, ye who dwell in darkness,
Where light eternal beams.

Come, ye who sit in darkness,
And I will give you joy;
Come, ye who live in sorrow,
Where sorrow ne'er shall cloy.

Come, ye who're sick of sinning,
And I'll your sins forgive;
Come unto me, ye dying,
Come, and forever live.

Come, ye who seek for riches,
My wealth can never fail;
All things are my possession,—
Go tell the wondrous tale.

Come, ye who seek for glory,
Seek that which cannot dim;
Seek not mid scenes of bloodshed,
Or in the haunts of sin.

Come, ye who have afflictions,
Cast your care upon the Lord,
And he will help you bear them—
He's promised in his word,

Those who in him do rest their hope,
Shall have a lasting home
(When present things are passed away),
In that bright world to come.

A Glance at our World.—No. 9.

We now copy the forcible language of G. B. Cheever on the state of Europe:—"Whether God be about to involve the nations of Europe in a complicated and dreadful war, or whether the selfish diplomacy of courts and cabinets shall work a present peace, there is matter already for solemn contemplation in the events and results thus far. There is that which looks very like positive and quick retribution for particular national sins, for being accessory to such crimes before and after the facts; and it is no new thing that God uses nations as his own hammer and battle axe on one another." Mark the language of God's chosen prophet when foretelling the destruction of mighty nations. Assyria shall destroy Israel, and they shall be destroyed for that very destruction; and Babylon shall be arrayed against both Egypt and Judah, and shall be God's triumphant servant for their overthrow, and they in turn shall be blasted forever. What then are we better than they? Selfish christian civilization and worship of Balaam [illegible] anti-christian and pagan? For three transgressions and for four would God level the thunder and lightning of his wrath against nations living under so much dimmer gospel light than ours, that in comparison it was utter darkness; and for three and four and forty transgressions shall we escape? Had his providences and end a meaning then that they have not now, or were the principles on which he governed the world different at that time and this? For national sins all down God has first warned by his chosen people; then if unheeded, retributive justice follows and cuts them down. God has borne long with our nation. Long has the wail of the poor friendless bondsman gone up to Thee, and we begin to feel the terrible effects of God's viddictive ire upon us as a hypocritical nation. We fear that this ire will not pause and spend its fury upon the South, but the North are guilty of sins which call loudly for redress, and unless there is humiliation, and that speedily, they are gone. God has spoken as audibly as he did to the Egyptians in reference to the sins of which they are so guilty. But they have gone on heedlessly, hugging their sins to their bosom, and now the ire of Him who warns not in vain is kindled, and he will make his might felt on this thrice guilty nation, living in the full blaze of gospel light, knowing the sin of human slavery,—it will evidently prove their guilty overthrow. We feel it. Men of eloquence have for years warned them of their downward progress, but it has no effect.

The present is truly a time of darkness and perplexity; a period in which wars and commotions are alarming the hearts of men. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world as those now passing over this nation. The statesman, the politician and the merchant, are all equally at a loss to comprehend the present or to predict for the future of this nation; but they admit there is an element at work destined to break up the social fabric of our government.

All nations seem to catch the contagion of war, and the whole eastern heavens will soon be lit up with the reddening conflagration. France is eager to join hands with the South, and inviting England and Russia to consolidate, and thus crush out the only republic on earth. The budding fig-trees do not more clearly indicate the coming summer, than the present signs in- [illegible] the soon coming of the King of Peace. Yes, the fuse is ignited, and will finally end in a terrible explosion among the nations. All things indicate it. God's word clearly defines the way for his followers to act in the emergency now crowding down upon them.

Let those who believe in war go to the scene of strife, but clear your skirts. Tell them of the awful consequences of those who take the sword, perishing by the same. The follower of Christ does not feel the spirit of war. Christ told them of old to conquer by love; and hence we deduce from this great fundamental fact, that those who at once grasp the rifle, and hie away for tented fields, are not imbued with the spirit of Christ. Oh! may the true church now awake and sound the last warning to fallen man, as they shall wish they had in the day of reckoning.

Remedy for Scolding.

Upon noticing a recipe for husbands, in the Transcript, the week one appeared in the Crisis for wives; and thinking great responsibility rests upon both classes, I extract the following recipe for husbands:

"Quite a sure remedy for scolding is to give no cause for scolding. Very few wives scold without cause, and to stop their scolding, stop the provocations. We cannot blame a wife for scolding when her husband only half provides for her, spends nearly all his time away from home, is particularly polite and attentive to any and every woman except his wife; never expressing himself pleased with anything she does, and is continually extolling the elegance, neatness, and economy of somebody else, is all life and gaiety in company, and drowsy and dull at home, speaking crustily to those around, and driving away what few gleams of sunshine might otherwise rest upon the brow of his toilsome, careworn wife."—Windham County Transcript.

We would not attempt to justify the above spirit of retaliation, whatever the provocation. Retaliation is unscriptural; consequently wrong; yet all must admit the extremely trying position of a wife,—one who knows the place she should occupy, the place scripturally assigned her in her husband's affection,—when she witnesses the bestowal of affection upon others, by her husband, to which she alone has claim. I regard that the commonness of this sin has occasioned the loss of its heinousness in the minds of some professing better things. May those looking for the Lord keep themselves so pure as to give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully in this respect.

From Fanny R. Calhoun.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say, that I have received your paper—the Crisis—and that for instruction and edification in Bible truth, especially the devotional portion of it (which to me has been of late of great interest), far excels any other I have seen, and is just what I want to help me to understand Bible truths more perfectly. The Lord has led me in a way that I knew not of.

Last winter Bro. H. Pratt, an Advent preacher, delivered a course of lectures on the prophecies, and preached from other portions of the Bible in New Preston. I heard him, and became interested. The Lord opened my heart to receive the truth in the love of it. I did not confer with flesh and blood, but immediately confessed the change in my religious belief before the church and congregation,—that believers were the only fit subjects for baptism, not infants; that sprinkling is not baptism; that we have immortality, eternal life, only through Christ, who is our only hope; by the rejection of whom we must suffer eternal death, which is the penalty of the law, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.

I have ever in thought believed in the personal coming of Christ to judge the world and raise the dead; but of what use was it, with the delusive hope that we possess an immortal soul that cannot die, which leaves the body at death to dwell in heaven forever happy, or in hell forever tormented? That deathless soul is the foundation-stone that error builds upon. Take that away, and almost the whole falls. O vain, delusive hope, that is built upon such a foundation! It cannot stand the test. It is contrary to the word of God. Yet men will preach it, and the people for the most part believe it.

Mr. J. Strong, in a sermon last winter, asserted that man was immortal as God was; and that to deny it was worse than infidelity; though he did not bring a single text of Scripture to prove his assertion. His design was to overthrow Bro. Pratt's teachings, but failed. The work progressed and is still progressing. June 22d, four were baptized.

From Sr. E. L. C.

Dear Bro. in Christ:—Through the instrumentality of a friend, I have been permitted for the last year to peruse your valuable paper, the Crisis; and, believing as I do that it is founded on Scriptural truths, I feel it my duty to encourage you in still circulating it far and wide, and to continue in your labor of love; for, in God's hands, it may be the means of doing much good, and saving many souls from death. Although my name is enrolled with another denomination, I love all who love the Lord, and I mean to labor in his vineyard wherever I am placed; and although the church to which I belong seem to think that I shall apostatize if I embrace these truths, I can truly say I never saw God's truth in so plain a light as now, and never felt a greater determination to serve him. I am willing to be despised, and to have my name cast out as evil among the popular professors of the day, if I can but serve and honor Christ. I know that all who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. It is as true to-day as when the inspired apostle spoke these words, and I feel willing to be called a fool for Christ's sake, if need be, knowing that my reward is at the end.

From Bro. H. B. Cross.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I think there is an increasing willingness, in some localities, to hear and read the truths of the kingdom at hand." Several ministers of the various churches in this vicinity seem to be awaking to the subject. One of them, a man of talent, and of the Congregational [illegible] said to me, a short time since, "The hope of the christian is in the personal coming of Christ; and we have come to the time when we may consistently look, daily, for that event." He instructs his people that they are not to expect the conversion of the world through their cherished plans for so doing, and preaches to them the "gospel of the kingdom." He said he felt the need of some small book or tract setting forth plainly and concisely the millennial truth, which could be scattered broadcast among the people.

He thought the time had come when people would read on the subject if properly presented. And said that much vital truth was rejected, or was not read by many honest christians, because the article, the tract, or the book, bore the imprint or signature of some individual, or society, against whom they had justly, or unjustly acquired a prejudice. I think we all know this is true to some extent.

The Orphan's Lament.

I wander in this vale of tears,
Of sorrow, sin and gloom,
I'm praying for deliverance,
And waiting to go home.

A Father, mother, sister dear,
And brother, all are gone;
They now are sleeping in their graves,
And I am all alone.

Yet not alone, my Savior's near,
He is the orphan's friend,
A Father to the fatherless,
He'll guide me to the end

If I am faithful to my God,
And do my Master's will,
He'll not forget me when he comes
The world with grace to fill.

He'll say—Well done, thou faithful one,
No more shalt thou depart,
But dwell forever with thy God,
And all the pure in heart.

Notes by the Way.

June 25th, I bade adieu to the friends in Syracuse, and started for the land of my adoption. Had a pleasant passage across Lake Ontario. June 27th, 28th and 29th, attended the annual conference of the Church of God of C. W., which was held in Darlington. The gathering was large. Preaching good. All the sittings were harmonious. Hence the influence left on community was good. I immersed one mortal soul into the Christ for the remission of sins. Spent a few days with the church in Cartwright. Gave them five discourses. Good was done in the name of Jehovah. Visited the friends in Whitby. Had a good time in talking upon the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of his Anointed. Immersed one.

Visited the church in Brooklin. Gave eight discourses to attentive congregations. Had the honor of immersing five mortal souls into the Christ. Spent a week with the church of God in Toronto. Our congregation continued to increase during our stay. The congregation was large and intelligent, and better attention I never saw. I immersed two. One of them had been brought up in the Roman Catholic Church. I visited the church at Thorold and Gainsborough. Had a good time in presenting the truth.

August 2nd and 3d I held a barn meeting in the township of Clark. Gave them five discourses. Gathering large. Attention good. Truth took effect, and I had the honor of immersing four into the Christ for the remission of sins. Glory be to God that there is a power in the gospel. I visited the friends in Coburg. Had a good time. On the morning of the 5th, I bade them adieu for a short time. Had a sick time in crossing the Lake. Last Sunday I preached in Syracuse. Had a good time, and on the morning of the 8th of July, I was immersed into the Christ beneath the beautiful waters of Lake Ontario. It was the most delightful morning that I ever saw. Amen.

HIGH CHURCH, LOW CHURCH, AND EVANGELICAL.

Evangelical.—Two beans and two beans make four beans!

Low Churchman.—I beg your pardon, sir; but, according to my arithmetic, three beans and one bean make four beans.

High Churchman.—Gentlemen, I pity your stupidity and your ignorance; and I lament the mischief you are working in inculcating that but two parcels of beans can make four beans, while both history and geometry so clearly establish that it takes four separate and individual beans to make four beans.

Moral, founded on fact: While they disputed about the arithmetic of the ration, poor Lazarus died of starvation for want of the beans.

From Plymouth, Mass.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—If my humble epistles can help you along in your pilgrimage journey, I shall rejoice in having a knowledge that my efforts are not made in vain. When I came to Plymouth, I had nought but a sling and a few pebbles, but going forward trusting wholly in the God of Israel, I have been enabled to witness great results. Since last September, we have held meetings every evening, with few exceptions, up to the present time. When I first came here, all the flock were scattered. My first duty was to go out into the streets, roads, lanes, by-ways, hills and valleys, to search for the sheep. Many were found much disheartened on account of past trials and difficulties, but by holding a little prayer meeting in each household, faith grew stronger, and the whole company in the course of six or eight weeks rallied to the call of their Master, and fought anew the battles of the Lord. As might be expected, sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and, as near as I can learn, fifty of these two classes of persons are now rejoicing in God.

Then came baptism. Here we had to labor earnestly. The result is, forty persons, eleven men and twenty-nine women, have been "buried with Christ in baptism," and others are to follow the example of Christ next Lord's day. Since I wrote last, we have had two baptisms; the first one, eight persons; the second, ten. Some of these persons have been professors of religion for years, but did not do duty in this direction until now. Quite a common objection urged against baptism is, "I am afraid that I shall not hold out." I answer this class of objectors by referring them to their exhortations to the unconverted, when they say, "repent to-night," or "to-day," "for you may not live to see the light of another day." Then I ask them if they have "a lease of life" in this present world more than the sinner. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. Be baptized now, for you do not know about seeing another week in this life. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Three of the number baptized have been Methodists, four were Presbyterians, and one Orthodox. All now rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

Our prayer and conference meetings are exceedingly interesting. They have been held every evening since last September. It is quite a common circumstance to have forty persons take part in one meeting. The brethren and sisters pray much, which accounts in a great measure for the interest manifested. In two of our meetings sixteen persons in succession implored God for his blessing. Last Sunday evening fifty-seven persons took part in the exercises, and we had over seventy-five prayers and exhortations, and in addition to these some twenty-five verses were sung. All this required but two hours' time. The brethren and sisters know the value of short exhortations and short prayers. All have an opportunity to take an active part in the work, and no one has an excuse for not laboring. Quite a number have been added to the church, and we can say from our hearts, it is the work of the Lord, and we rejoice in it. Six weeks ago we commenced holding out-door meetings, and they have proved a success. These meetings are largely attended by attentive audiences. Last Lord's day Bro. J. S. White preached on "the green" to a large audience, on "the two Adams." The entire town seems to be stirred, and the Lord opens the hearts of his children to receive me wherever I am called to labor. Of course I have encountered manifold temptations, a few trials, and some difficulties. I feel more and more the need of God's grace. Many of the children meet with a great amount of trials, and look to me for counsel. I have a "throne of grace" to go to, and there seek for and get wisdom from my heavenly Father. We are bound together by the strong cords of christian love, and pray that all may be "joint heirs with Christ" of "the inheritance." Many times my labors have been so arduous that I felt my bodily strength almost gone; but right there God gave me a "kid," and I have been strengthened for further exertions. I have more than one hundred families to visit, and my visiting territory is ten miles from one extreme end to the other. Sinners are under conviction, and scarcely a week passes but that we have some poor sinner or backslider brought back to Father's family.

Dear brethren and sisters, do not get discouraged. A year ago, affairs looked very unpromising here, but the children went to praying, and they took hold, held on, and would not let go "the throne of grace," and God has blessed, and is blessing them. Forgive one another, be tender-hearted and kind. Recollect the admonitions of Christ and the apostles. Give heed to them. Clear all rubbish, in the shape of contentions, disputings, variance, evil thoughts, worldliness and pride out of the way, and you will not have to wait long for an outpouring of God's blessings. The end is near. Sinners must perish. Do not quarrel amongst yourselves, and let them go on stumbling over your wickedness into destruction. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

Yours looking for Christ,

Aug. 11th, '62. F. N. Burbank.

Rules for Public Speaking.

We are enabled to recommend with confidence, the following rules to those who would be successful public speakers:—

1. Endeavor to possess yourself wholly of your subject.
2. Be calm and self-collected, and speak to the audience under a lively consciousness that they are expecting instruction and edification, and of the importance of acquitting yourself well.
3. Be sure you pitch your voice low enough at the commencement of your discourse. It will then find its natural tone as you proceed.
4. Let your enunciation of every syllable and, so far as possible, of the sound of every letter, be clear, and distinct, and you will then be heard and understood in every part of the largest hall, though your voice may not be loud.
5. Keep the lungs well inflated, and speak mostly by the movement of the abdominal muscles.
6. Let your voice be flexible, undulatory, and rythmic in its motion; and mind your pauses, emphases, and intonations, according to the nature of the subject, and the passions that are to be expressed.
7. Keep the mind well concentrated, and enter thoroughly into the spirit of the subject.
8. Keep the limbs flexible, and let gesticulation be prompted by the impulse of feeling. Then it will always be natural.

Let each public speaker drill himself to these rules, until their observance becomes natural and spontaneous; and if the matter of his communication is of interest and importance, he will not fail to acquit himself to the satisfaction of his audience.—Life Illustrated.

False Proverbs.

"A young fellow must sow his wild oats." In all the wild range of accepted British maxims there is none, take it for all in all, more thoroughly abominable than this one as to the sowing of wild oats. Look on it on what side you will, and I will defy you to make anything but a devil's maxim of it. What a man—be he young, old, or middle-aged—sows, that, and nothing else, shall he reap. The one only thing to do with wild oats is to put them carefully into the hottest part of the fire, and get them burnt to dust, every seed of them. If you sow them, no matter in what ground, up they will come, with long tough roots like couch-grass, and luxuriant stalks and leaves, as sure as there is a sun in heaven; a crop which it turns one's heart cold to think of. The devil, too, whose special crop they are, will see that they thrive, and you and nobody else will have to reap them; and no common reaping will get them out of the soil, which must be dug down deep, again and again. Well for you if, with all your care, you can make the ground sweet again by your dying day.

"Boys will be boys," is not much better. That has a true side to it; but this encouragement to the sowing of wild oats is simply devilish, for it means that a young man is to give way to the temptations and follow the lusts of his age. What are we to do with the wild oats of manhood and old age—with ambition, overreaching, the false weights, hardness, suspicion, avarice—if the wild oats of youth are to be sown, and not burnt? What possible distinction can we draw between them? If we may sow one, why not the other?—From "Tom Brown at Oxford."

The true Gentleman.

The following sketch is called the portrait of a true gentleman. It was found in an old manor house in Gloucestershire, England, written and framed, and hung over the mantle piece of a tapestried sitting room:

"The true gentleman is God's servant, the world's master, and his own manly virtue is his business, study, recreation, contentment his rest and happiness, his reward. God is his Father, Jesus Christ his Savior, the saints his brethren, and all that need him his friends: devotion is his chaplain, chastity his chamberlain, sobriety his butler, temperance his cook, hospitality his housekeeper, Providence his steward, charity his treasury, piety his mistress of the house, and discretion his porter, to let in or out, as most fit. Thus is his whole family made up of virtues, and he is the true master of the house. He is necessitated to take the world on his way to heaven, but he walks through it as fast as he can, and all his business by the way is to make himself and others happy. Take him in two words—a man, and a christian."—Ex.

☞ When I was a young man, there lived in our neighborhood a farmer who was usually reported to be a very liberal man, and uncommonly upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends, observing him frequently doing so, questioned him why he did it—told him he gave too much, and said it would not be to his advantage. Now mark the answer of this excellent man. "God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when I am gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this. But one journey through the world!

A Keen Reply.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining, with great earnestness, the doctrine of Vox populi vox Dei against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum, and said,

"I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."

"Yes," she replied, mildly, "it cried, 'Crucify him! crucify him!'"

A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.

The Bible.—The Bible is all pure, all sincere, nothing too much, nothing wanting. How that can be called the church of Christ which is established upon laws which are not his, and which excludes such persons from its communion as he will one day receive into the kingdom of heaven, I understand not.—John Locke.

Little Nellie Green;

OR, GOOD FOR EVIL.

"I wish Annie Howard would never come to see me again: I hate her!" exclaimed little Nellie Green, as she came into the room where her mother was sewing, one bright summer afternoon after her little playmate had been to make her a visit.

"Why, Nellie!" said her mother, "I am surprised and grieved to hear you speak so. What has Annie done, to make you hate her? Come here and tell me all about it, my dear."

Nellie, with tearful eyes, looked up and said, "Why, mother, she is always teazing me in some way. If I want to play with anything, she snatches it away; if I don't give her everything she wants, she says I am 'selfish, to keep things to myself.' She tears my books carelessly; tumbles my things all up; and to-day she broke my beautiful new doll, and because I cried, she said I was 'a little booby and cry-baby,' and laughed at me. I wish somebody would break her playthings"; and again the tears burst forth.

"Annie, no doubt, has treated you badly, my child, and I do not wonder that you should feel grieved and hurt. But would my little girl be doing right to hate her, and wish her ill, because she does not treat you well? Would Jesus have you feel so? You said the other day, that you wished you were like Jesus, for he was so good. Do you think Jesus hated anybody, and wished evil upon them?"

"No, mother; he was all good, and loved those that hated him."

"And do you remember his words, which we read this morning, that you thought were so good, and in which he teaches us how we should treat those who ill-treat us?"

"Yes, mother, in his sermon on the mount, he said: 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.'"

"And now, my child, what will you do? Will you not try and be like Jesus, and do as he tells you? Perhaps you had better go into your little room now, and talk to God about it. If you ask him, he will help you to feel differently towards Annie, and find some way to make Annie do differently towards you."

Nellie kissed her mother, and did as she advised. Her mother did not see her again till tea time, when she was pleased to see that Nellie looked quite happy.

Nothing was said about Annie for two or three days, till one afternoon Nellie came running in, looking very happy, and exclaimed, "I have punished Annie Howard till I am satisfied. I guess she wont plague me any more!"

"Why, Nellie, what have you done?" inquired her mother.

"Done?" said Nellie, "why, I've burnt her!"

"Burnt her!" exclaimed her mother, "what do you mean, Nellie?"

"Well, mother," replied Nellie, "I thought of what it said in the Bible about heaping coals of fire on the head; and I've heaped coals of fire on her head, till I've burnt her well."

"What did you do?" inquired her mother, smiling.

"Why," said Nellie, "to-day Annie was walking along with a heavy basket of apples, which she had got in the orchard for her mother, and hitting her foot, she fell to the ground, scattering the apples in every direction. She began to cry bitterly, for she hurt her some, and I suppose she thought I would laugh at her. But Jesus helped me, and so I ran to her, and said, 'I am sorry you hurt you, Annie; don't cry any more, I will help you pick up the apples, and carry them home, too, for they must be heavy.' Annie only cried the more, and I thought she must have hurt her badly, and so I told her I would run for her mother. But she said, 'O no, you need not run for my mother—my falling did not hurt me much; it is you who hurt me, by being so kind, when I was so unkind to you the other day. If you will only forgive me, Nellie, I will try and do so no more. I suppose I was envious because you had more playthings than I; at any rate I was very wicked.'

"I kissed her, and told her I would forget it all; and then we picked up the apples, and I helped her carry them home, when she would have me go in, and we had a nice time. Every once in a while she would say, 'How naughty I was to you, Nellie, and now you are so kind!' I told her Jesus helped me, and he would help her, if she would only ask him. She said she would, for she was sure he must be good, and she should love him, if he made people do such good things, and forgive such naughty girls as she was. I kissed her again, and hurried home, for I was afraid you might be anxious about me."

The mother's eyes were full of tears, as she replied, "I am glad Jesus has helped my little girl to do right, and that she has followed his teachings. I hope you will always go to him for help"; and she tenderly kissed her.

My dear children, I trust you will try to follow the good example of little Nellie, when any of your mates are unkind to you, or injure you in any way. Try to do as Jesus would have you, and soon you will be with him, and dwell with him in glory forever.

A Child's Fable, versified.

A great king sought his garden, his pleasure and pride,
Where Art and where Nature together had vied
To make it eclipse in luxuriance and grace
All since Eden, our first parents' blest dwelling place.
But alas! a sad change he beheld with surprise,
Now, drooping and withering, before him all lies,
From the tall, stately Oak to the Lily's frail stem.
No account could be given what had happened to them.
E'en the Rose, queen of flowers, bent languidly down,
Unrefreshed by soft dews of the even and morn.
The king questioned of each, wherefore found in such case?
Each replied "that they envied some other one's place."
The Oak was too cumbersome, shady and high,
The Rose thought herself "useless," "so fleeting am I."
The Lily forgot the sweet lessons she taught,
Who "toil not nor spin," yet with loveliness fraught;
Were she but a Grape-vine, well loaded with fruit,
She might then have some hopes her owner to suit.
The Grape-vine was tired of dependance at last,
Discarding support, on the ground it was cast.
Her fruit was now worthless, and the king in despair,
Saw ruin impending on [illegible] once so fair,
When he spied a bright Hearts-ease, with cheer in its eye,
Mid its murmuring companions, retiring and shy.
"My dear little Heart's-case, pray, why do you smile?"
"'Tis my mission," she said, "your cares to beguile.
You wanted me here, so I make it my plan
To be the best Heart's-ease that ever I can."
Here's a lesson, dear children, for you and for me,—
Be content with your station, whatever it be;
'T is God who appoints it, then do with your might
What your hands find to do, and you're dear in his sight.

Amy.

The Invitation.

Come unto me, ye weary,
The Savior smiling said;
Come unto me, ye hungry,
And feed on heavenly bread.

Come unto me, ye weary,
And drink of living streams;
Come, ye who dwell in darkness,
Where light eternal beams.

Come, ye who sit in darkness,
And I will give you joy;
Come, ye who live in sorrow,
Where sorrow ne'er shall cloy.

Come, ye who're sick of sinning,
And I'll your sins forgive;
Come unto me, ye dying,
Come, and forever live.

Come, ye who seek for riches,
My wealth can never fail;
All things are my possession,—
Go tell the wondrous tale.

Come, ye who seek for glory,
Seek that which cannot dim;
Seek not mid scenes of bloodshed,
Or in the haunts of sin.

Come, ye who have afflictions,
Cast your care upon the Lord,
And he will help you bear them—
He's promised in his word,

Those who in him do rest their hope,
Shall have a lasting home
(When present things are passed away),
In that bright world to come.

A Glance at our World.—No. 9.

We now copy the forcible language of G. B. Cheever on the state of Europe:—"Whether God be about to involve the nations of Europe in a complicated and dreadful war, or whether the selfish diplomacy of courts and cabinets shall work a present peace, there is matter already for solemn contemplation in the events and results thus far. There is that which looks very like positive and quick retribution for particular national sins, for being accessory to such crimes before and after the facts; and it is no new thing that God uses nations as his own hammer and battle axe on one another." Mark the language of God's chosen prophet when foretelling the destruction of mighty nations. Assyria shall destroy Israel, and they shall be destroyed for that very destruction; and Babylon shall be arrayed against both Egypt and Judah, and shall be God's triumphant servant for their overthrow, and they in turn shall be blasted forever. What then are we better than they? Selfish christian civilization and worship of Balaam [illegible] anti-christian and pagan? For three transgressions and for four would God level the thunder and lightning of his wrath against nations living under so much dimmer gospel light than ours, that in comparison it was utter darkness; and for three and four and forty transgressions shall we escape? Had his providences and end a meaning then that they have not now, or were the principles on which he governed the world different at that time and this? For national sins all down God has first warned by his chosen people; then if unheeded, retributive justice follows and cuts them down. God has borne long with our nation. Long has the wail of the poor friendless bondsman gone up to Thee, and we begin to feel the terrible effects of God's viddictive ire upon us as a hypocritical nation. We fear that this ire will not pause and spend its fury upon the South, but the North are guilty of sins which call loudly for redress, and unless there is humiliation, and that speedily, they are gone. God has spoken as audibly as he did to the Egyptians in reference to the sins of which they are so guilty. But they have gone on heedlessly, hugging their sins to their bosom, and now the ire of Him who warns not in vain is kindled, and he will make his might felt on this thrice guilty nation, living in the full blaze of gospel light, knowing the sin of human slavery,—it will evidently prove their guilty overthrow. We feel it. Men of eloquence have for years warned them of their downward progress, but it has no effect.

The present is truly a time of darkness and perplexity; a period in which wars and commotions are alarming the hearts of men. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world as those now passing over this nation. The statesman, the politician and the merchant, are all equally at a loss to comprehend the present or to predict for the future of this nation; but they admit there is an element at work destined to break up the social fabric of our government.

All nations seem to catch the contagion of war, and the whole eastern heavens will soon be lit up with the reddening conflagration. France is eager to join hands with the South, and inviting England and Russia to consolidate, and thus crush out the only republic on earth. The budding fig-trees do not more clearly indicate the coming summer, than the present signs indicate the soon coming of the King of Peace. Yes, the fuse is ignited, and will finally end in a terrible explosion among the nations. All things indicate it. God's word clearly defines the way for his followers to act in the emergency now crowding down upon them.

Let those who believe in war go to the scene of strife, but clear your skirts. Tell them of the awful consequences of those who take the sword, perishing by the same. The follower of Christ does not feel the spirit of war. Christ told them of old to conquer by love; and hence we deduce from this great fundamental fact, that those who at once grasp the rifle, and hie away for tented fields, are not imbued with the spirit of Christ. Oh! may the true church now awake and sound the last warning to fallen man, as they shall wish they had in the day of reckoning.

Remedy for Scolding.

Upon noticing a recipe for husbands, in the Transcript, the week one appeared in the Crisis for wives; and thinking great responsibility rests upon both classes, I extract the following recipe for husbands:

"Quite a sure remedy for scolding is to give no cause for scolding. Very few wives scold without cause, and to stop their scolding, stop the provocations. We cannot blame a wife for scolding when her husband only half provides for her, spends nearly all his time away from home, is particularly polite and attentive to any and every woman except his wife; never expressing himself pleased with anything she does, and is continually extolling the elegance, neatness, and economy of somebody else, is all life and gaiety in company, and drowsy and dull at home, speaking crustily to those around, and driving away what few gleams of sunshine might otherwise rest upon the brow of his toilsome, careworn wife."—Windham County Transcript.

We would not attempt to justify the above spirit of retaliation, whatever the provocation. Retaliation is unscriptural; consequently wrong; yet all must admit the extremely trying position of a wife,—one who knows the place she should occupy, the place scripturally assigned her in her husband's affection,—when she witnesses the bestowal of affection upon others, by her husband, to which she alone has claim. I regard that the commonness of this sin has occasioned the loss of its heinousness in the minds of some professing better things. May those looking for the Lord keep themselves so pure as to give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully in this respect.

From Fanny R. Calhoun.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say, that I have received your paper—the Crisis—and that for instruction and edification in Bible truth, especially the devotional portion of it (which to me has been of late of great interest), far excels any other I have seen, and is just what I want to help me to understand Bible truths more perfectly. The Lord has led me in a way that I knew not of.

Last winter Bro. H. Pratt, an Advent preacher, delivered a course of lectures on the prophecies, and preached from other portions of the Bible in New Preston. I heard him, and became interested. The Lord opened my heart to receive the truth in the love of it. I did not confer with flesh and blood, but immediately confessed the change in my religious belief before the church and congregation,—that believers were the only fit subjects for baptism, not infants; that sprinkling is not baptism; that we have immortality, eternal life, only through Christ, who is our only hope; by the rejection of whom we must suffer eternal death, which is the penalty of the law, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.

I have ever in thought believed in the personal coming of Christ to judge the world and raise the dead; but of what use was it, with the delusive hope that we possess an immortal soul that cannot die, which leaves the body at death to dwell in heaven forever happy, or in hell forever tormented? That deathless soul is the foundation-stone that error builds upon. Take that away, and almost the whole falls. O vain, delusive hope, that is built upon such a foundation! It cannot stand the test. It is contrary to the word of God. Yet men will preach it, and the people for the most part believe it.

Mr. J. Strong, in a sermon last winter, asserted that man was immortal as God was; and that to deny it was worse than infidelity; though he did not bring a single text of Scripture to prove his assertion. His design was to overthrow Bro. Pratt's teachings, but failed. The work progressed and is still progressing. June 22d, four were baptized.

DEAR BRO. IN CHRIST:—Through the instrumentality of a friend, I have been permitted for the last year to peruse your valuable paper, the Crisis; and, believing as I do that it is founded on Scriptural truths, I feel it my duty to encourage you in still circulating it far and wide, and to continue in your labor of love; for, in God's hands, it may be the means of doing much good, and saving many souls from death. Although my name is enrolled with another denomination, I love all who love the Lord, and I mean to labor in his vineyard wherever I am placed; and although the church to which I belong seem to think that I shall apostatize if I embrace these truths, I can truly say I never saw God's truth in so plain a light as now, and never felt a greater determination to serve him. I am willing to be despised, and to have my name cast out as evil among the popular professors of the day, if I can but serve and honor Christ. I know that all who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. It is as true to-day as when the inspired apostle spoke these words, and I feel willing to be called a fool for Christ's sake, if need be, knowing that my reward is at the end.

From Bro. H. B. Cross.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I think there is an increasing willingness, in some localities, to hear and read the truths of the kingdom at hand." Several ministers of the various churches in this vicinity seem to be awaking to the subject. One of them, a man of talent, and of the Congregational [illegible] said to me, a short time since, "The hope of the christian is in the personal coming of Christ; and we have come to the time when we may consistently look, daily, for that event." He instructs his people that they are not to expect the conversion of the world through their cherished plans for so doing, and preaches to them the "gospel of the kingdom." He said he felt the need of some small book or tract setting forth plainly and concisely the millennial truth, which could be scattered broadcast among the people.

He thought the time had come when people would read on the subject if properly presented. And said that much vital truth was rejected, or was not read by many honest christians, because the article, the tract, or the book, bore the imprint or signature of some individual, or society, against whom they had justly, or unjustly acquired a prejudice. I think we all know this is true to some extent.

The Orphan's Lament.

I wander in this vale of tears,
Of sorrow, sin and gloom,
I'm praying for deliverance,
And waiting to go home.

A Father, mother, sister dear,
And brother, all are gone;
They now are sleeping in their graves,
And I am all alone.

Yet not alone, my Savior's near,
He is the orphan's friend,
A Father to the fatherless,
He'll guide me to the end.

If I am faithful to my God,
And do my Master's will,
He'll not forget me when he comes
The world with grace to fill.

He'll say—Well done, thou faithful one,
No more shalt thou depart,
But dwell forever with thy God,
And all the pure in heart.

Notes by the Way.

June 25th, I bade adieu to the friends in Syracuse, and started for the land of my adoption. Had a pleasant passage across Lake Ontario. June 27th, 28th and 29th, attended the annual conference of the Church of God of C. W., which was held in Darlington. The gathering was large. Preaching good. All the sittings were harmonious. Hence the influence left on community was good. I immersed one mortal soul into the Christ for the remission of sins. Spent a few days with the church in Cartwright. Gave them five discourses. Good was done in the name of Jehovah. Visited the friends in Whitby. Had a good time in talking upon the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of his Anointed. Immersed one.

Visited the church in Brooklin. Gave eight discourses to attentive congregations. Had the honor of immersing five mortal souls into the Christ. Spent a week with the church of God in Toronto. Our congregation continued to increase during our stay. The congregation was large and intelligent, and better attention I never saw. I immersed two. One of them had been brought up in the Roman Catholic Church. I visited the church at Thorold and Gainsborough. Had a good time in presenting the truth.

August 2nd and 3d I held a barn meeting in the township of Clark. Gave them five discourses. Gathering large. Attention good. Truth took effect, and I had the honor of immersing four into the Christ for the remission of sins. Glory be to God that there is a power in the gospel. I visited the friends in Coburg. Had a good time. On the morning of the 5th, I bade them adieu for a short time. Had a sick time in crossing the Lake. Last Sunday I preached in Syracuse. Had a good time, and on the morning of the 8th of July, I was immersed into the Christ beneath the beautiful waters of Lake Ontario. It was the most delightful morning that I ever saw. Amen.

From Plymouth, Mass.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—If my humble epistles can help you along in your pilgrimage journey, I shall rejoice in having a knowledge that my efforts are not made in vain. When I came to Plymouth, I had nought but a sling and a few pebbles, but going forward trusting wholly in the God of Israel, I have been enabled to witness great results. Since last September, we have held meetings every evening, with few exceptions, up to the present time. When I first came here, all the flock were scattered. My first duty was to go out into the streets, roads, lanes, by-ways, hills and valleys, to search for the sheep. Many were found much disheartened on account of past trials and difficulties, but by holding a little prayer meeting in each household, faith grew stronger, and the whole company in the course of six or eight weeks rallied to the call of their Master, and fought anew the battles of the Lord. As might be expected, sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and, as near as I can learn, fifty of these two classes of persons are now rejoicing in God.

Then came baptism. Here we had to labor earnestly. The result is, forty persons, eleven men and twenty-nine women, have been "buried with Christ in baptism," and others are to follow the example of Christ next Lord's day. Since I wrote last, we have had two baptisms; the first one, eight persons; the second, ten. Some of these persons have been professors of religion for years, but did not do duty in this direction until now. Quite a common objection urged against baptism is, "I am afraid that I shall not hold out." I answer this class of objectors by referring them to their exhortations to the unconverted, when they say, "repent to-night," or "to-day," "for you may not live to see the light of another day." Then I ask them if they have "a lease of life" in this present world more than the sinner. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. Be baptized now, for you do not know about seeing another week in this life. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Three of the number baptized have been Methodists, four were Presbyterians, and one Orthodox. All now rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

Our prayer and conference meetings are exceedingly interesting. They have been held every evening since last September. It is quite a common circumstance to have forty persons take part in one meeting. The brethren and sisters pray much, which accounts in a great measure for the interest manifested. In two of our meetings sixteen persons in succession implored God for his blessing. Last Sunday evening fifty-seven persons took part in the exercises, and we had over seventy-five prayers and exhortations, and in addition to these some twenty-five verses were sung. All this required but two hours' time. The brethren and sisters know the value of short exhortations and short prayers. All have an opportunity to take an active part in the work, and no one has an excuse for not laboring. Quite a number have been added to the church, and we can say from our hearts, it is the work of the Lord, and we rejoice in it. Six weeks ago we commenced holding out-door meetings, and they have proved a success. These meetings are largely attended by attentive audiences. Last Lord's day Bro. J. S. White preached on "the green" to a large audience, on "the two Adams." The entire town seems to be stirred, and the Lord opens the hearts of his children to receive me wherever I am called to labor. Of course I have encountered manifold temptations, a few trials, and some difficulties. I feel more and more the need of God's grace. Many of the children meet with a great amount of trials, and look to me for counsel. I have a "throne of grace" to go to, and there seek for and get wisdom from my heavenly Father. We are bound together by the strong cords of christian love, and pray that all may be "joint heirs with Christ" of "the inheritance." Many times my labors have been so arduous that I felt my bodily strength almost gone; but right there God gave me a "kid," and I have been strengthened for further exertions. I have more than one hundred families to visit, and my visiting territory is ten miles from one extreme end to the other. Sinners are under conviction, and scarcely a week passes but that we have some poor sinner or backslider brought back to Father's family.

Dear brethren and sisters, do not get discouraged. A year ago, affairs looked very unpromising here, but the children went to praying, and they took hold, held on, and would not let go "the throne of grace," and God has blessed, and is blessing them. Forgive one another, be tender-hearted and kind. Recollect the admonitions of Christ and the apostles. Give heed to them. Clear all rubbish, in the shape of contentions, disputings, variance, evil thoughts, worldliness and pride out of the way, and you will not have to wait long for an outpouring of God's blessings. The end is near. Sinners must perish. Do not quarrel amongst yourselves, and let them go on stumbling over your wickedness into destruction. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

Yours looking for Christ,

Aug. 11th, '62. F. N. BURBANK.

Rules for Public Speaking.

We are enabled to recommend with confidence, the following rules to those who would be successful public speakers:—

1. Endeavor to possess yourself wholly of your subject.

2. Be calm and self-collected, and speak to the audience under a lively consciousness that they are expecting instruction and edification, and of the importance of acquitting yourself well.

3. Be sure you pitch your voice low enough at the commencement of your discourse. It will then find its natural tone as you proceed.

4. Let your enunciation of every syllable and, so far as possible, of the sound of every letter, be clear, and distinct, and you will then be heard and understood in every part of the largest hall, though your voice may not be loud.

5. Keep the lungs well inflated, and speak mostly by the movement of the abdominal muscles.

6. Let your voice be flexible, undulatory, and rythmic in its motion; and mind your pauses, emphases, and intonations, according to the nature of the subject, and the passions that are to be expressed.

7. Keep the mind well concentrated, and enter thoroughly into the spirit of the subject.

8. Keep the limbs flexible, and let gesticulation be prompted by the impulse of feeling. Then it will always be natural.

Let each public speaker drill himself to these rules, until their observance becomes natural and spontaneous; and if the matter of his communication is of interest and importance, he will not fail to acquit himself to the satisfaction of his audience.—Life Illustrated.

False Proverbs.

"A young fellow must sow his wild oats." In all the wild range of accepted British maxims there is none, take it for all in all, more thoroughly abominable than this one as to the sowing of wild oats. Look on it on what side you will, and I will defy you to make anything but a devil's maxim of it. What a man—be he young, old, or middle-aged—sows, that, and nothing else, shall he reap. The one only thing to do with wild oats is to put them carefully into the hottest part of the fire, and get them burnt to dust, every seed of them. If you sow them, no matter in what ground, up they will come, with long tough roots like couch-grass, and luxuriant stalks and leaves, as sure as there is a sun in heaven; a crop which it turns one's heart cold to think of. The devil, too, whose special crop they are, will see that they thrive, and you and nobody else will have to reap them; and no common reaping will get them out of the soil, which must be dug down deep, again and again. Well for you if, with all your care, you can make the ground sweet again by your dying day.

"Boys will be boys," is not much better. That has a true side to it; but this encouragement to the sowing of wild oats is simply devilish, for it means that a young man is to give way to the temptations and follow the lusts of his age. What are we to do with the wild oats of manhood and old age—with ambition, over-reaching, the false weights, hardness, suspicion, avarice—if the wild oats of youth are to be sown, and not burnt? What possible distinction can we draw between them? If we may sow one, why not the other?—From "Tom Brown at Oxford."

The true Gentleman.

The following sketch is called the portrait of a true gentleman. It was found in an old manor house in Gloucestershire, England, written and framed, and hung over the mantle piece of a tapestried sitting room:

"The true gentleman is God's servant, the world's master, and his own manly virtue is his business, study, recreation, contentment his rest and happiness, his reward. God is his Father, Jesus Christ his Savior, the saints his brethren, and all that need him his friends: devotion is his chaplain, chastity his chamberlain, sobriety his butler, temperance his cook, hospitality his housekeeper, Providence his steward, charity his treasury, piety his mistress of the house, and discretion his porter, to let in or out, as most fit. Thus is his whole family made up of virtues, and he is the true master of the house. He is necessitated to take the world on his way to heaven, but he walks through it as fast as he can, and all his business by the way is to make himself and others happy. Take him in two words—a man, and a christian."—Ex.

☞ When I was a young man, there lived in our neighborhood a farmer who was usually reported to be a very liberal man, and uncommonly upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends, observing him frequently doing so, questioned him why he did it—told him he gave too much, and said it would not be to his advantage. Now mark the answer of this excellent man. "God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when I am gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this. But one journey through the world!

A KEEN REPLY.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining, with great earnestness, the doctrine of Vox populi vox Dei against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum, and said,

"I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."

"Yes," she replied, mildly, "it cried, 'Crucify him! crucify him!'"

A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is all pure, all sincere, nothing too much, nothing wanting. How that can be called the church of Christ which is established upon laws which are not his, and which excludes such persons from its communion as he will one day receive into the kingdom of heaven, I understand not.—John Locke.

Little Nellie Green;

OR, GOOD FOR EVIL.

"I wish Annie Howard would never come to see me again: I hate her!" exclaimed little Nellie Green, as she came into the room where her mother was sewing, one bright summer afternoon after her little playmate had been to make her a visit.

"Why, Nellie!" said her mother, "I am surprised and grieved to hear you speak so. What has Annie done, to make you hate her? Come here and tell me all about it, my dear."

Nellie, with tearful eyes, looked up and said, "Why, mother, she is always teazing me in some way. If I want to play with anything, she snatches it away; if I don't give her everything she wants, she says I am 'selfish, to keep things to myself.' She tears my books carelessly; tumbles my things all up; and to-day she broke my beautiful new doll, and because I cried, she said I was 'a little booby and cry-baby,' and laughed at me. I wish somebody would break her playthings"; and again the tears burst forth.

"Annie, no doubt, has treated you badly, my child, and I do not wonder that you should feel grieved and hurt. But would my little girl be doing right to hate her, and wish her ill, because she does not treat you well? Would Jesus have you feel so? You said the other day, that you wished you were like Jesus, for he was so good. Do you think Jesus hated anybody, and wished evil upon them?"

"No, mother; he was all good, and loved those that hated him."

"And do you remember his words, which we read this morning, that you thought were so good, and in which he teaches us how we should treat those who ill-treat us?"

"Yes, mother, in his sermon on the mount, he said: 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.'"

"And now, my child, what will you do? Will you not try and be like Jesus, and do as he tells you? Perhaps you had better go into your little room now, and talk to God about it. If you ask him, he will help you to feel differently towards Annie, and find some way to make Annie do differently towards you."

Nellie kissed her mother, and did as she advised. Her mother did not see her again till tea time, when she was pleased to see that Nellie looked quite happy.

Nothing was said about Annie for two or three days, till one afternoon Nellie came running in, looking very happy, and exclaimed, "I have punished Annie Howard till I am satisfied. I guess she wont plague me any more!"

"Why, Nellie, what have you done?" inquired her mother.

"Done?" said Nellie, "why, I've burnt her!"

"Burnt her!" exclaimed her mother, "what do you mean, Nellie?"

"Well, mother," replied Nellie, "I thought of what it said in the Bible about heaping coals of fire on the head; and I've heaped coals of fire on her head, till I've burnt her well."

"What did you do?" inquired her mother, smiling.

"Why," said Nellie, "to-day Annie was walking along with a heavy basket of apples, which she had got in the orchard for her mother, and hitting her foot, she fell to the ground, scattering the apples in every direction. She began to cry bitterly, for she hurt her some, and I suppose she thought I would laugh at her. But Jesus helped me, and so I ran to her, and said, 'I am sorry you hurt you, Annie; don't cry any more, I will help you pick up the apples, and carry them home, too, for they must be heavy.' Annie only cried the more, and I thought she must have hurt her badly, and so I told her I would run for her mother. But she said, 'O no, you need not run for my mother—my falling did not hurt me much; it is you who hurt me, by being so kind, when I was so unkind to you the other day. If you will only forgive me, Nellie, I will try and do so no more. I suppose I was envious because you had more playthings than I; at any rate I was very wicked.'

"I kissed her, and told her I would forget it all; and then we picked up the apples, and I helped her carry them home, when she would have me go in, and we had a nice time. Every once in a while she would say, 'How naughty I was to you, Nellie, and now you are so kind!' I told her Jesus helped me, and he would help her, if she would only ask him. She said she would, for she was sure he must be good, and she should love him, if he made people do such good things, and forgive such naughty girls as she was. I kissed her again, and hurried home, for I was afraid you might be anxious about me."

The mother's eyes were full of tears, as she replied, "I am glad Jesus has helped my little girl to do right, and that she has followed his teachings. I hope you will always go to him for help"; and she tenderly kissed her.

My dear children, I trust you will try to follow the good example of little Nellie, when any of your mates are unkind to you, or injure you in any way. Try to do as Jesus would have you, and soon you will be with him, and dwell with him in glory forever.

A Child's Fable, versified.

A great king sought his garden, his pleasure and pride,
Where Art and where Nature together had vied
To make it eclipse in luxuriance and grace
All since Eden, our first parents' blest dwelling place.
But alas! a sad change he beheld with surprise,
Now, drooping and withering, before him all lies,
From the tall, stately Oak to the Lily's frail stem.
No account could be given what had happened to them.
E'en the Rose, queen of flowers, bent languidly down,
Unrefreshed by soft dews of the even and morn.
The king questioned of each, wherefore found in such case?
Each replied "that they envied some other one's place."
The Oak was too cumbersome, shady and high,
The Rose thought herself "useless," "so fleeting am I."
The Lily forgot the sweet lessons she taught,
Who "toil not nor spin," yet with loveliness fraught;
Were she but a Grape-vine, well loaded with fruit,
She might then have some hopes her owner to suit.
The Grape-vine was tired of dependance at last,
Discarding support, on the ground it was cast.
Her fruit was now worthless, and the king in despair,
Saw ruin impending on [illegible] once so fair,
When he spied a bright Hearts-ease, with cheer in its eye,
Mid its murmuring companions, retiring and shy.
"My dear little Heart's-ease, pray, why do you smile?"
"'Tis my mission," she said, "your cares to beguile.
You wanted me here, so I make it my plan
To be the best Heart's-ease that ever I can."
Here's a lesson, dear children, for you and for me,—
Be content with your station, whatever it be;
'Tis God who appoints it, then do with your might
What your hands find to do, and you're dear in his sight.

The Invitation.

Come unto me, ye weary,
The Savior smiling said;
Come unto me, ye hungry,
And feed on heavenly bread.

Come unto me, ye weary,
And drink of living streams;
Come, ye who dwell in darkness,
Where light eternal beams.

Come, ye who sit in darkness,
And I will give you joy;
Come, ye who live in sorrow,
Where sorrow ne'er shall cloy.

Come, ye who're sick of sinning,
And I'll your sins forgive;
Come unto me, ye dying,
Come, and forever live.

Come, ye who seek for riches,
My wealth can never fail;
All things are my possession,—
Go tell the wondrous tale.

Come, ye who seek for glory,
Seek that which cannot dim;
Seek not mid scenes of bloodshed,
Or in the haunts of sin.

Come, ye who have afflictions,
Cast your care upon the Lord,
And he will help you bear them—
He's promised in his word,

Those who in him do rest their hope,
Shall have a lasting home
(When present things are passed away),
In that bright world to come.

A Glance at our World.—No. 9.

We now copy the forcible language of G. B. Cheever on the state of Europe:—"Whether God be about to involve the nations of Europe in a complicated and dreadful war, or whether the selfish diplomacy of courts and cabinets shall work a present peace, there is matter already for solemn contemplation in the events and results thus far. There is that which looks very like positive and quick retribution for particular national sins, for being accessory to such crimes before and after the facts; and it is no new thing that God uses nations as his own hammer and battle axe on one another." Mark the language of God's chosen prophet when foretelling the destruction of mighty nations. Assyria shall destroy Israel, and they shall be destroyed for that very destruction; and Babylon shall be arrayed against both Egypt and Judah, and shall be God's triumphant servant for their overthrow, and they in turn shall be blasted forever. What then are we better than they? Selfish christian civilization and worship of Balaam [illegible] anti-christian and pagan? For three transgressions and for four would God level the thunder and lightning of his wrath against nations living under so much dimmer gospel light than ours, that in comparison it was utter darkness; and for three and four and forty transgressions shall we escape? Had his providences and end a meaning then that they have not now, or were the principles on which he governed the world different at that time and this? For national sins all down God has first warned by his chosen people; then if unheeded, retributive justice follows and cuts them down. God has borne long with our nation. Long has the wail of the poor friendless bondsman gone up to Thee, and we begin to feel the terrible effects of God's viddictive ire upon us as a hypocritical nation. We fear that this ire will not pause and spend its fury upon the South, but the North are guilty of sins which call loudly for redress, and unless there is humiliation, and that speedily, they are gone. God has spoken as audibly as he did to the Egyptians in reference to the sins of which they are so guilty. But they have gone on heedlessly, hugging their sins to their bosom, and now the ire of Him who warns not in vain is kindled, and he will make his might felt on this thrice guilty nation, living in the full blaze of gospel light, knowing the sin of human slavery,—it will evidently prove their guilty overthrow. We feel it. Men of eloquence have for years warned them of their downward progress, but it has no effect.

The present is truly a time of darkness and perplexity; a period in which wars and commotions are alarming the hearts of men. Since the astounding years of the French Revolution, no events of so significant and momentous a character have occurred in the civilized world as those now passing over this nation. The statesman, the politician and the merchant, are all equally at a loss to comprehend the present or to predict for the future of this nation; but they admit there is an element at work destined to break up the social fabric of our government.

All nations seem to catch the contagion of war, and the whole eastern heavens will soon be lit up with the reddening conflagration. France is eager to join hands with the South, and inviting England and Russia to consolidate, and thus crush out the only republic on earth. The budding fig-trees do not more clearly indicate the coming summer, than the present signs in- the soon coming of the King of Peace. Yes, the fuse is ignited, and will finally end in a terrible explosion among the nations. All things indicate it. God's word clearly defines the way for his followers to act in the emergency now crowding down upon them.

Let those who believe in war go to the scene of strife, but clear your skirts. Tell them of the awful consequences of those who take the sword, perishing by the same. The follower of Christ does not feel the spirit of war. Christ told them of old to conquer by love; and hence we deduce from this great fundamental fact, that those who at once grasp the rifle, and hie away for tented fields, are not imbued with the spirit of Christ. Oh! may the true church now awake and sound the last warning to fallen man, as they shall wish they had in the day of reckoning.

Remedy for Scolding.

Upon noticing a recipe for husbands, in the Transcript, the week one appeared in the Crisis for wives; and thinking great responsibility rests upon both classes, I extract the following recipe for husbands:

"Quite a sure remedy for scolding is to give no cause for scolding. Very few wives scold without cause, and to stop their scolding, stop the provocations. We cannot blame a wife for scolding when her husband only half provides for her, spends nearly all his time away from home, is particularly polite and attentive to any and every woman except his wife; never expressing himself pleased with anything she does, and is continually extolling the elegance, neatness, and economy of somebody else, is all life and gaiety in company, and drowsy and dull at home, speaking crustily to those around, and driving away what few gleams of sunshine might otherwise rest upon the brow of his toilsome, careworn wife."—Windham County Transcript.

We would not attempt to justify the above spirit of retaliation, whatever the provocation. Retaliation is unscriptural; consequently wrong; yet all must admit the extremely trying position of a wife,—one who knows the place she should occupy, the place scripturally assigned her in her husband's affection,—when she witnesses the bestowal of affection upon others, by her husband, to which she alone has claim. I regard that the commonness of this sin has occasioned the loss of its heinousness in the minds of some professing better things. May those looking for the Lord keep themselves so pure as to give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully in this respect.

From Fanny R. Calhoun.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say, that I have received your paper—the Crisis—and that for instruction and edification in Bible truth, especially the devotional portion of it (which to me has been of late of great interest), far excels any other I have seen, and is just what I want to help me to understand Bible truths more perfectly. The Lord has led me in a way that I knew not of.

Last winter Bro. H. Pratt, an Advent preacher, delivered a course of lectures on the prophecies, and preached from other portions of the Bible in New Preston. I heard him, and became interested. The Lord opened my heart to receive the truth in the love of it. I did not confer with flesh and blood, but immediately confessed the change in my religious belief before the church and congregation,—that believers were the only fit subjects for baptism, not infants; that sprinkling is not baptism; that we have immortality, eternal life, only through Christ, who is our only hope; by the rejection of whom we must suffer eternal death, which is the penalty of the law, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.

I have ever in thought believed in the personal coming of Christ to judge the world and raise the dead; but of what use was it, with the delusive hope that we possess an immortal soul that cannot die, which leaves the body at death to dwell in heaven forever happy, or in hell forever tormented? That deathless soul is the foundation-stone that error builds upon. Take that away, and almost the whole falls. O vain, delusive hope, that is built upon such a foundation! It cannot stand the test. It is contrary to the word of God. Yet men will preach it, and the people for the most part believe it.

Mr. J. Strong, in a sermon last winter, asserted that man was immortal as God was; and that to deny it was worse than infidelity; though he did not bring a single text of Scripture to prove his assertion. His design was to overthrow Bro. Pratt's teachings, but failed. The work progressed and is still progressing. June 22d, four were baptized.

From Sr. E. L. C.

Dear Bro. in Christ:—Through the instrumentality of a friend, I have been permitted for the last year to peruse your valuable paper, the Crisis; and, believing as I do that it is founded on Scriptural truths, I feel it my duty to encourage you in still circulating it far and wide, and to continue in your labor of love; for, in God's hands, it may be the means of doing much good, and saving many souls from death. Although my name is enrolled with another denomination, I love all who love the Lord, and I mean to labor in his vineyard wherever I am placed; and although the church to which I belong seem to think that I shall apostatize if I embrace these truths, I can truly say I never saw God's truth in so plain a light as now, and never felt a greater determination to serve him. I am willing to be despised, and to have my name cast out as evil among the popular professors of the day, if I can but serve and honor Christ. I know that all who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. It is as true to-day as when the inspired apostle spoke these words, and I feel willing to be called a fool for Christ's sake, if need be, knowing that my reward is at the end.

From Bro. H. B. Cross.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I think there is an increasing willingness, in some localities, to hear and read the truths of the kingdom at hand." Several ministers of the various churches in this vicinity seem to be awaking to the subject. One of them, a man of talent, and of the Congregational [illegible] said to me, a short time since, "The hope of the christian is in the personal coming of Christ; and we have come to the time when we may consistently look, daily, for that event." He instructs his people that they are not to expect the conversion of the world through their cherished plans for so doing, and preaches to them the "gospel of the kingdom." He said he felt the need of some small book or tract setting forth plainly and concisely the millennial truth, which could be scattered broadcast among the people.

He thought the time had come when people would read on the subject if properly presented. And said that much vital truth was rejected, or was not read by many honest christians, because the article, the tract, or the book, bore the imprint or signature of some individual, or society, against whom they had justly, or unjustly acquired a prejudice. I think we all know this is true to some extent.

The Orphan's Lament.

I wander in this vale of tears,
Of sorrow, sin and gloom,
I'm praying for deliverance,
And waiting to go home.

A Father, mother, sister dear,
And brother, all are gone,
They now are sleeping in their graves,
And I am all alone.

Yet not alone, my Savior's near,
He is the orphan's friend,
A Father to the fatherless,
He'll guide me to the end

If I am faithful to my God,
And do my Master's will,
He'll not forget me when he comes
The world with grace to fill.

He'll say—Well done, thou faithful one,
No more shalt thou depart,
But dwell forever with thy God,
And all the pure in heart

Notes by the Way.

June 25th, I bade adieu to the friends in Syracuse, and started for the land of my adoption. Had a pleasant passage across Lake Ontario. June 27th, 28th and 29th, attended the annual conference of the Church of God of C. W., which was held in Darlington. The gathering was large. Preaching good. All the sittings were harmonious. Hence the influence left on community was good. I immersed one mortal soul into the Christ for the remission of sins. Spent a few days with the church in Cartwright. Gave them five discourses. Good was done in the name of Jehovah. Visited the friends in Whitby. Had a good time in talking upon the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of his Anointed. Immersed one.

Visited the church in Brooklin. Gave eight discourses to attentive congregations. Had the honor of immersing five mortal souls into the Christ. Spent a week with the church of God in Toronto. Our congregation continued to increase during our stay. The congregation was large and intelligent, and better attention I never saw. I immersed two. One of them had been brought up in the Roman Catholic Church. I visited the church at Thorold and Gainsborough. Had a good time in presenting the truth.

August 2nd and 3d I held a barn meeting in the township of Clark. Gave them five discourses. Gathering large. Attention good. Truth took effect, and I had the honor of immersing four into the Christ for the remission of sins. Glory be to God that there is a power in the gospel. I visited the friends in Coburg. Had a good time. On the morning of the 5th, I bade them adieu for a short time. Had a sick time in crossing the Lake. Last Sunday I preached in Syracuse. Had a good time, and on the morning of the 8th of July, I was immersed into the Christ beneath the beautiful waters of Lake Ontario. It was the most delightful morning that I ever saw. Amen.

HIGH CHURCH, LOW CHURCH, AND EVANGELICAL.

Evangelical.—Two beans and two beans make four beans!

Low Churchman.—I beg your pardon, sir; but, according to my arithmetic, three beans and one bean make four beans.

High Churchman.—Gentlemen, I pity your stupidity and your ignorance; and I lament the mischief you are working in inculcating that but two parcels of beans can make four beans, while both history and geometry so clearly establish that it takes four separate and individual beans to make four beans.

Moral, founded on fact: While they disputed about the arithmetic of the ration, poor Lazarus died of starvation for want of the beans.

From Plymouth, Mass.

Dear Bre. and Srs.:—If my humble epistles can help you along in your pilgrimage journey, I shall rejoice in having a knowledge that my efforts are not made in vain. When I came to Plymouth, I had nought but a sling and a few pebbles, but going forward trusting wholly in the God of Israel, I have been enabled to witness great results. Since last September, we have held meetings every evening, with few exceptions, up to the present time. When I first came here, all the flock were scattered. My first duty was to go out into the streets, roads, lanes, by-ways, hills and valleys, to search for the sheep. Many were found much disheartened on account of past trials and difficulties, but by holding a little prayer meeting in each household, faith grew stronger, and the whole company in the course of six or eight weeks rallied to the call of their Master, and fought anew the battles of the Lord. As might be expected, sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and, as near as I can learn, fifty of these two classes of persons are now rejoicing in God.

Then came baptism. Here we had to labor earnestly. The result is, forty persons, eleven men and twenty-nine women, have been "buried with Christ in baptism," and others are to follow the example of Christ next Lord's day. Since I wrote last, we have had two baptisms; the first one, eight persons; the second, ten. Some of these persons have been professors of religion for years, but did not do duty in this direction until now. Quite a common objection urged against baptism is, "I am afraid that I shall not hold out." I answer this class of objectors by referring them to their exhortations to the unconverted, when they say, "repent to-night," or "to-day," "for you may not live to see the light of another day." Then I ask them if they have "a lease of life" in this present world more than the sinner. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. Be baptized now, for you do not know about seeing another week in this life. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Three of the number baptized have been Methodists, four were Presbyterians, and one Orthodox. All now rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

Our prayer and conference meetings are exceedingly interesting. They have been held every evening since last September. It is quite a common circumstance to have forty persons take part in one meeting. The brethren and sisters pray much, which accounts in a great measure for the interest manifested. In two of our meetings sixteen persons in succession implored God for his blessing. Last Sunday evening fifty-seven persons took part in the exercises, and we had over seventy-five prayers and exhortations, and in addition to these some twenty-five verses were sung. All this required but two hours' time. The brethren and sisters know the value of short exhortations and short prayers. All have an opportunity to take an active part in the work, and no one has an excuse for not laboring. Quite a number have been added to the church, and we can say from our hearts, it is the work of the Lord, and we rejoice in it. Six weeks ago we commenced holding out-door meetings, and they have proved a success. These meetings are largely attended by attentive audiences. Last Lord's day Bro. J. S. White preached on "the green" to a large audience, on "the two Adams." The entire town seems to be stirred, and the Lord opens the hearts of his children to receive me wherever I am called to labor. Of course I have encountered manifold temptations, a few trials, and some difficulties. I feel more and more the need of God's grace. Many of the children meet with a great amount of trials, and look to me for counsel. I have a "throne of grace" to go to, and there seek for and get wisdom from my heavenly Father. We are bound together by the strong cords of christian love, and pray that all may be "joint heirs with Christ" of "the inheritance." Many times my labors have been so arduous that I felt my bodily strength almost gone; but right there God gave me a "kid," and I have been strengthened for further exertions. I have more than one hundred families to visit, and my visiting territory is ten miles from one extreme end to the other. Sinners are under conviction, and scarcely a week passes but that we have some poor sinner or backslider brought back to Father's family.

Dear brethren and sisters, do not get discouraged. A year ago, affairs looked very unpromising here, but the children went to praying, and they took hold, held on, and would not let go "the throne of grace," and God has blessed, and is blessing them. Forgive one another, be tender-hearted and kind. Recollect the admonitions of Christ and the apostles. Give heed to them. Clear all rubbish, in the shape of contentions, disputings, variance, evil thoughts, worldliness and pride out of the way, and you will not have to wait long for an outpouring of God's blessings. The end is near. Sinners must perish. Do not quarrel amongst yourselves, and let them go on stumbling over your wickedness into destruction. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

Yours looking for Christ,

Aug. 11th, '62. F. N. Burbank.

Rules for Public Speaking.

We are enabled to recommend with confidence, the following rules to those who would be successful public speakers:—

1. Endeavor to possess yourself wholly of your subject.

2. Be calm and self-collected, and speak to the audience under a lively consciousness that they are expecting instruction and edification, and of the importance of acquitting yourself well.

3. Be sure you pitch your voice low enough at the commencement of your discourse. It will then find its natural tone as you proceed.

4. Let your enunciation of every syllable and, so far as possible, of the sound of every letter, be clear, and distinct, and you will then be heard and understood in every part of the largest hall, though your voice may not be loud.

5. Keep the lungs well inflated, and speak mostly by the movement of the abdominal muscles.

6. Let your voice be flexible, undulatory, and rythmic in its motion; and mind your pauses, emphases, and intonations, according to the nature of the subject, and the passions that are to be expressed.

7. Keep the mind well concentrated, and enter thoroughly into the spirit of the subject.

8. Keep the limbs flexible, and let gesticulation be prompted by the impulse of feeling. Then it will always be natural.

Let each public speaker drill himself to these rules, until their observance becomes natural and spontaneous; and if the matter of his communication is of interest and importance, he will not fail to acquit himself to the satisfaction of his audience.—Life Illustrated.

False Proverbs.

"A young fellow must sow his wild oats." In all the wild range of accepted British maxims there is none, take it for all in all, more thoroughly abominable than this one as to the sowing of wild oats. Look on it on what side you will, and I will defy you to make anything but a devil's maxim of it. What a man—be he young, old, or middle-aged—sows, that, and nothing else, shall he reap. The one only thing to do with wild oats is to put them carefully into the hottest part of the fire, and get them burnt to dust, every seed of them. If you sow them, no matter in what ground, up they will come, with long tough roots like couch-grass, and luxuriant stalks and leaves, as sure as there is a sun in heaven; a crop which it turns one's heart cold to think of. The devil, too, whose special crop they are, will see that they thrive, and you and nobody else will have to reap them; and no common reaping will get them out of the soil, which must be dug down deep, again and again. Well for you if, with all your care, you can make the ground sweet again by your dying day.

"Boys will be boys," is not much better. That has a true side to it; but this encouragement to the sowing of wild oats is simply devilish, for it means that a young man is to give way to the temptations and follow the lusts of his age. What are we to do with the wild oats of manhood and old age—with ambition, over-reaching, the false weights, hardness, suspicion, avarice—if the wild oats of youth are to be sown, and not burnt? What possible distinction can we draw between them? If we may sow one, why not the other?—From "Tom Brown at Oxford."

The true Gentleman.

The following sketch is called the portrait of a true gentleman. It was found in an old manor house in Gloucestershire, England, written and framed, and hung over the mantle piece of a tapestried sitting room:

"The true gentleman is God's servant, the world's master, and his own manly virtue is his business, study, recreation, contentment his rest and happiness, his reward. God is his Father, Jesus Christ his Savior, the saints his brethren, and all that need him his friends; devotion is his chaplain, chastity his chamberlain, sobriety his butler, temperance his cook, hospitality his housekeeper, Providence his steward, charity his treasury, piety his mistress of the house, and discretion his porter, to let in or out, as most fit. Thus is his whole family made up of virtues, and he is the true master of the house. He is necessitated to take the world on his way to heaven, but he walks through it as fast as he can, and all his business by the way is to make himself and others happy. Take him in two words—a man, and a christian."—Ex.

☞ When I was a young man, there lived in our neighborhood a farmer who was usually reported to be a very liberal man, and uncommonly upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends, observing him frequently doing so, questioned him why he did it—told him he gave too much, and said it would not be to his advantage. Now mark the answer of this excellent man. "God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when I am gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this. But one journey through the world!

A Keen Reply.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining, with great earnestness, the doctrine of Vox populi vox Dei against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum, and said,

"I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."

"Yes," she replied, mildly, "it cried, 'Crucify him! crucify him!'"

A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.

The Bible.—The Bible is all pure, all sincere, nothing too much, nothing wanting. How that can be called the church of Christ which is established upon laws which are not his, and which excludes such persons from its communion as he will one day receive into the kingdom of heaven, I understand not.—John Locke.

Little Nellie Green;

OR, GOOD FOR EVIL.

"I wish Annie Howard would never come to see me again: I hate her!" exclaimed little Nellie Green, as she came into the room where her mother was sewing, one bright summer afternoon after her little playmate had been to make her a visit.

"Why, Nellie!" said her mother, "I am surprised and grieved to hear you speak so. What has Annie done, to make you hate her? Come here and tell me all about it, my dear."

Nellie, with tearful eyes, looked up and said, "Why, mother, she is always teazing me in some way. If I want to play with anything, she snatches it away; if I don't give her everything she wants, she says I am 'selfish, to keep things to myself.' She tears my books carelessly; tumbles my things all up; and to-day she broke my beautiful new doll, and because I cried, she said I was 'a little booby and cry-baby,' and laughed at me. I wish somebody would break her playthings"; and again the tears burst forth.

"Annie, no doubt, has treated you badly, my child, and I do not wonder that you should feel grieved and hurt. But would my little girl be doing right to hate her, and wish her ill, because she does not treat you well? Would Jesus have you feel so? You said the other day, that you wished you were like Jesus, for he was so good. Do you think Jesus hated anybody, and wished evil upon them?"

"No, mother; he was all good, and loved those that hated him."

"And do you remember his words, which we read this morning, that you thought were so good, and in which he teaches us how we should treat those who ill-treat us?"

"Yes, mother, in his sermon on the mount, he said: 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.'"

"And now, my child, what will you do? Will you not try and be like Jesus, and do as he tells you? Perhaps you had better go into your little room now, and talk to God about it. If you ask him, he will help you to feel differently towards Annie, and find some way to make Annie do differently towards you."

Nellie kissed her mother, and did as she advised. Her mother did not see her again till tea time, when she was pleased to see that Nellie looked quite happy.

Nothing was said about Annie for two or three days, till one afternoon Nellie came running in, looking very happy, and exclaimed, "I have punished Annie Howard till I am satisfied. I guess she wont plague me any more!"

"Why, Nellie, what have you done?" inquired her mother.

"Done?" said Nellie, "why, I've burnt her!"

"Burnt her!" exclaimed her mother, "what do you mean, Nellie?"

"Well, mother," replied Nellie, "I thought of what it said in the Bible about heaping coals of fire on the head; and I've heaped coals of fire on her head, till I've burnt her well."

"What did you do?" inquired her mother, smiling.

"Why," said Nellie, "to-day Annie was walking along with a heavy basket of apples, which she had got in the orchard for her mother, and hitting her foot, she fell to the ground, scattering the apples in every direction. She began to cry bitterly, for she hurt her some, and I suppose she thought I would laugh at her. But Jesus helped me, and so I ran to her, and said, 'I am sorry you hurt you, Annie; don't cry any more, I will help you pick up the apples, and carry them home, too, for they must be heavy.' Annie only cried the more, and I thought she must have hurt her badly, and so I told her I would run for her mother. But she said, 'O no, you need not run for my mother—my falling did not hurt me much; it is you who hurt me, by being so kind, when I was so unkind to you the other day. If you will only forgive me, Nellie, I will try and do so no more. I suppose I was envious because you had more playthings than I; at any rate I was very wicked.'

"I kissed her, and told her I would forget it all; and then we picked up the apples, and I helped her carry them home, when she would have me go in, and we had a nice time. Every once in a while she would say, 'How naughty I was to you, Nellie, and now you are so kind!' I told her Jesus helped me, and he would help her, if she would only ask him. She said she would, for she was sure he must be good, and she should love him, if he made people do such good things, and forgive such naughty girls as she was. I kissed her again, and hurried home, for I was afraid you might be anxious about me."

The mother's eyes were full of tears, as she replied, "I am glad Jesus has helped my little girl to do right, and that she has followed his teachings. I hope you will always go to him for help"; and she tenderly kissed her.

My dear children, I trust you will try to follow the good example of little Nellie, when any of your mates are unkind to you, or injure you in any way. Try to do as Jesus would have you, and soon you will be with him, and dwell with him in glory forever.

A Child's Fable, versified.

A great king sought his garden, his pleasure and pride,
Where Art and where Nature together had vied
To make it eclipse in luxuriance and grace
All since Eden, our first parents' blest dwelling place.
But alas! a sad change he beheld with surprise,
Now, drooping and withering, before him all lies,
From the tall, stately Oak to the Lily's frail stem.
No account could be given what had happened to them.
E'en the Rose, queen of flowers, bent languidly down,
Unrefreshed by soft dews of the even and morn.
The king questioned of each, wherefore found in such case?
Each replied "that they envied some other one's place."
The Oak was too cumbersome, shady and high,
The Rose thought herself "useless," "so fleeting am I."
The Lily forgot the sweet lessons she taught,
Who "toil not nor spin," yet with loveliness fraught;
Were she but a Grape-vine, well loaded with fruit,
She might then have some hopes her owner to suit.
The Grape-vine was tired of dependance at last,
Discarding support, on the ground it was cast.
Her fruit was now worthless, and the king in despair,
Saw ruin impending on [illegible] once so fair,
When he spied a bright Hearts-ease, with cheer in its eye,
Mid its murmuring companions, retiring and shy.
"My dear little Heart's-ease, pray, why do you smile?"
"'Tis my mission," she said, "your cares to beguile.
You wanted me here, so I make it my plan
To be the best Heart's-ease that ever I can."
Here's a lesson, dear children, for you and for me,—
Be content with your station, whatever it be;
'Tis God who appoints it, then do with your might
What your hands find to do, and you're dear in his sight.

Amy.

The Soul's Inquiry.

Precious Savior! do I not
  Love thee more than all beside?
Would I like to Peter prove,
  If my faith were sorely tried?

Do I not in very truth
  Love to tread the narrow way?
Am I not in armor clad,
  And is not thy staff my stay?

Do I not thy people love,
  Wheresoe'er they may be found?
Do not prayer and praise to God
  Have for me a pleasant sound?

Do I not love sinners too,
  Madly rushing down to death?
Would I not, to win them back,
  Spend my very latest breath?

Dearest Jesus! I believe
  Thou art more than all to me;
I believe that I shall dwell
  Bye and bye in heaven with thee.

An Appeal.

"Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"—JER. 8: 22.

With all the anxious emotions of a parent's heart does the man of God make these inquiries,—as though a father, in viewing the rose fade from the cheek, the eye its lustre lose, and strength depart from a loved daughter, should exclaim, Is there no physician, no healing balm for my daughter? What if that father be told there is a physician, who could doubtless cure, but thy daughter is firm in refusing to follow his directions? Would not the heart of any parent give vent to feelings similar to those expressed in the verse following the inquiries—"Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the . . . . daughter of my people!"

How oft as I have looked upon the "daughter of my people" have feelings like the above been experienced, while their weak, sickly state is so evident. Alas! alas! there is a physician, but my people refuse to follow all his directions, and I fear death, spiritually, will end the struggle against sin, as it has already in numberless instances. O! ye blood-bought ones, why not apply for the balm that heals every wound, that allays the worst species of irritation, that cures the most putrefying sores, the most malignant maladies? Why not confide in the great Physician? He never betrays confidence reposed in him, and he has never lost a case. The lack of means need not hinder, for unlike other advertisements His read, without money or price, only strict obedience to his requirements and an entire cure is effected.

It may not be out of place to notice one or two of his requirements, which, if not adhered to, we may never expect to recover here or find at last that home where no inhabitant shall say, I am sick. "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." How hard to obey, yet how reasonable the requirement. There is nought on earth in its present state but is uncertain and passing away. Why weaken and debase our affections by placing them upon objects so unworthy and of so little permanency? How many bitter disappointments with crushed hopes might have been shunned had this direction been followed. Another cause of weakness and inability, especially among youthful daughters, arises from not heeding the strong caution against fearing man. "The fear of man bringeth a snare." Can we not in tracing this find one great cause of so few enjoying the liberty the gospel affords? Why are there so few among the young prepared to search out the longing, inquiring hearts, pointing to the great Physician, even the Lamb of God, slain for just such frail creatures? Is it because of the amount of care resting upon them, or because their time is so closely occupied? Ah! no. The fear of man exists; the voice of conviction has been stifled in this regard; holy resolves broken, until the Spirit, grieved, has taken its flight, and they have to confess with one of old, "I have sinned against the Lord, because I feared the people." Why do we for a moment indulge the desire to be like the nations around us, when God's curse anciently rested upon his people for this very thing? Why wish to conform to the world, a fire-doomed race, when inspiration forbids it, and when we see those once strong shorn of strength on this account?

My dear sisters, we cannot but witness the faithlessness and depth of vanity into which the daughters of our people have sunk. Shall we rush on with them, and help swell the current that is sweeping its thousands to inevitable ruin? or shall we stem the tide, thus saving ourselves, and possibly assist some struggling soul still breasting the waves, at times almost fainting at the strength of the current? The times demand firmness of character, decision of purpose, confidence in God. In a word, we need the strengthening balm our great Physician has provided, in order to become strong, that we may administer the reviving balm to the drooping spirits of others.

That we may obey every order so perfectly as to be strong in God and in the power of his might, is the prayer of JENNIE D. ROBERTS.

First Things.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

I have said that John Thomas, M. D., was the first who advocated pre-millennial views in a Journal in this country. Subsequent research proves this statement to be erroneous. Rev. Elias Smith, a Christian Baptist minister and founder of the denomination of Christians, had this honor, as well as the honor of first advocating in a paper the doctrine of eternal life through Christ alone; indeed, he published the first religious newspaper in the world. In Sept. 1st, 1808, Smith issued the first number of "The Herald of Gospel Liberty," a 4to of 4 pp. semi-monthly, at Portsmouth, N. H. It was afterward published in Portland, Me., and then in Philadelphia, Pa., but is now still continued with its original name at Newburyport, Ms., though its first enterprising editor has passed away. In the first number the editor observes:—"A religious newspaper is almost a new thing under the sun; I know not but this is the first ever published in the world." He afterwards repeats this statement in his Memoirs, or Life, written by himself. This pioneer pre-millennial Adventist was the author of several prophetical works now very scarce.

In the "Herald," Smith taught the following views now so earnestly advocated by most of our own people, by which it will be seen that fifty-two years ago, leading ministers in America were deeply imbued with our prevailing heresies—if heresies they be.

1. That all the celestial signs of our Lord's second coming, as foretold in Luke 21: 25, 26, had been already witnessed save the falling stars. Of this he wrote, "no doubt it will soon occur." It did occur in 1833.

2. That the four great earthly ruling monarchies prophesied of in Daniel were in the past, and the fifth divine abiding kingdom was at hand, when the whole world would be governed by a Jew—Jesus Christ.

3. That the Redeemer would come visibly and personally at the beginning of the millennium, to reign with his saints during that happy period on the earth.

4. That there would be two resurrections one thousand years apart; the millennial era of Rev. 20th being located between these two epochs,—the "first resurrection" to occur at the advent, when all the good will arise.

5. That immortality was God's free gift, to be inherited through Christ, and bestowed upon the just alone in their resurrection—all the wicked will finally utterly perish in the second death.

And all this in the first religious newspaper ever published in this country and in the world! Verily truth is not without some pre-eminence—some honor. And there is progress, for there are at the present time some eight or nine pre-millennial journals in the country, whose aggregate circulation amounts to over twenty thousand.

I regard these facts as significant and worthy of note, no matter who Elias Smith was or what he came to be afterwards. William Miller or John Thomas did not begin to write on the subject of the near second advent till a quarter of a century afterwards. And when they did, they were pronounced innovators and their doctrines novelties! Success to these first things.

Dansville, N. Y., Aug., 1860.

☞ The rule that all must agree in, must be one that is above all. Never will the church have full unity till the scripture sufficiency be more generally acknowledged. You complain of many opinions and ways; and many you will still have, till the one rule—the Scriptures—be the standard of our religion.—Richard Baxter.

Joyful in Hope.

BY R. V. LYON.

Beloved Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith:—I am rejoicing in the rock of my salvation. Never have I seen the time since I started in the service of God, that my confidence was stronger in my rock and fortress than it is at this moment. Glory be to God for the plan of redemption—a plan so arranged, that if man is saved, it will be by free grace; and if lost, the blame will rest upon his own head. And the best of all is, this redemption is soon to be completed, and tribulation will be ended, when the saints will range the hills of Zion, clad with immortality, bearing palms of victory, and striking the grand chorus, "Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!" To make their happiness more complete, sweet notes from Eden's feathered tribes, borne along on zephyr's stainless wing, will fall upon their ear in accents most melodious. Transporting thought! All glorious to the way-worn pilgrim whilst drinking deep from sorrow's bitter cup! I long for that glorious day to arrive.

Children of the heavenly King, and heirs to an immortal crown, lift up your heads, for redemption is at hand. We might as well doubt the being of a God as to doubt it. God is marshalling his army for the last great and decisive conflict. Soon the way will be fully prepared for the great battle of God Almighty to be fought. Yes, the day of separation is at hand, when the way-worn pilgrim shall receive the kingdom, take a part in its arrangement, share in its glory, bask forever amid the sunbeams of an endless day.

Brethren, are you poor? Remember that you have a rich Father, who has made you a joint heir to the kingdom of David, to earth restored, the fifth kingdom, which Daniel saw in vision. O ye desponding ones, lift up your heads, for ye are within hailing distance of the port of endless bliss. Ye who have suffered your eyes to become dim, for want of confidence in the testimony that God has given, that the old ship Zion is about to pass the last lighthouse, is now in sight of the city. Just take your gospel telescope, "walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof, mark ye well her palaces." The celestial city is fully in my view, its glories beam upon my soul, its odors are wafted to me; its music falls upon mine ear, and its spirit I have caught. Methinks I can see the chariots, the horses, and the riders, in heaven, preparing to accompany our King when he shall vacate the Father's throne and step into the chariot, whose wheels shall roll in fire down the burning pathway of the heavens. O, what an awful moment that will be to the hypocrite! But glorious to those who are ready and waiting for redemption.

Enlistments.

Seeing in the Crisis of Aug. 8th the order authorizing the arrest of persons discouraging enlistments, I thought I would endeavor to encourage six or eight hundred thousands of both sexes to enlist by giving promise of a good bounty; and the following proclamation seems pretty well suited for the purpose, as I am sure under existing circumstances there will be a vast many involved, and some of the readers of the Crisis and Millennial Harbinger among the number.

"And every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, gathered themselves unto him, and he became a Captain over them." 1 Sam. 22: 2.

All sinners who are in distress, in debt, and discontented with their present condition, and are willing to serve his Majesty, Jehovah, in the royal regiment of saints commanded by the truly Honorable, the Lord Jesus Christ, and in Captain Immanuel's company; let them repair to the sound of the gospel, or to his quarters at the sign of the Lamb's Inn, in the city of Zion, or New Jerusalem, where the company now lies; where they will be kindly entertained, enter into present pay and free quarters; and the very moment they enlist they shall be adopted into the royal family, and made sons and heirs of the matchless kind, and in consequence thereof shall receive a kingdom that cannot be moved. Wherefore it is to their advantage to serve with reverence and godly fear, and for their further encouragement they shall have to drink wine and milk without money and without price. And as soon as they shall join their respective regiments, they shall receive all new clothes, such as will never wear out, with arms of the best quality, and which makes the person invincible who wears them, when kept in proper order.

A list of the armor is found in the 6th chapter of Ephesians; and the Captain wishes all his soldiers to have on their full regimentals at all times, because their enemies are numerous and powerful, and likely to come upon them like a flood. These accoutrements, when properly used by those who are well disciplined, are quite sufficient to withstand all the fiery darts of the wicked ones, and are all that are necessary for a christian soldier.

Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift!

THOMAS HARROLD.

Be far from me vanity, folly and lies;—
Lord, make neither riches nor poverty mine;
But feed me with food which thy bounty supplies,

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

P. 129. "So in sin there is death. As soon as sin stepped in, separating between God and man,—as soon as his end, to become creatural personality, was frustrated, so soon a bar was placed between immortality and man. The life of man was forfeited now to the power of death. Though the Spirit remained, yet instead of the living God, he (the spirit or mind) only could accept of an empty world of shadows, and in this way could not open any more a fountain of life for man, which could stream through—to quicken him, that he might not in a drying up and withering condition at last be delivered up to the destiny of a lifeless being. He could not any more as a personality take hold of the life-power of God, could not any more make it his own; the life remained out of man, it came not into him as his property; he only remained perfect revelation of the nature of God, of the natural life, in his kind; perfect revelation of the personality of God he could not be. So the spirit could not make man any more a pneumatikos (a spiritual, pure, holy and innocent being). He was directed merely upon his own life-power (psuchikos). Yes, because nature, which the God-bereaved spirit could not any longer resist, drew him with stronger and stronger bands into itself, he had become sarkikos (fleshly—earthy.

This is illustrated in John 15: 6. The branch, separated from its vine, that gives to it life, withers, because it has no life-power of its own. And when it is withered, the natural consequence is, that it becomes a prey to annihilation (eis pur ballousi kai kaietai); for the nature of the branch which has yet life in it, makes the burning impossible; but that which is withered becomes naturally a prey to the flames. So is the man, who is separated from Christ, who has no access to God, which is alone in him, a lifeless branch, which must perish or be burned, because it suits his nature. (Death now has power over him.)

. . . . Page 150. "With the death of the body, man is destroyed. The organization in which he was created, which gave him among all the rest of living beings a peculiar position, is destroyed; the spirit of life, which made the body the organ for the spiritual soul, is withdrawn,—leaving the same powerless being confined upon herself and her own life-fountains. Man should be a representation of the personal as well as the life-revelation of God; he should unite nature with personality. Without the body, only one part of his end can be accomplished, and even this is shut up in sin. Man is not altogether a spiritual being, so he must, if he necessarily becomes such, apprehend this as something which is in direct opposition to his designation. The Bible does not teach that a soul is enveloped with a body, but that a body is animated. (Gen. 2: 7—compare 1 Cor. 15: 46.)

So the death of the body cannot be considered as a deliverance of the soul, but it must next appear to us as a withdrawing of the organ, upon and through which the soul operates. So death is depriving; it places the soul into a state of inactiveness and powerlessness.

From the moment of death, therefore, we have to consider body and soul—both separate. The fate of the body, according to daily observation, is not difficult to be stated. It decays, i. e., it dissolves into those particles out of which its organism has been composed, and these form into new compositions, which the imparting of the spirit of life causes to become new living beings. Of more importance however is the question: What becomes of the spiritual soul? If the soul were but a power, which developed itself under certain presuppositions from the body, so that it would be conditioned by it (the body), the question would not allow a doubtful answer; the soul in this case would cease to be, as soon as the body would decay; as with the musical instrument the sound ceases, so would the soul cease to be, were she to lose her organ.

But this the Bible denies peremptorily. Already at the creation the spiritual soul is something which is added, not developed from the body; the whole Old Testament silently presupposes, that man still exists, even if the body is decayed; the New Testament view of the soul however is concentrated in the words of Christ (Matt. 10: 28), that whoever would kill the body, could not at the same time kill the soul. This case therefore does not come into account here. The soul has been as well as the body produced by a special communication of the spirit of God,—the fate of the soul is, as long as she is yet able, to be in any point representation of the divine personality, of the holy love,—not to perish, in case that the body becomes unfit, to be representation of the divine life-revealing power.

But different is now the question, whether the soul does not as well as the body, after both are separated, decay and perish. This seems to follow from the view, that the soul does not bear within herself immortality,—that she can live herself out. But more closely examined, this is not at all the case. If man had a soul without spirit, like the animal, which like the body belongs into the sphere of the first creation, then with the connection being ceased, in which only she can have action or existence, her organ having ceased, she would also go back into the organism of nature, because the cause of her individual existence is no more. . . . In this case we would answer the question: whether the soul of man would not in like manner as that of the animal, perish, in the affirmative.

But because the soul of man is spiritual, we must answer in the negative. As for the not-spiritual soul with the body all existence ceases, she having at that moment lived herself out, there remains to the spiritual soul, even after she has given up the body, enough causes of existence. The whole sphere of the supernatural, spiritual, is yet open to her, even if she cannot feel the life itself—God—within her any more, the mind is yet able to open to itself—even without the body—fountains of creatural life even there, where the principal fountain is not accessible. There presents itself yet in the spiritual soul a personal revelation of God, however imperfect it may be. Only where God is excluded entirely, there no revelation whatever of the personality of God would any longer be in her. So there remains yet nourishment for her to keep her from living herself out. But this is the only thing which can make an end even of her, and so she will remain, as long as there are yet fountains of nourishment open to her, which flow to her even without mediation of the body, so long as she still offers any point of communication to the personal revelation of God.

If therefore the spiritual soul cannot be immortal, having not united herself with God, nevertheless she has the power to live on even without the body; whoever kills the body cannot also kill the soul. Yet the spiritual soul, separated from the body, which mediated to her the access to nature, being separated from God, of whom to have any susceptibility sin has made her entirely unfit, is now in a state of death. She might by a continual preservation in this state be eternal, but according to the life within her not immortal. If she was to endure forever, it could only be done by the Almighty God keeping her in this state through his power, not leaving her entirely separated from his life; or where she separated herself entirely, open to her according to his power other fountains. As long as these fountains would flow, she would in a state of dreamy separation hang to the shadow of the natural world, which she would bear within her, and to the spiritual, out-of-God world, in a state of lifeless being.

But when once that nature—organization, on which there may yet hang that which is ungodly, suffers destruction, in order to become a new, pneumatical (spiritual) one, on which there can hang nothing, but what is united to God;—when once those spiritual powers, that are out of God, will be destroyed in the fire of the divine wrath, so that even they cannot offer any more hold or support,—then the hour will have come, where death has worked itself out, where the spiritual soul, being deprived of even the last supports to which she clung, being empty of the divine as well as the natural life,—must experience the last act of death, the second death,—that moment, where the soul with the spirit suffers destruction, because they are deprived of all life-power,—where they suffer annihilation in the same way in which the body is destroyed by fire, or in the grave by worms;—a process against which there is no remedy,—because all power of the soul is exhausted,—a process which is involuntary and desperate,—as the soul would like to cling to something, and yet finds nothing,—an everlasting fire, a never-dying worm, which no efforts of the soul can ever hope to escape from. When such a moment will arrive, then the soul is not eternal."

"Judgment to Come."

Paul reasoned concerning a final judgment,—not concerning a judgment now in session, but a "judgment to come." Judgment includes both the passing and execution of a sentence, either for or against a person. Hence, a "judgment to come" implies the arrival of a time when a sentence is to be passed upon saint and sinner; and a sentence cannot be executed BEFORE being passed; and as the sentence in favor of the saint is his final reward in glory, and the sentence against the sinner is his reward in hell; it follows that the reward of both saint and sinner is subsequent to the judgment. Then, as our reward is the result of the decision made at the judgment, and consequently cannot precede the judgment, what is the chronological location of this "judgment to come?" Christ says,—"The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him [when?] IN THE LAST DAY."—John 12: 48. Consequently, there is no reward for saint or sinner prior to the "LAST DAY;" therefore all this speculation about a home of felicity for the saint before the "last day," or about a home of fire, or state of irrevocable oblivion for the sinner prior to the "last day," is subversive of the Divine plan. Let God's plan stand. Let the judgment come first, and let the [illegible] e as the result of the judgment, and let the judgment come at the right time, namely, "in the last day," and all this talk about present reward in heaven, hell, or oblivion, then would cease.

A Glance at our World.—No. 10.

We now hasten to a conclusion. Though our views may be scattered, we have tried to present them in a tone of warning. All must agree that we are living in a remarkable period of this world's eventful history, —"an age on ages telling." Coming events are said to "cast their shadows before" them; if so, what startling realities lie in the future. It does not require "a prophet, or the son of a prophet" to divine their character. This is an age of confederacies, political, social, and religious. New elements are daily evolved from the great moral laboratory. New combinations are decomposed, that the elements may enter into new formations, according to the laws of affinity. Without a nomenclature no one can keep up with the age. To the student of prophecy, these combinations have their meaning. With his chart before him, he has a distinct view of the entire field of battle. He can locate the extraordinary movements of the day and determine their relative positions. Before the danger comes, he sees it, and has at hand the means of escape. He is calm and composed beneath the smile of his heavenly Father. He views the gathering of the stormy elements, and the threatened judgments of Jehovah do not terrify him, for he sees through the black gathering tempest the enchanting smile of a friend, a brother, and hears distinctly above the awful thunders roll the sweet tones, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." In his visions, the horrors of the battle-field are contrasted with Eden's bowers,—the scattering of the few despised followers of Christ through the waste howling wildernesses of this sorrowing world, to the general assembly and church of the first born, as hymning praises amid the verdant groves of the new earth. With such animating scenes in view, why, oh! why should the christian be cast down?

God continually keeps whispering in thy ear, press on, do not be disheartened. Though the storm gathers with all its concentrated fury before it settles into that quiet calm; though the thunders rock in mighty convulsion the very globe beneath them, dividing great Babylon into "three parts," shaking the nation, and sinking the islands and mountains, we shall receive a kingdom that cannot be shaken. How pleasing, how enrapturing the anticipated day, when the upheaving elements of this world's political strife and worldly ambition shall give way to the peaceful, quiet reign of the Messiah. We call upon all classes to carefully consult once more the great chart of empires—the visions of Daniel and John. They disclose events of deep significance to us, now living on the very extremity of this narrow isthmus, ready to launch away on that vast ocean of eternity. May not the severe rebuke of Christ to the Jews fall unheeded on our ears,—"O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

The times are truly ominous. No reflecting mind can view the events now transpiring, without a degree of solicitude and inquiry. "What is the world coming to?" is asked on every hand. They consult the spiritual mediums to decipher the mysterious writing on the walls. These lying spirits read of a millennium far away. They constantly echo, "better days are coming," but, alas! they come not. The simple-hearted child of God finds clean proof that the great battle of God Almighty is at hand. O seek for that better land, the land for which all men of God have striven. That land where no tears or death are known; those mansions full of heavenly glory, which will be shared by all God's people; no matter from what clime they come, or to what nation they belong; all will unite in the victor's song. All sorrows will then be over.

Trust on, fight on, christian; the strife is nearly ended. Soon the welcome notes will be heard, Come home!

O come! for the weary are looking for thee,
The captive is moaning in chains to be free.

Murder! Murder!

"Hath he not murdered our mothers—
  Brought their grey locks to the tomb?
Hath he not murdered our brothers—
  Yet in their manhood's bloom?
Hath he not coiled on our hearthstones,
  Hissing with Upas breath?
On! on to the warfare, brothers!
  Nor cease till he writhes in death."

"Liquor shops are places where men are maddened by poison[illegible] and adulterated liquors, from which come assaults, and violence, and the disturbance of the peace of neighborhoods; a great portion of crime, in all its phases, and of every nature, has been, and is, superinduced by the use of intoxicating liquors."

That this is a correct judgment, no man who is at all acquainted with the city of New York, can pretend to deny. It costs us at least two millions of dollars per annum, in direct taxation, to guard the city against those, who, but for the groggeries, might be orderly citizens. And what do we get in exchange? A vast accession of pauperism and crime, which perpetuates and increases the expense. Almost the entire police establishment is made necessary by the dram-shops. We would like to know, if any other business that bore in this manner upon tax-payers would be tolerated for a month? The expense is borne, almost to the last dollar, by those who are utterly opposed to the use of stimulating drinks, and who know so well what they are about, that those of them who are in active business, will not tolerate a drop on their premises. And yet, for the filthy gains of the dram-sellers, we suffer this enormous abuse, and the demoralization of our city besides.

Suppose that the use of arsenic and opium should become as general and excessive in this country as the use of alcohol. Who would question, not only the right, but the duty of the legislature to interfere and restrain the sale?

Extract

FROM A LETTER WRITTEN AUG. 12TH, 1862, BY ELD. S. A. CHAPLIN.

The following is such a clear conception of the prophetic page in the light of present fulfillment, that we think it cannot fail to thrill the believer. E. S. W.

"The last tempest is gathering. The murky mantlings of the terrible storm-cloud are shrouding the heavens. 'Tis discharging its elements of wrath on our idolized Union, and the 'Great Republic' is revolutionizing. Its whirlwind fury will extend from 'one end of the earth to the other,' and spread its surface with unlamented, ungathered, unburied slain. The end of boasted military glory is—to rot above ground! The Great Image stands in relievo on the foreground of history, and looms to heaven toward the setting sun. On the prophetic page, marked in basso relievo, in eternity's Aurora, rises the mountain of God. A stone is detaching near its summit! 'Twill soon be in collision with the Empire monument, and earth will feel the shock from centre to circumference."

☞ Prayer, to make it accepted, requires neither genius, eloquence, nor language; but sorrow for sins, faith and humility. It is the cry of distress, the sense of a want, the abasement of contrition, the energy of gratitude. It is not an elaborate string of well-arranged periods, nor an exercise of ingenuity, nor effort of the memory; but the devout breathing of a soul struck with a sense of its own misery, and of the holiness of Him whom it is addressing; experimentally convinced of its own emptiness, and of the abundant fulness of God.

GOOD-BY.—Few people think of the full import of these words, in using them. Very few know the origin of them. The phrase is a contraction of the religious expression: "God be with you."

The Contrast.

Bro. Grant:—Some family correspondence has been lately shown me, and the contrast is so great between the views and aims of the two, and so illustrative of the fallen state of the popular ministry and also of the case of fortifying ourselves against their attacks when we buckle on the whole armor of God, that I have begged the privilege of copying them for the Crisis. The letters are, first, from a devoted sister, (who has lately embraced the ancient faith,) written by her son, by her dictation, to her brother, who is a popular Methodist minister. Second, his reply to the boy—his nephew. Third, the sister's rejoinder, which has not yet been replied to. I. C. Wellcome.

"Dear Uncle:—Mother wanted me to write you a few lines to inform you that we are all well, and to inquire about your health and prosperity. I was twelve years old last December. This is the first letter I have ever written. Father and mother have embraced "the faith once delivered to the saints." Mother says that if you believe the Bible, she does not see how you can believe in eternal torment, and a sky kingdom, for the Bible teaches no such doctrine; and God's word admits of no improvement. The Bible contains no such expressions as 'never dying soul,' 'deathless spirit,' 'immortal soul,' &c. Such language is the word of man, not the word of God. The word of God teaches that man is one—not a double entity, therefore man in death is unconscious. The Psalmist says, 'The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence.' Paul teaches that the saints will be all perfected together at the coming and kingdom of Christ, when the whole household of faith is made up; when the righteous dead are raised, and the living saints are changed. The wicked have no promise of life; they are represented as being 'destroyed,' 'consumed' 'burned up,' to 'perish,' to be 'devoured,' to 'be as though they had not been.' They 'shall be as nothing,' 'a thing of naught.'

The similitudes by which the wicked are represented are 'thorns,' 'briers,' 'tares,' 'stubble,' 'trees,' and 'chaff.' These being all combustible articles, are all consumed by fire. Yea, the righteous shall tread down the wicked, for 'they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.' These figures can never be reconciled with the eternal conscious existence of the wicked; 'but the fearful and unbelieving, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.' 'I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word.' Mother says she would be glad to have you and aunt —— make us a visit. We all send our love to you. Please write soon." ****

S——, March 4th, 1862.

REPLY BY THE MINISTER.

Dear Nephew:—I was pleased with your letter, because it informs me that you and your dear parents are well. I am specially pleased with your penmanship; it is certainly commendable in a lad of your age; and if you are industrious, I see not why you may not excel in the science of penmanship. Please say to your mother, that she is doing her boy infinite wrong by infusing such dangerous and delusive dogmas into his tender and facile mind. With a mind filled with such ideas as your mother has dictated in your letter, you can never be eminent, nor popular as a civilian, or in any of the learned professions, nor gain a position among honorable and distinguished persons, though your mind may be ever so precocious and ripe. More than this; she is bereaving you of a sufficient moral standard, and paving your way to an ignominious and viscious life, and dishonorable, if not untimely death. She is successfully preparing your mind for the grosser forms of infidelity. The instruction and influence of the parent are not the crime of the child, yet frequently prove a terrible misfortune, and become the prime cause of very disastrous consequences. The false notions which your mother seems to be instilling into your tender mind are calculated to dwarf your intellect, cripple your energies, and crop the wings by which you might soar to influence and the summit of honor and goodness. The sentiments in your letter are altogether to puerile for a matured intellect; and at the same time too premature for a child like my darling nephew. If you had written about your plays, your toys, your mates, your school, and little brothers and sisters, I should have been more interested and entertained; and would have adapted my letter to your capacity. Now write me again, and write a child's letter, and I will answer it sure. Give our tenderest regards to your dear parents, and say to them, we shall expect a visit from them the earliest opportunity. * *

M——, March 10th, 1862.

REJOINDER.

Dear Uncle:—Mother wishes me to write you another letter for her, to inform you that we received your kind letter. We are all well at present. You wrote in your letter that mother was 'doing her boy infinite wrong by infusing such dangerous and delusive dogmas into his tender and facile mind.' Now if the teachings of the Bible are dangerous, and the word of God delusive, in whom shall we trust? In whom shall we hope for eternal life? Has not our Savior said, 'Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth'? Did not the 'Lord God say unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, 'Lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.' 'And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and I will be their God.' Was not the promise renewed to Isaac, and to Jacob, and to David? And does not Stephen say, that 'he gave him none inheritance in it, no not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child?' Did not Peter say, 'Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the Patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day; . . . . for David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool?' Paul, in speaking of the patriarchs and prophets, says, 'These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were pilgrims and strangers on the earth.' 'Women received their dead, raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection . . . . They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword, they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (of whom the world was worthy;) they wandered in deserts and in mountains, and in dens, and in caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us (Gentiles,) that they without us should not be made perfect.'

Did not Moses when he was come to years' refuse 'to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater richer than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward?' Has not David said, 'The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace?' 'The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever?' John says, the righteous will say, 'Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth.' Daniel says, 'The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.'

When the seventh angel sounds, great voices in heaven will say, 'The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever.' 'Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice, from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this.' Now, 'let God [illegible] but every man a liar.'

You wrote in your letter, 'with a mind filled with such ideas as your mother has dictated in your letter, you can never be eminent, as a civilian, nor popular in any of the learned professions, nor gain a position among honorable and distinguished persons.' Our Savior has said, 'Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. But woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.' Jesus says, 'How can ye believe which receive honor one of another, and seek not that honor that cometh from God only?' Now, dear brother, I believe the Lord of life and glory is soon coming. All signs speak it. They are clear and unmistakable. The harvest is nearly ripe. Let us be ready to meet Jesus.

And now, dear brother, in regard to my boy, I hope he will love the Lord, and seek to know him whom to know aright is life eternal; and love God's word, keeping his commandments. We all send our love to you and family. From your sister, * * *

S——, Me., March 27th, 1862."

The above needs no comment to show which of the two, the minister or his sister, has the Bible hope.

I. C. Wellcome.

Book Notice.

At the meeting of the Chris. Pub. Society, held Aug. 28th, 1862, the subject of a hymn book to meet the wants of the Advent churches was introduced, and freely discussed. It is now ascertained that there is a desire for a book of convenient form, without the musical department, thereby reducing the price in all probability to about 31 cts.

As we have been supplied with the Christian Lyre, published by Bro. J. V. Himes, therefore as a preliminary arrangement to further action on the subject, a committee of three was appointed to confer with Bro. H. and communicate the probability of such a book being issued. S. S. Brewer, D. T. Taylor, and H. L. Hastings being appointed, had an interview with Bro. Himes, perfectly satisfactory to both parties.

To those who feel an interest and anxiety in the matter, we would state that the subject will, in all probability, be duly considered and reported through the Crisis at an early day.

S. S. Brewer, Chairman of Committee.

☞ The average of human life is thirty-three years. One-quarter die before the age of seven, one-half before the age of seventeen. To every thousand persons one only reaches one hundred years and not more than one in five hundred will reach eighty years.

There is on the earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants. Of these 333,333,333 die every year, 91,824 every day, 7,789 every hour, and 60 every minute or one every second. These losses are balanced by an equal number of births.

☞ Always dwell on the brighter aspects of life. He who goes into his garden to seek for cobwebs and spiders, no doubt will find them; while he who looks for a flower may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Sept. 10, 1862.

☞ Please remember to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—G.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

Our great annual gathering on Camp-Hill, at Wilbraham, is now among the things that were; but its blessed effects are not ended, but are spreading a hallowed influence in a continually widening circle.

The Ground

is pleasantly situated on a hill, overlooking a wide-spread landscape, interspersed with well-regulated farms, neat cottages, shady groves and running streams. It is a spot sacred to many of Zion's pilgrims, who have found Camp-Hill as an oasis in the desert, watered with the dews of heaven, cooling spring waters to quench the thirst of the weary traveler as he sits down in heavenly, social cheer, to talk of the wayside scenes, and the happy land beyond.

The Meeting

has been the largest ever held at Wilbraham, and one of deep interest and great profit to the children of the coming King. It was a feast to our eyes to see so many of the dear saints, with whom, in former years, we have taken sweet counsel, while on pilgrimage to the land of promise. Such hearty greetings, such out-gushing christian affection are rarely seen in this world; especially in these last days. While the world at large is filled with war and bloodshed, hatred, wrath, revenge; the disciples of Jesus are going further and further in the opposite direction. There were very clear indications that the bride is getting ready for the marriage of the Lamb. Those who have been known as devoted christians for years, requested prayers that they might be more like Jesus. Others who have been trying to serve the Lord, but have indulged in some bad habits, as the use of tea, coffee and tobacco, renounced them forever, and resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to save the money thus wasted, and consecrate it, with themselves, to the Lord. One man came up, after breaking off these habits, and said, "Now I am going to be a paying subscriber to the Crisis." Before this he had not felt able to pay for it, but he now thought it was worth more than his tobacco. Jewelry, flowers, and other foolish ornaments were laid aside, and many became more anxious to appear well dressed in the sight of the Lord, than in the estimation of his enemies. They began to realize that the bride must be without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," if accepted at the great marriage feast. In some degree, they are aware if they conform to this world, they must give up all hope of the coming kingdom, and perish with the wicked. The vanities and follies of worldly professors were seen in their true light by many who have been led astray by them, and they have seen the necessity of a full separation from them, or from Christ. A goodly number made the happy choice, and received "great peace." When they gave up all for Jesus, they found him truly precious. Others are still trying to serve God and mammon, having just religion enough to make them miserable. They are very conservative,—wish to please the world and the Lord too, be "respectable" among the enemies of the cross, because their associates are there; yielding to Satan's great device of these last days, which is to make people think it is of but little consequence what we believe, if we only live about right—as well as others—at the same time being very liberal towards every one, and not interfering at all with their religious opinions. In short, they wish every one to let them alone, and they will agree to let all think as they please, making no inquiries on either side. Satan well knows if he can persuade people to adopt this course, that he can produce stagnation and death in the cause of Christ, stop all genuine revivals, and put the church into a profound sleep; thus neutralizing all its influence, and rendering it unfit to meet the coming Bridegroom. Against this policy, the Savior has given us special caution, requesting us to exhort "one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching," in order that we may not be found sleeping when he comes. We thank the Lord that some begin to see the device of the devil, and are breaking the spell by which they have been bound. A good work has been accomplished at the campmeeting in this direction. Many who came in an indifferent state have gone away to be in earnest in the cause of Christ. They are truly aroused to a sense of the dangers that now surround the christian's pathway. They have gone forth illumined with heavenly light, filled with earnest zeal, and a stirring message to arouse, if possible, a wicked world and sleeping church to the great truth that the King of kings is about to visit this planet, and set up his everlasting kingdom. Theirs is a high calling, and may the Lord speed them on their way, and give them great success.

In giving a further description of our great meeting, we would say that on Saturday, Aug. 23d, six tents were up.

Sunday 24th, a goodly number of Brn. and sisters came together with the people in the surrounding neighborhood, and we had a good day in the Lord. We were cheered with the presence of Bro. and Sr. Brewer, whom we had not seen in a long time. We found them strong in the Lord, and rejoicing in hope of speedy deliverance from this world of sorrow and bloodshed. Also Bro. Henry Pratt, a faithful watchman upon the walls of Zion, Bro. L. Boutell, Bro. and Sr. A. M. Higgins, Bro. Geo. A. Streeter, all of whom are true yoke fellows in the gospel of the kingdom. Bro. Brewer preached in the morning, and the writer in the afternoon. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us, and we felt it good to be there. The best of order prevailed, and people went away solemnly impressed that the day of the Lord was at hand. In the evening, we had a good prayer meeting in the Boston tent. One requested prayers.

Monday, 25th. This was a busy day. At night thirty-three tents were up. Interesting prayer meetings were held in different tents, which were truly refreshing to the weary pilgrims. All seem to be fully satisfied that "the end of all things is at hand," and that what is done for the salvation of our fellow men, must be done quickly.

Tuesday 26th. The weather was lovely, and it seemed as though our Heavenly Father was bestowing special blessings upon us, that we might have a very profitable meeting. Bro. L. Boutell preached an interesting sermon in the morning, on the literal coming of Christ. He made the subject plain, and confirmed his position with strong arguments and positive scripture, harmoniously presented. We did not see how any one could differ from the speaker, without denying the word of the Lord. Bro. D. T. Taylor preached in the afternoon. Subject—"Souls under the altar." He showed that the view held by those who claim that these souls were disembodied ones in heaven is entirely unscriptural; and not in harmony with the account given of the events under the fifth seal, where these souls are mentioned.

At 4 o'clock, P. M., the Advent Christian Association met to transact the business appropriate for their annual meeting. As the Sec. of the Association will give a report of the doings of the meeting, it is not necessary to give one in this connection.

Tuesday evening. Bro. Israel Damman preached. We were not able to be present at the stand, but learned it was a good discourse, well adapted to the wants of the people.

Over fifty tents are up, and several more yet to be erected. There are more people on the ground now than we usually have on Saturday. They are here from Canada, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and intervening States. Many think this is the last time we shall be permitted to assemble at "Camp Wilbraham," before the coming of Christ. We were rejoiced to find that nearly all peacemakers, who have forever laid aside their carnal weapons. They are all true Union men, armed with the "armor of God," fighting for a kingdom, in which there will be no rebels. It was a most pleasing sight to behold so many of the dear saints together, and hear their exhortations, prayers and songs, as they sweetly echoed through the verdant grove. It seemed like another world—the ante-chamber to paradise—when contrasted with the spirit of the world around. Truly the ground is a hallowed spot, that yields a pleasing remembrance to many soldiers of the cross. We have not room for a full report of the meeting this week.

The War.

It will be seen from the news in other columns, that the Rebels have been regaining what they have lost. The Union troops are now back to Washington, and the Rebels are at Manassas Junction. Says the Boston Journal, of Sept. 5th:—

"The third campaign against Richmond has failed—for it is best to call things by their right names. The first attempt ended with the battle of Bull Run; the second with the series of battles before Richmond; and the third with the heavy fighting from the Rappahannock back to the neighborhood of Centreville. Once more our army is gathering within the defensive lines of Washington, and Gen. McClellan resumes command, as if a year ago had come back again."

There is now no more prospect of the close of the war than there was one year since. One thing is certain,—the war is using up men and money at an alarming rate. Who can describe the horrors of war! A dark cloud hangs over our once happy land. The Lord has evidently hidden his face, and left men to act out their perverse natures, "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." As they will not heed his instruction, they are left to "believe a lie," and follow the teachings of demons, who are about "to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Let us be true to the Captain of our salvation, obeying all his orders, if we expect him to save us when he comes.

Camp Sandisfield.—We purpose to attend the campmeeting in Sandisfield, (see notice) and hope to see a large gathering of christian pilgrims, with whom we have met in former days. We shall expect a very profitable meeting. We have but a little more time to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. Let us improve the flying moments.

The Last Number.—This is the last number of the present volume. We trust that our kind patrons will overlook our faults that may mar the history of the past, and pray for us that we may be wiser and better in time to come. We have endeavored to do the best we could, but hope to profit from experience, and, by the help of the Lord, be more successful in the future. We hope every reader of the Crisis will make an extra effort to obobtain new subscribers. This is the time for work. By an earnest effort much may be accomplished, and many more may be persuaded to prepare to meet the Lord. We are receiving many cheering letters from members of other churches who are obtaining light on the great truths of the Bible by reading our paper, which some one has lent them. Come, brethren and sisters, let us make one grand united effort to spread a knowledge of the "blessed hope." Soon it will be too late.

Date Changed.—It will be noticed that we have changed the date of our paper from Wednesday to Tuesday. When we first moved the Crisis to Boston it frequently happened that it was not printed till Wednesday; but our system is now so perfected, that we hope to be able to send it to press every Tuesday afternoon.

It is the usual practice to date papers in advance. For instance, some of our exchanges received on Monday, are dated the following Saturday. We prefer to date our paper the day we send it to the press, which is now on Tuesday afternoon of each week. It is sent to the post office Wednesday P. M., leaving the city Thursday morning.

The Petition.—All who wish to sign the petition, should send their names at once. When the time arrives for drafting, we hope to receive mercy at the hand of the government. It can do no harm to ask for it. Let none but true men join the regiment of the saints. Nine months service will not answer, it must be during the war. All rebels and traitors must be punished with eternal death. Every order of the Captain must be obeyed. Let us notice a few:—

Order No. 1. "Love your enemies."
" " 2. "Bless them that curse you."
" " 3. "Do good to them that hate you."
" " 4. "Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

We say again, let us obey orders, if we wish to share in the triumphs of the great victory, and the glories of the coming kingdom. Stand firmly for the right.

Full Names.

We would again request all our contributors to write their full names. Be assured your articles will be read with much more interest by all your acquaintance, and just as much by strangers, if your names are signed. Let there be one paper in the world, in which there are no blind signatures; one, in which no patron or contributor is ashamed of his position. Let no false pride or delicacy keep back the name from your excellent articles. Please listen to us in this request, if you wish to make the paper more interesting.

Editorial Matter.—When Bro. Morgan was our Associate in the editorial department, his articles were signed "M.", and ours "G." As the Advent Christian Association have seen fit to appoint but one editor for the coming year, hereafter, it will be understood that all articles on the second page of the Crisis, without a signature, are editorial. In all papers, the articles which follow the name and date of the paper, at the head of one of the columns, may be known as editorial, if there is no named signed. In the Crisis, this is always on the second page.

What others say.

The Boston Journal had a reporter at our late campmeeting at Wilbraham. The following is his first report:—

[From our especial Reporter.]

The Second Adventists in Camp at Wilbraham.

Wilbraham, Mass., Aug. 29.

Those who have had the fortune to pass over that portion of the Western railroad in this vicinity, this week, could not fail to have noticed the immense number of camp meeting passengers destined for the Wilbraham station. They commenced arriving on Saturday, and large additions by every train since has increased the number very perceptibly. The annual camp meetings of the Second Adventarians are very popular in the vicinity where they occur, and with those immediately interested they are anticipated with a great deal of joy and pleasure. These out door meetings of the Adventists have been held in Wilbraham upward of fifteen years successively, but at none of the previous ones has the attendance been so large as this year, especially so early in the week.

The camp is fitly chosen in a large and level tract of thick woodland, situated about a quarter of a mile from the railroad station, on the right hand side going Bostonward. The tents are pitched in the centre of the woods, and are tastefully arranged in the form of a circle, in the middle of which are erected a sufficient number of seats, opposite the preachers' stand, for the accommodation of those attending worship. There are now about eighty tents pitched, which furnish nightly shelter to nearly three thousand persons. Some of the tents will accommodate between thirty and forty, and nearly all of them from ten to twenty. Nearly every one is conspicuously labeled with the name of the State, city or town its inhabitants represent. There are half a dozen large ones full of Bostonians, a number from Roxbury, Cambridge, Charlestown and Salem. There are also a number from Worcester, Springfield, Palmer, Northampton, Hartford, Ct., Rutland and Castleton in Vermont, Portsmouth, N. H., and from various large towns in Eastern Massachusetts. There is one tent full of Pennsylvanians, and one each of people from such distant States as Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey, and Western New York.

The greater part of Monday, the first day of the meeting, was spent in pitching tents and making other comfortable preparations for a week of camp life and religious devotion. In the afternoon and evening, however, there were short services, and on Tuesday the meetings assumed regularity, and were very largely attended—more so than on the second day of any series of meetings ever held here. Elder Luther Boutell of Groton preached in the forenoon; in the afternoon Elder D. T. Taylor of Castleton, Vt., and in the evening Israel Damman of Corinna, Me. The preachers on Wednesday were Elder Mathewson, Batcheldor of Rutland, Vt., Albion Ross of Worcester, and Mr. Mackintosh. The morning discourse to-day was by Eld. H. F. Carpenter of Castleton, Vt., and that of the afternoon by Joshua V. Himes of Boston. The sermons were well written, very eloquently delivered, and the numerous responses of "Amen" were sufficient testimony that they gave satisfaction and gratification to the numerous listeners.

The intervals between the services are spent in prayer and singing in different tents, and by collected groups in the woods around. All seem to enter into the spirit with earnest zeal, and display much pride and interest in taking an active part in the meetings. It is no uncommon thing to see a dozen or more groups in different parts of the grove, with Bible in hand, interpreting the sense and meaning of certain selected passages. New ideas and thoughts are interchanged, and in every word and action there is apparent an earnestness in heart and mind that is not often witnessed.

The present war between the North and South is to the Adventists a favorable omen to some of their prophecies, if I may judge from the opinion of one with whom I conversed on the subject. He first asked if I supposed the same proportion of soldiers now in the field, compared with the number at this camp meeting, would be received in heaven. He thought not from the fact that a very small number of them are supposed to be christians. I dodged further conversation about that matter, and inquired when the time was set for the end of all things. He said the Adventists were not very specific in their prophecies, although they all agreed in the opinion that this war is the commencement of the end of the world, and that he solemnly believed the result of the whole would be the final end of all things. He said it would be nothing more than a prophecy contained in the 25th chapter of Jeremiah.

There was a fearful commotion caused on the grounds to-day, just as the people were assembling for the afternoon services. A frantic horse, with buggy attached, came tearing along, and made nearly the entire circuit inside of where the tents were erected, and through a dense crowd of over three thousand people. The vehicle and harness were demolished, but, as strange and fortunate as it may appear, there was not a human being injured. There was a terrible scattering, though.

To-morrow (Friday) will be a great day, and so will Saturday and Sunday, when there will be several baptismals, and an extra train will be run from Springfield.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Hawley, Mass., Aug. 23d, Emma Augusta Wheeler, aged 19 years, daughter of Thomas K and Laura Ann Wheeler.

During the past winter her health, which from childhood had been feeble, began to give way, but not until eight weeks before her death was she confined to her bed, after that time she was a great sufferer. Her trust was in God, obeying the injunction, to make her wants known "by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving." Often she would say, "Now pray I may not be so distressed, but that I may sleep. I think it is right, mother, to ask for such things, do not you?" During the eight weeks I sat by her bed-side, she conversed freely about her approaching dissolution, disposed of some of her things, wanted mother to exhort a number of individuals to be real good, for she wanted them in the kingdom.

She has fallen, but I trust she was ready. We mourn, but not as those without hope. While in feeble health, much of her time was spent in writing, and it is a sweet comfort to us, in examining her writings, to find them all filled with the fruits of the Spirit, and longings for the kingdom. About a week before her death she said, "I want you to send a bit of poetry I have written, to be put in the Crisis." She had tried to write them off, but her strength failed when she had written only one line.

I want to go home, for I'm weary here,
This world to me is dark and drear,
But I know there is a better one to come,
And I long to rest in that Eden home.

I want to go home, for I shall be sick no more
When I once reach that glorified shore;
No pain can reach me, no sorrow can come,
But I'll live forever in that happy home.

I want to go home, where the loved will not die,
Nor leave sad ones alone in sorrow to sigh;
Where the tears of affliction no more will be shed
Over the departed one's lowly bed.

I want to go home, yes, I want to go,
And the time is near, thank God! I know,
When, if I'm faithful, I shall be there,
The glories of that home forever to share.

I want to go home; oh! for patience to wait,
'Till wide shall be opened the pearly gate,
And the children of God to Zion shall come,
And rest forever in that happy home.

The funeral sermon was delivered by Bro. Jason Blanchard, from Eccl. 12: 7.

Laura Ann Wheeler.

Died, Aug. 12, in May, Lee Co., Ill., Sr. Catherine McConnell, wife of Bro. James McConnell, aged 33 years.

The subject of this notice was cut down in the bloom of life and health by the bite of a rattlesnake. She was in the harvest field, assisting her husband, when the venemous reptile aimed his deadly fangs at the foot of our beloved sister, striking her just above the shoe, which caused her death in about thirty-six hours. Although our sister is dead, she will shortly live again, where the serpent will no more annoy.

She leaves a husband, brother, and six small children to mourn her untimely death; yet they sorrow not as those that have no hope. It has never been my lot to witness such universal grief upon neighbors and friends as was manifest at the funeral of this sister.

About four years ago, she first heard the doctrine of life only through the coming of Jesus, and the literal resurrection of the dead, and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom of the Redeemer under the whole heaven, which she embraced with her whole heart; and often expressed a wish to see the King in his beauty and glory descending to take his bride; but it was not her privilege to live to behold him come. It was their lot to convey one of their little ones to the cold grave nearly two years ago. Now mother and child slumber together in the dust. May husband, brother and children be prepared to meet them and live forever. Sermon by the writer, from Job 14: 10,—"But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost and where is he?" Wm McCulloch.

Died in Worcester, Sept. 4th, 1862, George B., son of Bro. Nathan and Mary C. Lazell, aged thirteen years and ten months.

George was a good boy, who loved Jesus, and felt ready to sleep in death till the resurrection. He thought it was better for him to go now, than to live longer and run the risk of being overcome by the severe temptations of these last days.

We endeavored to comfort the sorrow-stricken family with the "blessed hope" that Jesus is soon coming to raise the dead.—Ed.

Died in Buchanan, M[illegible], Aug. 2d, Kanzas, daughter of Bro. and Sr. M. Harding, aged six years and three months.

This is the second time this family has been afflicted. Two precious ones are now sleeping in the charnel house; but the parents love the "blessed hope," therefore they sorrow not as others that have no hope. In our weakness we tried to comfort them by making some remarks, having for their foundation, 1 Cor. 15: 35, 36.

M. S. Mansfield.

Died in Brandon, Vt., Aug. 22nd, Mrs. Salome Ford, widow of Adonijah Ford, in the 78th year of her age.

She suffered much, both in body and mind, on account of a nervous affection with which she had been afflicted for many years.

T. H. Cheney.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship City of New York, we have advices from Liverpool to the 28th.

The Times continues to give a gloomy picture of American affairs, and says there is no likelihood of a termination of the war by the ordinary course.

Statements relative to the Garibaldi movement continue vague and contradictory. He had quitted Castro Giovanni and arrived at Plazza with volunteers, it is asserted, not numbering more than 3000.

The Royal troops continue to advance.

It is supposed that the 15th of August is fixed upon for a demonstration hostile to France throughout Italy.

It is asserted that a considerable number of officers of the Royal army declare that they will resign rather than act against Garibaldi.

It is reported that Garibaldi had crossed the Calabria with a portion of his followers.

The Neapolitan provinces are reported to be in a state of siege.

It is stated that the Emperor Napoleon has declared that France intends to defend the Pope of Rome.

Garibaldi recently spoke as follows: "The present state of affairs cannot continue. I go against the government because it will not let me go to Rome. I go against France because she defends the Pope. I will have Rome at any price."

The royal authorities had re-entered Catania and captured eight hundred Garibaldians.

The Neapolitan provinces have been declared in a state of siege.

Garibaldi, having issued a proclamation inviting the Hungarians to rebellion, Klapka issued a counter proclamation declaring the time and method inopportune.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

By the arrival of the steamship Australian we have advices from Liverpool to Aug 30, Queenstown 31st.

Paris, Aug. 30.—Noon. A telegram has just been received here stating that Garibaldi has been defeated, wounded and captured.

London, Aug. 31. The Moniteur says that the insurrection which threatened to compromise the destinies of Italy has terminated. Garibaldi, after a very sharp contest, was compelled to surrender, and an Italian frigate was immediately ordered to convey him to Spezzia.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fortress Monroe, Aug. 21. Williamsburg was evacuated by the Union troops at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

New York, Aug. 22. The Tribune has a letter dated Culpepper, 19th, 6 A. M. It says the retreat of our army and the advance of the rebels in overwhelming force, are no longer secrets.

The Tribune's Washington dispatch says:

"Two or three weeks ago the President laid before his Cabinet a proclamation of emancipation, abolishing slavery wherever it exists on the 1st of December, if the rebellion should not be crushed by that time, and asking the opinion of his ministers touching the propriety of issuing it. All but two (Secretary Smith, we believe, being absent) approved of it. Secretary Seward and Postmaster General Blair, however, opposed it with all their might, and the result was it did not appear

It is understood that the subject came up at more than one Cabinet meeting, but the two parties continued as at the first meeting, Messrs. Seward and Blair being the resolute minority."

The World's Washington dispatch says it is openly stated by the emancipationists that the President will issue a proclamation of freedom to all slaves by the 15th of September.

New York, Aug. 24. By steamers Blackstone and Creole, from New Orleans, with dates to the evening of the 15th, we learn that all the property of John Slidell has been confiscated, by order of Gen. Butler.

Philadelphia, Aug. 25. The Press has a letter from Gen. Pope's army of the 22d, which says that General Sigel has captured two thousand rebels, who crossed the Rappahannock on a bridge, which was destroyed by the fire of a Federal battery, cutting off their retreat and forcing them to surrender, after a loss of four hundred killed and wounded.

New York, Aug. 26. The correspondent of the Philadelphia Enquirer says that the officers and soldiers of our army in Virginia are forbidden to write home to relatives, and no mails will be taken from the army.

The officers have refused to give lists of those killed, as it is against orders, although 600 have been lost in the recent skirmishes.

Warrenton was retaken on Saturday by Gen. McDowell.

It is reported that Gen. Rickets with his batteries has slaughtered some 1500 rebels in different attempts made by them to cross the railroad bridge on Saturday.

Washington, Aug. 27. A dispatch received at the Post Office Department, dated Salt Lake City, yesterday says: "A general war with all the Indian tribes east of the Missouri river is close at hand. An interruption of the Overland mail is daily expected. Nothing but prompt and decisive action on the part of the Government will prevent it. The lines should be protected by soldiers at intervals of 100 miles. Gen. Paige's force is too small, and Col. Conners' force is 400 miles west traveling slowly owing to the information contained in the above dispatch."

New York, Aug. 28. The Express prints the following: The value of the Quartermasters' stores captured by the rebels at Manassas Junction was half a million dollars. This is officially stated. The rebels were still in possession of Manassas Junction Wednesday morning. It is said that the rebels had with them flying artillery, and that they used it against a railroad train arriving from Alexandria. There can be no doubt that the rebels have destroyed all the buildings, public and private, the station houses and storehouses, and it is said that they have burnt the railroad bridges over Bull Run, but this is denied. In the meantime the Capital is without communication with the army by rail or telegraph.

Philadelphia, Aug. 29. The Washington National Republican of to-day says Mr. Manxhurst, of Fairfax, and Clerk of the Circuit Court, says he and all the Union men in Fairfax were compelled to leave there on Wednesday, the rebels having taken possession of the place.

Washington, Aug. 30. To-day's Evening Star, speaking of the battle of yesterday, says the battle was fought by the army corps of Generals Heintzelman, McDowell and Sigel on our side, against a rebel force believed to number 50,000 or 60,000 strong.

The location of the battle was in the vicinity of Haymarket, a few miles northwest of the scene of the never-to-be-forgotten battle of Bull Run.

Fairfax Court House, Va. Sept. 1. Yesterday morning a flag of truce was sent in for permission to bring off the dead and wounded of our army, who had not been reached during the days of the fighting, which was granted, to last from noon until sunset.

Some sixty ambulances were sent with a number of physicians and citizens. On their arrival at the field a terrible scene presented itself. The wounded with few exceptions, had received no attention. The ambulances brought away about 200. About 150 or 200 still remained on the field, and now that our army has retreated, no chance remains of sending them succor.

Later reports say the whole number wounded in the fight is 4592, of whom 1800 are still upon the battle field.

Washington, Sept. 2. The city to-night was in a state of great excitement, and not without cause. Crowds were gathered at all the hotels and on the streets discussing and speculating on the future.

Last night there was a series of skirmishes along the whole front, during which we lost two of our best generals and other valuable officers. At four o'clock this morning a train of 100 wagons, with commissary stores, was intercepted by the enemy. Before the party could be overtaken they secured the entire train.

New York, Sept. 3. The Tribune's correspondent states that in consequence of the threatening demonstrations of the rebel Generals Hill and Longstreet, it was deemed necessary on Monday morning to evacuate Centreville, which was done, our troops retiring toward Fairfax Court House.

The railroad bridge over Bull Run has again been destroyed by the rebels. Stonewall Jackson is on his way to Baltimore via Leesburg, with 40,000 men. He intends crossing near Edward's Ferry.

New York, Sept. 3. A gentleman just from the rebel camp estimates the forces under the five generals, viz: Jackson, Longstreet, Ewell, Hill and Gustavus Smith, at not less than 250,000. They are all consolidated at Manasses, excepting Smith's column, 30,000, which is marching on Fredericksburg.

The Herald's Washington dispatch has the following:

To-night the Union army will all be concentrated in the works around this city, and Gen. McClellan has already assumed the position of Commander-in-Chief of all the forces in the field in this part of the country. The announcement of this latter fact has been hailed with acclamations of infinite delight by nearly the whole population.

A special dispatch to the Herald, dated Nashville, Tenn., 2d, says: "Reports coming from reliable sources state that Forrest and his entire force was taken last night at Alexandria, near Lebanon. Expeditions started from McMinnville, Murfreesboro' and Lebanon for the purpose of simultaneously attacking him.

Cincinnati, Sept. 2. The excitement has been very high here all day. The citizens are enrolling themselves rapidly in the different wards. Large numbers are working on the fortifications on the Kentucky hills. The utmost exertions are being made for the defense of the city. The rebels, it is stated, are from 20,000 to 30,000 strong, and reported to be at Boyel's Station, 39 miles from this city.

Business is entirely suspended here. The Railroad cars have stopped running. The people are quietly but actively organizing for defence. No male citizen is allowed to leave the city.

Sept. 5. Business is still suspended. Volunteers and armed bodies of men continue to pour into the city by thousands.

On Wednesday morning, Jenkins forces entered Ravenswood, Virginia, and on the same evening crossed the Ohio river at Buffinton Island, and came down to Racine, Ohio, where they killed one man and wounded two others, and stole twelve horses.

Chicago, Sept. 3. On Monday the Indians in a large body moved up the river toward Redwood. They had a large train of wagons, horses and cattle, and are supposed also to have about 200 captives, women and children.

St. Paul. Minn., Sept. 5. The Indians attacked Forest City on the 3d inst., and were repulsed.

New York, Sept. 7. The latest intelligence from the upper Potomac states that Jackson and his army entered Frederick this morning. They have possession of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. They have torn up the track and destroyed the culverts east of that place, and cut the telegraph.

It is understood that 30,000 rebels have passed into Maryland.

A special dispatch dated Cincinnati, says important news is expected from Nashville. Gen. Buell has ordered the city to be evacuated.

By the Fulton to-day we have important news from the Department of the Gulf.

New Orleans, though threatened, is defended by nearly all the troops in the Department, who are strongly intrenched, and the city is believed to be safe against any attack the rebels can make.

Washington, Sept. 8. A paroled prisoner who arrived here to-day reports that about 150,000 rebels have passed into Maryland. He had passed through the lines and counted 27 batteries.

Omaha, Sept. 8. Messengers from the Yankton Agency arrived at Sioux City on the 6th, bringing information that that tribe is on the eve of rising against the whites. Some settlers of Dakotah have already been attacked. Women and children, all along the Missouri river to Fort Randolph, are fleeing to Sioux City for protection.

The officers have refused to give lists of those killed, as it is against orders, although 600 have been lost in the recent skirmishes.

Warrenton was retaken on Saturday by Gen. McDowell.

It is reported that Gen. Rickets with his batteries has slaughtered some 1500 rebels in different attempts made by them to cross the railroad bridge on Saturday.

Washington, Aug. 27. A dispatch received at the Post Office Department, dated Salt Lake City, yesterday says: "A general war with all the Indian tribes east of the Missouri river is close at hand. An interruption of the Overland mail is daily expected. Nothing but prompt and decisive action on the part of the Government will prevent it. The lines should be protected by soldiers at intervals of 100 miles. Gen. Paige's force is too small, and Col. Conners' force is 400 miles west traveling slowly owing to the information contained in the above dispatch."

New York, Aug. 28. The Express prints the following: The value of the Quartermasters' stores captured by the rebels at Manassas Junction was half a million dollars. This is officially stated. The rebels were still in possession of Manassas Junction Wednesday morning. It is said that the rebels had with them flying artillery, and that they used it against a railroad train arriving from Alexandria. There can be no doubt that the rebels have destroyed all the buildings, public and private, the station houses and storehouses, and it is said that they have burnt the railroad bridges over Bull Run, but this is denied. In the meantime the Capital is without communication with the army by rail or telegraph.

Philadelphia, Aug. 29. The Washington National Republican of to-day says Mr. Manxhurst, of Fairfax, and Clerk of the Circuit Court, says he and all the Union men in Fairfax were compelled to leave there on Wednesday, the rebels having taken possession of the place.

Washington, Aug. 30. To-day's Evening Star, speaking of the battle of yesterday, says the battle was fought by the army corps of Generals Heintzelman, McDowell and Sigel on our side, against a rebel force believed to number 50,000 or 60,000 strong.

The location of the battle was in the vicinity of Haymarket, a few miles northwest of the scene of the never-to-be-forgotten battle of Bull Run.

Fairfax Court House, Va. Sept. 1. Yesterday morning a flag of truce was sent in for permission to bring off the dead and wounded of our army, who had not been reached during the days of the fighting, which was granted, to last from noon until sunset.

Some sixty ambulances were sent with a number of physicians and citizens. On their arrival at the field a terrible scene presented itself. The wounded with few exceptions, had received no attention. The ambulances brought away about 200. About 150 or 200 still remained on the field, and now that our army has retreated, no chance remains of sending them succor.

Later reports say the whole number wounded in the fight is 4592, of whom 1800 are still upon the battle field.

Washington, Sept. 2. The city to-night was in a state of great excitement, and not without cause. Crowds were gathered at all the hotels and on the streets discussing and speculating on the future.

Last night there was a series of skirmishes along the whole front, during which we lost two of our best generals and other valuable officers. At four o'clock this morning a train of 100 wagons, with commissary stores, was intercepted by the enemy. Before the party could be overtaken they secured the entire train.

New York, Sept. 3. The Tribune's correspondent states that in consequence of the threatening demonstrations of the rebel Generals Hill and Longstreet, it was deemed necessary on Monday morning to evacuate Centreville, which was done, our troops retiring toward Fairfax Court House.

The railroad bridge over Bull Run has again been destroyed by the rebels. Stonewall Jackson is on his way to Baltimore via Leesburg, with 40,000 men. He intends crossing near Edward's Ferry.

New York, Sept. 3. A gentleman just from the rebel camp estimates the forces under the five generals, viz: Jackson, Longstreet, Ewell, Hill and Gustavus Smith, at not less than 250,000. They are all consolidated at Manasses, excepting Smith's column, 30,000, which is marching on Fredericksburg.

The Herald's Washington dispatch has the following:

To-night the Union army will all be concentrated in the works around this city, and Gen. McClellan has already assumed the position of Commander-in-Chief of all the forces in the field in this part of the country. The announcement of this latter fact has been hailed with acclamations of infinite delight by nearly the whole population.

A special dispatch to the Herald, dated Nashville, Tenn., 2d, says: "Reports coming from reliable sources state that Forrest and his entire force was taken last night at Alexandria, near Lebanon. Expeditions started from McMinnville, Murfreesboro' and Lebanon for the purpose of simultaneously attacking him.

Cincinnati, Sept. 2. The excitement has been very high here all day. The citizens are enrolling themselves rapidly in the different wards. Large numbers are working on the fortifications on the Kentucky hills. The utmost exertions are being made for the defense of the city. The rebels, it is stated, are from 20,000 to 30,000 strong, and reported to be at Boyel's Station, 39 miles from this city.

Business is entirely suspended here. The Railroad cars have stopped running. The people are quietly but actively organizing for defence. No male citizen is allowed to leave the city.

Sept. 5. Business is still suspended. Volunteers and armed bodies of men continue to pour into the city by thousands.

On Wednesday morning, Jenkins forces entered Ravenswood, Virginia, and on the same evening crossed the Ohio river at Buffinton Island, and came down to Racine, Ohio, where they killed one man and wounded two others, and stole twelve horses.

Chicago, Sept. 3. On Monday the Indians in a large body moved up the river toward Redwood. They had a large train of wagons, horses and cattle, and are supposed also to have about 200 captives, women and children.

St. Paul. Minn., Sept. 5. The Indians attacked Forest City on the 3d inst., and were repulsed.

New York, Sept. 7. The latest intelligence from the upper Potomac states that Jackson and his army entered Frederick this morning. They have possession of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. They have torn up the track and destroyed the culverts east of that place, and cut the telegraph.

It is understood that 30,000 rebels have passed into Maryland.

A special dispatch dated Cincinnati, says important news is expected from Nashville. Gen. Buell has ordered the city to be evacuated.

By the Fulton to-day we have important news from the Department of the Gulf.

New Orleans, though threatened, is defended by nearly all the troops in the Department, who are strongly intrenched, and the city is believed to be safe against any attack the rebels can make.

Washington, Sept. 8. A paroled prisoner who arrived here to-day reports that about 150,000 rebels have passed into Maryland. He had passed through the lines and counted 27 batteries.

Omaha, Sept. 8. Messengers from the Yankton Agency arrived at Sioux City on the 6th, bringing information that that tribe is on the eve of rising against the whites. Some settlers of Dakotah have already been attacked. [illegible] men and children, all along the Missouri river to Fort Randolph, are fleeing to Sioux City for protection.

Notice for Maine.

Seeing the managers of the Corinna campmeeting have changed the time of their meeting so that it comes on the same week of the appointment for the State Conference, we change our time, that brethren may be able to attend both.

THE MAINE ANNUAL ADVENT CONFERENCE will convene in Portland, Wednesday evening, Sept. 17th, at 7 o'clock, in the Second Advent Hall, on Congress street, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to see all the Advent ministers belonging in Maine, who can work together in union and harmony for the objects of the conference, which are the spread of "this gospel of the kingdom," the unity and health of the body of Christ, and the salvation of sinners. Let as many other such brethren and sisters as can, come also, in the Spirit of Christ, ready to work for him, praying that God may make this conference a blessing to us all, and an instrument of good to others. Brn. will come mostly by cars and boats. Those who come with teams will be provided for, but must provide generally for their own horses. The Portland brethren will do all they can to entertain the friends who come. Call on Bro. Peter Johnson, Bro. Elden, 16 Tyng Street; Eld. B. Emery, Congress street; Charles H. Wyman, 12 Salem street, who will aid you in finding suitable places to put up.

Lo! I am with you alway.

I.

"Lo! I am with you alway." Blessed words!
Imparting strength to many a vacant heart;
Last words of Christ to those he loved on earth,—
From those who trust him he will ne'er depart.

II.

When earthly friends are powerless help to give,
We lean not on the Almighty arm in vain;
Remember he who wounds alone can heal,—
Have faith in God, and losses shall be gain.

III.

When idols from our clasping arms are torn,
To teach us not "to lay up treasures here,"
Hear Jesus, who is ever still the same,—
"Lo! I am with you." Ah! what words of cheer.

IV.

Distrust him not, though clouds are o'er thy path,
"Lo! I am with you" till the end of time;
Thy Father's discipline submissive bear,
And thou ere long shalt see his wise design

V.

"'Lo! I am with you,' tempest-tossed and tried,
Then wherefore didst thou doubt my power to save?
Far more than Conqueror is thy Savior's might,
None shall ere perish that my Father gave."

VI.

When thou art called a heavy cross to bear,
"Lo! I am with you" makes the pilgrim strong,
Reproach and shame our Master too has borne,
What matters it if we to Christ belong?

VII.

I am with thee,—this promise thou hast known,
Dear aged pilgrim on the shores of time,
Down to hoar hairs he's safely carried thee,
And thou canst testify this covenant God is mine

IX.

"Lo! I am with you" in the last dread hour,
For "so he giveth his beloved sleep,"
Around and underneath the Almighty arms
"Our life, if hid in Christ," he'll safely keep.

AMY.

"Let us go on unto Perfection."

In order to understand what the apostle meant by this injunction, it is necessary to give the Scriptures a candid and prayerful examination upon the subject. We find there are some, even among us, who do not understand the doctrine of christian perfection, and are in the fog as to what is meant by being perfect and holy, as taught by our Lord and Savior and the apostles.

As your excellent paper seems to delight in giving light to all around, I thought it would not be amiss to send you an extract from the writings of John Wesley on the subject. It will be found in the "Guide to Christian Perfection," Vol 1, No. 1. I think Mr. Wesley gives us the doctrine of the New Testament on the point, and that clearly. GEO. BLISS.

"WHAT IS CHRISTIAN PERFECTION?

If we would successfully exhort christians to go on to perfection, we must show what that perfection is; for no one will be likely to attain to it till it be defined and laid clearly before his understanding. I do not conceive the perfection here spoken of to be the perfection of angels. As those glorious beings never left their first estate, never declined from their original perfection, . . . all their apprehension of things is clear and distinct, and their judgment always true; hence, though their knowledge is limited, (for they are creatures) though they are ignorant of innumerable things, yet they are not liable to mistake, for their knowledge is perfect in its kind. And as their affections are all constantly guided by their unerring understanding, so that all their actions are suitable thereto, so they do every moment not their own wills, but the good and acceptable will of God. Therefore it is not possible for man, whose understanding is darkened, to whom mistakes are as natural as ignorance, who cannot think at all but by the medium of organs which are weakened and depraved, like other parts of the corruptible body,—it is not possible, I say, for man always to think right, to apprehend things distinctly, and judge things truly of them. In consequence hereof, his affections depending on his understanding are variously disordered, and his words and actions are influenced more or less by the disorder both of his understanding and affections. It follows that no man while in the body can possibly attain to angelic perfection."

. . . "The highest perfection which man can attain, while in this house of our tabernacle, does not exclude ignorance and error, and a thousand other infirmities. Now from wrong judgments, wrong words and actions will necessarily flow, and in some cases, wrong affections also may spring from the same source. I may judge wrong of you; I may think more or less highly of you than I ought to think, and this mistake in my judgment may not only occasion something wrong in my behavior, but it may have a still deeper effect, it may occasion something wrong in my affections. From a wrong apprehension, I may love and esteem you either more or less than I ought. Nor can I be freed from a liableness to such a mistake, while I remain in a corruptible body. . . . Hence the best men may say from the heart—

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merits of thy death,"

for innumerable violation of Adamic as well as the angelic law. It is well therefore for us that we are not under these, but the law of love. Love is now the fulfilling of the law which is given fallen man. This is now, with respect to us, the perfect law. But even against this, through the present weakness of our understanding, we are continually liable to transgress. Therefore, every man living needs the blood of atonement, or he could not stand before God."

"What is, then, the perfection of which man is capable, while he dwells in a corruptible body? It is the complying with the command, 'My son, give me thine heart;' it is the loving of the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind. This is the sum of christian perfection; it is all comprised in that one word—LOVE. The first branch of it is the love of God; and he that loves God loves his brother also; it is inseparably connected with the second, 'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Thou shalt love every man as thy own soul—as Christ loved us. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets; these contain the whole of christian perfection.

"Another view of this is given us in the words of the great apostle, 'Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:' for although this immediately and directly refers to the humility of our Lord, yet it may be taken in a far more extensive sense, so as to include the whole disposition of his mind; all affections of his temper, both towards God and man. Now it is certain that as there was no evil affection in him, so no good affection or temper was wanting. So that whatsoever things are holy, whatsoever things are lovely, are all included in the mind that was in Christ Jesus.

"St. Paul, when writing to the Galatians, places perfection in yet another view. It is the one individual fruit of the Spirit, which he describes thus: 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, fidelity, meekness, temperance.' What a glorious constellation of graces is here! Now suppose all these things be knit together in one, to be united together in the soul of a believer, this is christian perfection.

"Again; he writes to christians of Ephesus of putting on the new man, which is after God, created in righteousness and true holiness; and to the Colossians of the 'new man, renewed after the image of him that created him.'. . .

"St. Peter expresses it in a still different manner, though to the same effect. 'As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.' 1 Pet. 1: 15. According to this apostle, then, perfection is another name for universal holiness, inward and outward righteousness, holiness of life arising from holiness of heart. If any expressions can be stronger than these, they are those of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, 1 Epistle, 5: 23. The very God of peace himself sanctify you wholly, and may the whole of you, the spirit, the soul, and the body, (this is the literal translation) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"We cannot show this sanctification in a more excellent way than by complying with the exhortation of the apostle, 'I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.' To the same effect St. Peter says, (1st Epistle 2: 5) 'Ye are a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God thro' Jesus Christ.' But what sacrifices shall we offer now, seeing the Jewish dispensation is at an end? If you have truly presented yourselves to God, you offer up to him continually all your thoughts, and words, and actions, through the Son of his love, as a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving.

"Thus you experience that he whose name is called Jesus does not bear the name in vain, that he does in fact save his people from their sins, the root as well as the branches. And this salvation from sin—from all sins—is another description of perfection, though indeed it expresses only the least, the lowest branch of it,—only the negative part of the great salvation."

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. A. Sober.

DEAR BRO. GRANT.—I wish simply to say through the Crisis, that I have removed from Grand Blanc, Genesee county, Mich., to Deerfield, Livingston county, Mich., and my address will be, until further notice, Argentine, Genesee county, Mich. Brethren and friends will therefore take notice and direct their favors accordingly.

I am endeavoring still to warn the church and world of the judgment at hand, and kindred truths. Never, in all my experience in the Advent cause, did I feel such firm and abiding convictions of the divine origin and correctness, in the main, of the great truths we preach, than now. The signs of the times are such as to convince, it seems to me, every student of prophecy that the end of this age is nigh at hand. The nations are distressed and perplexed beyond a parallel, as Christ said they would be in the last days, as recorded by Luke, or, in Apocalyptic language, they are ANGRY. Their perplexity makes them mad, and they foam like the raging sea, and I hope the great Peace-maker will soon say, "Be still."

Rome is waning, and soon must fall to rise no more forever. The Turkish Empire is almost consumed, or "dried up." The "time of trouble" is being inaugurated, which will end in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." There are indications of speedy deliverance. Amid the general gloom and darkness of our national history and the entire world, the christian need not be alarmed; but on the contrary rejoice and sing,—

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near."

Deerfield, Mich., Aug. 26th, '62.

From P. J. Tisdale.

BRO GRANT:—I take the privilege to write a few lines for the Crisis. I like the paper very much, and prize it next to the Bible.

There are a few in this place who love the Lord and his appearing. I belong to them. I enlisted under the banner of King Jesus some five or six years ago. Bro. P. C. Rodman was the first one to tell me about the Lord's coming. Although I was young, it sounded sweet to my ears, and I have loved it ever since. I love it even more to-day than ever.

Brethren and Sisters, lift up your heads, the great Life-giver is soon coming to reward his faithful children. By the grace of God I will be among his faithful children,

"Whene'er the archangel's trump shall sound."

May we be kept spotless and blameless until he comes, that we may be found of him in peace, and be permitted to share in the kingdom of immortal glory,

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Exeter, R. I., 1862.

From Jas. A. Purdy.

BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I have been desirous for some time past of writing a few lines to you concerning my experience. About the space of two years I neglected reading God's holy word. The different preachers I went to hear would say that men's souls were immortal, and when a man died he would fly to heaven or sink to an unknown hell. I thought, what need of a resurrection of the dead? And they would talk about a "merciful" God,—that he was casting the wicked into eternal torture, there to burn eternally. Therefore I thought if there was a God at all, there must be a wrong somewhere in teaching these erroneous ideas. I, with many more poor perishing souls, have been driven from the Savior to die the second death; but, glory be to God, to my great surprise, in the year 1860 I met with two tracts, one entitled "The Wicked not Immortal," the other "Death not Life, or the Destruction of the Wicked." Through these I was led to the pages of divine truth; and oh! what a blessing they proved to me. They explained the hidden mysteries.

I learned God's word was true from the beginning to the end. I was shown a crucified Savior and a risen Mediator. The Spirit of God arrested me, and at the expiration of three months, after a diligent search of the Scriptures, I cried unto the Lord, saying, "What shall I do to be saved?" These words came powerfully to my mind, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I threw myself into the arms of Jesus, and found peace and rest, and was healed. Ah! I found peace in believing in Christ. When He who is our life shall appear, I hope to appear with him in glory. What a glorious promise to all that are looking for the "blessed hope," and the bright "appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "To the law and to the testimony." Our Savior says, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth."

O blessed day! happy hour! joyful moment! when the sight of our precious Savior first saluted the eyes of my mind and became the object of my faith. It was the beginning of days, yea, my great birth-day to happiness, and now with you, dear pilgrims, I am journeying on to the promised inheritance, expecting Jesus soon to come to destroy the wicked, replenish the earth, give immortality and eternal life to all those that endure to the end.

Three days at the Wilbraham Camp-meeting.

Praise the Lord for the three days I spent at the Wilbraham Campmeeting! On arriving at the ground, and surveying the circle, I could but exclaim, "How goodly are thy tents, oh Jacob! and thy tabernacles, oh Israel!"—Num. 24: 5. The order of the meeting was as nearly perfect as possible,—not a man, woman or child did I see misbehave.

But the order at the tables during meals seemed to exceed even that; to see that campmeeting patriarch, Bro. Munger, at his post at the instant, and as soon as all were seated, to hear him ask, "Will the brethren please come to order," and then invite some brother near the centre to ask a blessing, and to observe the strict attention given by over two hundred persons, justifies all that is here said on the subject of order.

The spirit of the meeting was blessed, notwithstanding doctrinal differences known to exist on some subjects, and I was delighted to observe the deference paid to one another by brethren of opposite sentiments.

Being kindly provided with lodging by brethren of the Springfield tent, at the close of the exercises at the stand on Wed. evening, I joined them in the prayer meeting in the tent, and such an outpouring of the Spirit as we then received, reminded me of the campmeetings I attended over thirty years ago, when Methodists did not have to mourn the absence of the Holy Spirit!

Finally, to be permitted to see and worship with so many hundreds of brethren and sisters, all "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ" (Titus 2: 13), I regard as one of the greatest blessings of my christian life. And now to all that look for redemption in Jerusalem,* permit me to send this greeting.

SAMUEL CURRY.

* Luke 2: 38.

Selected for the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT:—The following is taken from an old copy of the Montreal Witness. I select it for your readers, and hope I can do so without having some good brother say, "She means me!" MARIA.

Grace before Meat.

"One father of a household among our acquaintance,—a christian brother, too, whom we highly esteem,—mumbles his 'grace' somewhere back in his bronchial region, as if fearful some one at the table might over him. Another will pitch his voice at a key fit for calling a neighbor from across the way. Another dashes into his petitions like Job's war horses, in the midst of the bustle of taking seats. Another bobs down his head, and has bobbed it up again ere you are fully aware what he is at. Another mumbles along with the dead monotony of a cart on the pavements. So the number who really edify in performing this service is lamentably small. If we might be allowed to offer counsel touching the matter, we should say: Come to this devotional service as to any other devotional service, in a reverent spirit, and with the desire to religiously profit all concerned. Do not be hasty in the thanksgiving and prayer. Wait till all are seated, and the silence has become perfect. Then speak quietly, but audibly, seriously, earnestly. Do not fall into the same unvarying sound of words. Having a formula at the tongue's end, is apt to deliver the tongue from all dependance on the heart. Do not ask merely that the food may be 'blessed to the nourishment of the body,' but that, with gratitude and devotion, it may likewise be a means of grace to the soul. Do not offer an irrelevant prayer, as if forgetful of the place and occasion. Do not, the moment the last word falls from your lips, seize the knife and fork, or turn with some trifling remark to your next neighbor at the table. Let there be a pause, be as deliberate in closing as in commencing the service. Let the impression be enstamped on all listening that you seriously mean to commune with God in this service—not to recite a dry formula."

P. S. The great trouble among us is, many of our good brethren neglect this duty entirely—not more so in one locality than another. M. M.

Farewell Hymn.

Farewell, my brethren, I leave you now,
To my own country I must go,
To hear of strife, and war and blood,
But oh! my trust shall be in God.

The widow's God he says he'll be,
The promise sure is sweet to me,
So I will lean upon his word—
Blest promise does that book afford.

With you I've spent some happy hours,
O! may we meet in Eden's bowers,
To sing redemption's joyful song,
Amid that holy, happy throng.

When the archangel trump shall sound,
And wake the sleepers under ground,
We'll rise triumphant in the air,
Meet all our Father's children there.

O! then no tears will ever flow,
And we no more shall sorrow know,
For we have gained our blest abode,
And there we'll scale the mount of God.

And when on Zion's height we stand,
With harps of gold all in our hand,
We'll praise our Lord, for lo, 'tis he
Hath given us the victory!

A city fair of purest gold,
No mortal eye can ever behold,
But saints victorious then shall see
That city bright in majesty.

The tree of life all blooming fair,
Its golden fruit none can compare,
Life's river pure, with flowing stream,—
We'll drink and never thirst again.

O! meet me on that peaceful shore,
Where parting shall be known no more,
Then farewell till we meet again,
Where Christ our King shall ever reign.

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

The Judge and the poor African Woman.

In one of the populous and beautiful towns on the banks of "La Belle Riviere," there dwelt a poor lone African woman. . . She was queenly in the power and beauty of her spiritual progress, though poor as poverty could make her in this world's goods. . . . .

The judge was rich and highly esteemed. He dwelt in a mansion, not so fine as to repel, not so splendid as to make him the envy of the foolish, large enough to be the social centre of the town, and plain enough to make one feel it a home. His heart was in keeping with his home, large and open.

The poor African woman lived in a cabin on an alley, all alone, without chick or child, kith or kin.

Her own hands ministered amply to her own wants while she had health, and at home or abroad at work by the day, she often earned that which found its way to India, Africa or elsewhere, in the spread of the gospel. Her home though small and poor was neat and tidy. She belonged to the church of which the judge was an officer, and often sat down with him at the table of the Lord, as she will again. O how joyously at the feast of the Bridegroom in the palace of the King. But it so happened that the judge and the African had never had any free conversation together about the things of the kingdom. He respected her. She venerated him. At last she received a severe injury from which she never recovered, and for many weary months before her death was dependent and helpless, alone and bed-ridden.

During this time the judge's ample table and abundant wardrobe had contributed its full share to the comforts of the poor woman. Never a day but she was remembered. But for a long time for one reason and another he put off from time to time a personal visit, which he yet fully purposed in his heart to make her. Until at last one day as he thought of the cheeriness of his own pleasant time, the thought of the contrast between this and the loneliness and desolation of the poor woman's cabin came into his mind, and while it heightened his gratitude for the goodness of God to him, it filled him with sadness and sympathy for her.

"Who can tell but I may cheer her a little, and perhaps by a little timely sympathy save her from repining at her hard lot? Possibly, too, I may be able to throw some light upon the rugged pathway along which she is going to the kingdom?"

The judge loved to do good; it was a great luxury to him. So, taking a well filled basket, and making sure that purse as well as scrip was stored with convenient small change, he sallied forth to visit the poor woman.

As the door opened, he was struck with the air of neatness in the cabin. If she was bed-rid, some kind hand supplied the place of her's. Everything was in order, swept and garnished neat as a pin. "Not so desolate after all," thought he.

But again, as the judge looked around, and contrasted the social joys of his own ample mansion, where the voice of children and of music, as well as the presence of books and friends made all cheerful and happy, with the cheerless solitude of the poor woman, alone here from morning till night and from night until morning, only as one or another called out of kindness to keep her from suffering, his heart filled again with sadness and sympathy.

Seating himself on the stool at the side of the poor woman's cot, he began speaking to her in words of condolence.

"It must be hard for you, Nancy, to be shut up here alone so many days and nights?"

"O, no, thank God, massa judge, the good Lord keeps me from feeling bad. I'se happy now as ever I was in all my days."

"But, Nancy, lying here from morning till night and from night till morning all alone, and racked with pain, dependent upon others for everything, do you not get tired and down-hearted, and think your lot a hard one to bear?"

"Well, I'se 'pendent on other, dat's sure, 'deed I is, an I was allers used to have something to give to de poor, an to de missionary, too, an to de minister, but den I'se no poorer dan my good Lord was when he was here in de worl, and I'se nebber suffer half so much yet as he suffer for me on de cross. I'se berry happy when I tink of dese tings."

"But, Nancy, you are all alone here."

"Yes, massa, I'se all alone, dat's true, but den Jesus is here, too, all de time. I'm nebber alone, no how, and he's good company."

"But, Nancy, how do you feel when you think about death? What if you should die here all alone some night?"

"O massa judge, I 'spect to. I 'spect nothing else, but jes to go off all alone here some night, as you say, or some day. But it's all one, night or day, to poor Nancy. And den, massa, I spec I'll not go alone, after all, for Jesus says in de blessed book 'I'll come an' take you to myself, dat where I am dar you may be also,' an' I believe Him. I'se not afraid to die alone."

"But, Nancy, sometimes when I think of dying, I am filled with trouble. I think how bad I am, what a sinner, and how unfit for heaven. And I think now what if I should die suddenly, just as I am, what would become of me? Are you not afraid to die and go into the presence of a holy God?"

"O, no, massa, 'deed I'se not."

"Why not, Nancy?"

"O, massa, I was 'fraid, berry much. When I was fust injer, I see I must die, an' I thought how can such a sinner as I is ebber go into such a holy place as de new Jerusalem is? An' I was miseble, sure. Den, by an by, after a while, I jes' thought I must trus' myself to de blessed Jesus, to make me ready for de kingdom jus' as I did to forgib all my sins. So I found res' for my poor soul in Jesus, an sene dat time I feel somehow all better. For now, I know he will make me all ready and pure and white for de new Jerusalem above. An' now I love to think about the time when I shall come to 'pear befo' the Father's throne, wid him in glory, all starry, spagle white."

The judge sat in silence, admiring the power of grace. Not yet himself deeply affected by the light reflected from this star in disguise. A little pressure more was required, another chafing question, to bring out the ray destined to pierce his own soul.

"Well, Nancy, one thing more let me ask. Do you never complain?"

"Complain! O, massa, judge, complain, do you say, massa? Why massa! Who should such a one as I is, complain ob? The good Lor'? Why, he knows what's bes, for poor Nancy. His will be done."

Nancy said this in tones of the deepest sincerity, and a little more. There was just a shade of wonder at the question, as much as to say, What, an officer in the church, a man of education, a judge, can you think a poor creature like me might complain of the dealings of a merciful God and Savior like mine?

The arrow took effect. The judge bowed his head in silence a moment, and then rose and bade Nancy good-bye, without the word of consolation and prayer, which he fully purposed when he went into the cabin.

All the way home he kept saying to himself, "Well, I never yet said, 'His will be done,' in that way. I never felt it. Alone, poor, helpless, bed-ridden, dependent, miserable in body, and yet happy as an angel. Ah! there is a power that I never felt. But, I must feel it, and God helping me, I will. Not afraid to die."

Trusting Jesus to purify her from all sin, and present her spotless before God, waiting joyously his summons. O, blessed faith! I must know more of this, and I will."

Two weeks, night and day, the arrow rankled, rankled, rankled. His pain increased. Sleep forsook him, and his family became alarmed. He said nothing, but often groaned in spirit and sighed deeply. Sometimes the tears were seen to steal down his manly cheeks. All wondered, and all waited to hear what had come over the strong mind and manly heart of the judge.

At last, one day while he was bowed before God, he felt in his heart "Thy will will be done." The storm-tossed sea of his soul was suddenly calmed, and peace filled his heart—peace as a river. Now he, too, could trust Jesus to make for him his pathway on earth and fit him for heaven, and take him to it whenever and from whatever place it might please him.

It was the beginning of a new life for him—a change quite as great as at the time of his conversion, and as it has proved, the beginning of blessed things for his own family, and church and town, and for the cause of Christ generally. Consistent and steadfast before, he has been a burning and a shining light, letting his light shine far and near ever since.

He went in the fullness of wealth and education, and influence and honor, to the poor, lone, lorn African woman, to do her good if he might with either counsel or food, or clothing or money. This was the full purpose and prayer of his heart; and yet, while he gave nothing to her, he received from her what all his wealth could not purchase or all his wisdom devise.

She, poor body, had nothing to give, nor so much as ever dreamed of giving aught to any body. And yet, without a thought of it, she did give to the rich and honorable judge what was worth more to him than the wealth and honors of all the world.

And what does this illustrate to us? What but the power of spirituality? What but the power which poured upon the few illiterate fishermen of Gallilee in the Pentecostal baptism, fitted them for the reformation of the world, almost in a single generation?

Obedience to God.

Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do in anything
To do it as for thee.
All may of thee partake;
Nothing can be so mean
Which with this tincture, "For Thy sake,"
Will not grow bright and clean.
A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for God's laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

COBBETT.—This extraordinary man, alluding to the number of his "works," observed: "If any young man wishes to know the grand secret relative to the performance of such wondrous labor, it is told him in a few words: Be abstinent; be sober; go to bed at eight o'clock and get up at four—the last two being of still more importance than the two former. A full half of all that I have ever written has been written before ten o'clock in the day; so that I have had as much leisure as any man that I ever knew any thing of. If young men will but set about the thing in earnest, let them not fear of success; they will soon find that it is disagreeable to sit up or to rise late. Literary coxcombs talk of 'consuming the midnight oil.' No oil, and a very small portion of candles, have I ever consumed, and I am convinced that no writing is so good as that which comes from under the light of the sun."

FASHION.—There is only one thing more powerful than a steam engine, and that is fashion. It makes men ridiculous and women spendthrifts. It takes the human family by the nose, and leads them into captivity. It makes the Hollander wear eighteen pair of breeches at once, and causes the Englishman to wear boots so sharpened at the point that they could be used for toothpicks. It builds our churches, fills our pews, and even regulates the rights of sepulture. Fashion is a great power. What a pity it can never be enlisted on the side of common sense, early hours, goodness and economy.

FAMILY COURTESY.—Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward the members of their own family, will be rude and thoughtless to all the world. But let the family intercourse be true, tender and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood.

To be read by those who are eager to make Proselytes.—It was said by Borgia of the expedition of the French into Italy, that they came with chalk in their hands to mark out their lodgings, not with arms to force their way in. I, in like manner, would have my doctrine enter quietly into the minds that are fit and capable of receiving it, for confutations cannot be employed, when the difference is upon first principles and very notions, and even upon forms of demonstration.—Bacon, Novum Organum.

☞ Coal oil is said to be a sure destroyer of bedbugs. Apply plentifully with a small brush or feather to the places where they most do congregate. The cure is effectual and permanent. Gilt frames, chandeliers, etc., rubbed slightly over with coal oil, will not be disturbed by flies.

How to rid a barn of fleas.—Take quick lime, slack it, and sow freely. It will exterminate them in pig-sties, or any place they inhabit.

Precautions.

1. Never sleep in a room where there is any green paper on the walls, as this color is made of arsenic or lead, the former is by far the most dangerous, being scheeles green, and is known positively by a drop of muriatic acid on the green leaving it white.

2. White glazed visiting-cards contain sugar of lead, and will poison a child who is tempted to chew them from the slight sweetish taste.

3. Green glazed cards used for concert tickets, are still more poisonous; a single one of them contains a grain and a half of arsenic, enough to kill a child.

4. Never put a pin in the mouth or between the teeth, for a single instant, because a sudden effort to laugh or speak, may convey it into the throat, or lungs, or stomach, causing death in a few minutes, or requiring the windpipe to be cut open to get it out, if it has passed into the stomach, it may, as it has done, cause years of suffering, ceasing only when it has made its way out of the body through the walls of the abdomen or other portion of the system.

5. It is best to have no button or string about any garment worn during the night. A long, loose night-gown is the best thing to sleep in. Many a man has facilitated an attack of apoplexy by buttoning his shirt-collar.

6. If you wake up of a cold night, and find yourself very restless, get out of bed, and standing on a piece of carpet or cloth of any kind, spend five or ten minutes in rubbing the whole body vigorously and rapidly with the hands, having previously thrown the bed clothing towards the foot of the bed so as to air both bed and body.

7. If you find that you have inadvertantly eaten too much, instead of taking something to settle the stomach, thus adding to the load under which it already labors, take a continuous walk with just enough activity to keep up a very slight moisture or perspiration of the skin, and do not stop until entirely relieved, but end your exercise in a warm room, so as to cool off very slowly.

8. Never put on a pair of new boots or shoes on a journey, especially on a visit to the city; rather wear your easiest, oldest pair, otherwise you will soon be painfully disabled.

9. A loosely-fitting boot or shoe, while traveling in winter, will keep the feet warmer, without any stockings at all, than a tight pair, over the thickest, warmest hose.

10. Riding against a cold wind, immediately after singing or speaking in public, is suicide.

11. Many public speakers have been disabled for life by speaking under a hoarseness of voice.

12. If you happen to get wet in cold weather, keep moving on foot with a rapidity sufficient to keep off a feeling of chilliness until you get into a house, and not waiting to undress, drink instantly and plentifully of hot tea of some sort; then undress, wipe dry quickly, and put on warm, dry clothing.

13. Never go to bed with cold feet, if you want to sleep well.

14. If a person faints, place him instantly flat on a bed, or floor, or earth, on his back, and quietly let him alone at least for ten minutes; if it is simply a fainting fit, the blood, flowing on a level will more speedily equalize itself throughout the system; cold water dashed in the face, or a sitting position are unnecessary and pernicious.

15. Never blow your nose, nor spit the product of a cough, nor throw a fruit-peel on the sidewalk.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Nicotine found in the Viscera of a Snufftaker.

M. Morin, of Rouen, anxious to ascertain whether nicotine could be detected in the viscera, subjected the lungs and liver of a snufftaker, who had died at seventy, to a careful analysis, and found the alkaloid just mentioned. Portions of the lungs and liver were reduced to a pulp and soaked in distilled water, slightly acidulated for the lungs with sulphuric acid, and for the liver with oxalic acid. Several days afterward, the liquor was filtered through paper free from carbonate of lime, then concentrated to a third of its volume, and filtered again to free it from the flakes which had formed. It was now once more evaporated, and treated with pure alcohol, when fresh flakes formed. The alcohol was then removed by heat after filtration. The residue was mixed with a small quantity of pure potash. On cooling, sulphuric ether was added; and after a few hours, the decanted liquor was evaporated in vacuo. The substance now obtained, having the smell and the acrid taste of nicotine, was treated by the bichloride of mercury, chloride of platinum, tannin, biniodide of potassium, the salts of copper and lead, and with all the reactions of nicotine were obtained.—Lancet.

SOME FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO, which those who use it will read and forget:—

Rees' Cyclopedia says a drop or two of the oil, placed on the tongue of a cat, produces convulsions and death in the space of a minute.

A college of physicians has said that not less than twenty thousand, in our land, annually die by the use of this poison.

Dr. Shaw names some eighty diseases, and says they may be attributed to tobacco.

Gov. Sullivan says: "My brother, Gen. Sullivan, used snuff, and his snuff lodged him prematurely in the grave."

Bocarme, of Belgium, was murdered in two minutes and a half by a little nicotine, or alkali of tobacco.

Dr. Twitchell believed that sudden deaths and tobacco, among men, were usually found together, and he sustained this opinion by an array of facts altogether conclusive.

Three young men formed a smoking club, and they all died within two years of the the time they formed it. The doctor was asked what they died of. He said they were smoked to death.

A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth, in a dram shop. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said: "It was a mysterious act of God." The minister, at the funeral, consoled the friends by saying much the same thing. Physicians said it was "heart disease," and said nothing about the cause of the disease. A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said, "Tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart; it ceased to beat, and the victim fell!

☞ A distinguished physician of Paris, Dr. Robert De Lambelle, announces that a shock of electricity given a patient dying from the effects of chloroform, immediately counteracts its influence and restores the sufferer to life.

Lo! I am with you alway.

I.

"Lo! I am with you alway." Blessed words!
Imparting strength to many a vacant heart;
Last words of Christ to those he loved on earth,—
From those who trust him he will ne'er depart.

II.

When earthly friends are powerless help to give,
We lean not on the Almighty arm in vain;
Remember he who wounds alone can heal,—
Have faith in God, and losses shall be gain.

III.

When idols from our clasping arms are torn,
To teach us not "to lay up treasures here,"
Hear Jesus, who is ever still the same,—
"Lo! I am with you." Ah! what words of cheer.

IV.

Distrust him not, though clouds are o'er thy path,
"Lo! I am with you" till the end of time;
Thy Father's discipline submissive bear,
And thou ere long shalt see his wise design.

V.

"'Lo! I am with you,' tempest-tossed and tried,
Then wherefore didst thou doubt my power to save?
Far more than Conqueror is thy Savior's might,
None shall ere perish that my Father gave."

VI.

When thou art called a heavy cross to bear,
"Lo! I am with you" makes the pilgrim strong;
Reproach and shame our Master too has borne,
What matters it if we to Christ belong?

VII.

I am with thee,—this promise thou hast known,
Dear aged pilgrim on the shores of time,
Down to hoar hairs he's safely carried thee,
And thou canst testify this covenant God is mine.

IX.

"Lo! I am with you" in the last dread hour,
For "so he giveth his beloved sleep;"
Around and underneath the Almighty arms
"Our life, if hid in Christ," he'll safely keep.

"Let us go on unto Perfection."

In order to understand what the apostle meant by this injunction, it is necessary to give the Scriptures a candid and prayerful examination upon the subject. We find there are some, even among us, who do not understand the doctrine of christian perfection, and are in the fog as to what is meant by being perfect and holy, as taught by our Lord and Savior and the apostles.

As your excellent paper seems to delight in giving light to all around, I thought it would not be amiss to send you an extract from the writings of John Wesley on the subject. It will be found in the "Guide to Christian Perfection," Vol. 1, No. 1. I think Mr. Wesley gives us the doctrine of the New Testament on the point, and that clearly. GEO. BLISS.

"WHAT IS CHRISTIAN PERFECTION?

If we would successfully exhort christians to go on to perfection, we must show what that perfection is; for no one will be likely to attain to it till it be defined and laid clearly before his understanding. I do not conceive the perfection here spoken of to be the perfection of angels. As those glorious beings never left their first estate, never declined from their original perfection, . . . all their apprehension of things is clear and distinct, and their judgment always true; hence, though their knowledge is limited, (for they are creatures) though they are ignorant of innumerable things, yet they are not liable to mistake, for their knowledge is perfect in its kind. And as their affections are all constantly guided by their unerring understanding, so that all their actions are suitable thereto; so they do every moment not their own wills, but the good and acceptable will of God. Therefore it is not possible for man, whose understanding is darkened, to whom mistakes are as natural as ignorance, who cannot think at all but by the medium of organs which are weakened and depraved, like other parts of the corruptible body,—it is not possible, I say, for man always to think right, to apprehend things distinctly, and judge things truly of them. In consequence hereof, his affections depending on his understanding are variously disordered, and his words and actions are influenced more or less by the disorder both of his understanding and affections. It follows that no man while in the body can possibly attain to angelic perfection."

. . . "The highest perfection which man can attain, while in this house of our tabernacle, does not exclude ignorance and error, and a thousand other infirmities. Now from wrong judgments, wrong words and actions will necessarily flow; and in some cases, wrong affections also may spring from the same source. I may judge wrong of you; I may think more or less highly of you than I ought to think; and this mistake in my judgment may not only occasion something wrong in my behavior, but it may have a still deeper effect; it may occasion something wrong in my affections. From a wrong apprehension, I may love and esteem you either more or less than I ought. Nor can I be freed from a liableness to such a mistake, while I remain in a corruptible body. . . . Hence the best men may say from the heart—

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merits of thy death,"

for innumerable violation of Adamic as well as the angelic law. It is well therefore for us that we are not under these, but the law of love. Love is now the fulfilling of the law which is given fallen man. This is now, with respect to us, the perfect law. But even against this, through the present weakness of our understanding, we are continually liable to transgress. Therefore, every man living needs the blood of atonement, or he could not stand before God."

"What is, then, the perfection of which man is capable, while he dwells in a corruptible body? It is the complying with the command, 'My son, give me thine heart;' it is the loving of the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind. This is the sum of christian perfection; it is all comprised in that one word—love. The first branch of it is the love of God; and he that loves God loves his brother also; it is inseparably connected with the second, 'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Thou shalt love every man as thy own soul, as Christ loved us. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets; these contain the whole of christian perfection.

"Another view of this is given us in the words of the great apostle, 'Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus;' for although this immediately and directly refers to the humility of our Lord, yet it may be taken in a far more extensive sense, so as to include the whole disposition of his mind; all affections of his temper, both towards God and man. Now it is certain that as there was no evil affection in him, so no good affection or temper was wanting. So that whatsoever things are holy, whatsoever things are lovely, are all included in the mind that was in Christ Jesus.

"St. Paul, when writing to the Galatians, places perfection in yet another view. It is the one individual fruit of the Spirit, which he describes thus: 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, fidelity, meekness, temperance.' What a glorious constellation of graces is here! Now suppose all these things be knit together in one, to be united together in the soul of a believer, this is christian perfection.

"Again; he writes to christians of Ephesus of putting on the new man, which is after God, created in righteousness and true holiness; and to the Colossians of the 'new man, renewed after the image of him that created him.' . . .

"St. Peter expresses it in a still different manner, though to the same effect. 'As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.' 1 Pet. 1: 15. According to this apostle, then, perfection is another name for universal holiness, inward and outward righteousness, holiness of life arising from holiness of heart. If any expressions can be stronger than these, they are those of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, 1 Epistle, 5: 23. 'The very God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may the whole of you, the spirit, the soul, and the body, (this is the literal translation) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.'

"We cannot show this sanctification in a more excellent way than by complying with the exhortation of the apostle, 'I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.' To the same effect St. Peter says, (1st Epistle 2: 5) 'Ye are a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God thro' Jesus Christ.' But what sacrifices shall we offer now, seeing the Jewish dispensation is at an end? If you have truly presented yourselves to God, you offer up to him continually all your thoughts, and words, and actions, through the Son of his love, as a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving.

"Thus you experience that he whose name is called Jesus does not bear the name in vain; that he does in fact save his people from their sins, the root as well as the branches. And this salvation from sin—from all sins—is another description of perfection, though indeed it expresses only the least, the lowest branch of it,—only the negative part of the great salvation."

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. A. Sober.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish simply to say through the Crisis, that I have removed from Grand Blanc, Genesee county, Mich., to Deerfield, Livingston county, Mich.; and my address will be, until further notice, Argentine, Genesee county, Mich. Brethren and friends will therefore take notice and direct their favors accordingly.

I am endeavoring still to warn the church and world of the judgment at hand, and kindred truths. Never, in all my experience in the Advent cause, did I feel such firm and abiding convictions of the divine origin and correctness, in the main, of the great truths we preach, than now. The signs of the times are such as to convince, it seems to me, every student of prophecy that the end of this age is nigh at hand. The nations are distressed and perplexed beyond a parallel, as Christ said they would be in the last days, as recorded by Luke; or, in Apocalyptic language, they are ANGRY. Their perplexity makes them mad, and they foam like the raging sea, and I hope the great Peace-maker will soon say, "Be still."

Rome is waning, and soon must fall to rise no more forever. The Turkish Empire is almost consumed, or "dried up." The "time of trouble" is being inaugurated, which will end in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." There are indications of speedy deliverance. Amid the general gloom and darkness of our national history and the entire world, the christian need not be alarmed; but on the contrary rejoice and sing,—

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near."

Deerfield, Mich., Aug. 26th, '62.

From P. J. Tisdale.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the privilege to write a few lines for the Crisis. I like the paper very much, and prize it next to the Bible.

There are a few in this place who love the Lord and his appearing. I belong to them. I enlisted under the banner of King Jesus some five or six years ago. Bro. P. C. Rodman was the first one to tell me about the Lord's coming. Although I was young, it sounded sweet to my ears, and I have loved it ever since. I love it even more to-day than ever.

Brethren and Sisters, lift up your heads, the great Life-giver is soon coming to reward his faithful children. By the grace of God I will be among his faithful children,

"Whene'er the archangel's trump shall sound."

May we be kept spotless and blameless until he comes, that we may be found of him in peace, and be permitted to share in the kingdom of immortal glory,

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Exeter, R. I., 1862.

From Jas. A. Purdy.

BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I have been desirous for some time past of writing a few lines to you concerning my experience. About the space of two years I neglected reading God's holy word. The different preachers I went to hear would say that men's souls were immortal, and when a man died he would fly to heaven or sink to an unknown hell. I thought, what need of a resurrection of the dead? And they would talk about a "merciful" God,—that he was casting the wicked into eternal torture, there to burn eternally. Therefore I thought if there was a God at all, there must be a wrong somewhere in teaching these erroneous ideas. I, with many more poor perishing souls, have been driven from the Savior to die the second death; but, glory be to God, to my great surprise, in the year 1860 I met with two tracts, one entitled "The Wicked not Immortal," the other "Death not Life, or the Destruction of the Wicked." Through these I was led to the pages of divine truth; and oh! what a blessing they proved to me. They explained the hidden mysteries.

I learned God's word was true from the beginning to the end. I was shown a crucified Savior and a risen Mediator. The Spirit of God arrested me, and at the expiration of three months, after a diligent search of the Scriptures, I cried unto the Lord, saying, "What shall I do to be saved?" These words came powerfully to my mind; "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I threw myself into the arms of Jesus, and found peace and rest, and was healed. Ah! I found peace in believing in Christ. When He who is our life shall appear, I hope to appear with him in glory. What a glorious promise to all that are looking for the "blessed hope," and the bright "appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "To the law and to the testimony." Our Savior says, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

O blessed day! happy hour! joyful moment! when the sight of our precious Savior first saluted the eyes of my mind and became the object of my faith. It was the beginning of days, yea, my great birth-day to happiness; and now with you, dear pilgrims, I am journeying on to the promised inheritance, expecting Jesus soon to come to destroy the wicked, replenish the earth, give immortality and eternal life to all those that endure to the end.

Three days at the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

Praise the Lord for the three days I spent at the Wilbraham Campmeeting! On arriving at the ground, and surveying the circle, I could but exclaim, "How goodly are thy tents, oh Jacob! and thy tabernacles, oh Israel!"—Num. 24: 5. The order of the meeting was as nearly perfect as possible,—not a man, woman or child did I see misbehave.

But the order at the tables during meals seemed to exceed even that; to see that campmeeting patriarch, Bro. Munger, at his post at the instant, and as soon as all were seated, to hear him ask, "Will the brethren please come to order," and then invite some brother near the centre to ask a blessing, and to observe the strict attention given by over two hundred persons, justifies all that is here said on the subject of order.

The spirit of the meeting was blessed, notwithstanding doctrinal differences known to exist on some subjects; and I was delighted to observe the deference paid to one another by brethren of opposite sentiments.

Being kindly provided with lodging by brethren of the Springfield tent, at the close of the exercises at the stand on Wed. evening, I joined them in the prayer meeting in the tent, and such an outpouring of the Spirit as we then received, reminded me of the campmeetings I attended over thirty years ago, when Methodists did not have to mourn the absence of the Holy Spirit!

Finally, to be permitted to see and worship with so many hundreds of brethren and sisters, all "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ" (Titus 2: 13), I regard as one of the greatest blessings of my christian life. And now to all that look for redemption in Jerusalem,* permit me to send this greeting.

Grace before Meat.

"One father of a household among our acquaintance,—a christian brother, too, whom we highly esteem,—mumbles his 'grace' somewhere back in his bronchial region, as if fearful some one at the table might over him. Another will pitch his voice at a key fit for a neighbor from across the way. Another dashes into his petitions like Job's war horse, in the midst of the bustle of taking seats. Another bobs down his head, and has bobbed it up again ere you are fully aware what he is at. Another mumbles along with the dead monotony of a cart on the pavements. So the number who really edify in performing this service is lamentably small. If we might be allowed to offer counsel touching the matter, we should say: Come to this devotional service as to any other devotional service, in a reverent spirit, and with the desire to religiously profit all concerned. Do not be hasty in the thanksgiving and prayer. Wait till all are seated, and the silence has become perfect. Then speak quietly, but audibly, seriously, earnestly. Do not fall into the same unvarying sound of words. Having a formula at the tongue's end, is apt to deliver the tongue from all dependance on the heart. Do not ask merely that the food may be 'blessed to the nourishment of the body,' but that, with gratitude and devotion, it may likewise be a means of grace to the soul. Do not offer an irrelevant prayer, as if forgetful of the place and occasion. Do not, the moment the last word falls from your lips, seize the knife and fork, or turn with some trifling remark to your next neighbor at the table. Let there be a pause; be as deliberate in closing as in commencing the service. Let the impression be enstamped on all listening that you seriously mean to commune with God in this service—not to recite a dry formula."

P. S. The great trouble among us is, many of our good brethren neglect this duty entirely—not more so in one locality than another. M. M.

Farewell Hymn.

Farewell, my brethren, I leave you now,
To my own country I must go,
To hear of strife, and war and blood,
But oh! my trust shall be in God.

The widow's God he says he'll be,
The promise sure is sweet to me,
So I will lean upon his word—
Blest promise does that book afford.

With you I've spent some happy hours,
O! may we meet in Eden's bowers,
To sing redemption's joyful song,
Amid that holy, happy throng.

When the archangel trump shall sound,
And wake the sleepers under ground,
We'll rise triumphant in the air,
Meet all our Father's children there.

O! then no tears will ever flow,
And we no more shall sorrow know,
For we have gained our blest abode,
And there we'll scale the mount of God.

And when on Zion's height we stand,
With harps of gold all in our hand,
We'll praise our Lord, for lo, 'tis he
Hath given us the victory!

A city fair of purest gold,
No mortal eye can e'er behold,
But saints victorious then shall see
That city bright in majesty.

The tree of life all blooming fair,
Its golden fruit none can compare;
Life's river pure, with flowing stream,—
We'll drink and never thirst again.

O! meet me on that peaceful shore,
Where parting shall be known no more;
Then farewell till we meet again,
Where Christ our King shall ever reign.

The Judge and the poor African Woman.

In one of the populous and beautiful towns on the banks of "La Belle Riviere," there dwelt a poor lone African woman. . . She was queenly in the power and beauty of her spiritual progress, though poor as poverty could make her in this world's goods. . . . .

The judge was rich and highly esteemed. He dwelt in a mansion, not so fine as to repel, not so splendid as to make him the envy of the foolish, large enough to be the social centre of the town, and plain enough to make one feel it a home. His heart was in keeping with his home, large and open.

The poor African woman lived in a cabin on an alley, all alone, without chick or child, kith or kin.

Her own hands ministered amply to her own wants while she had health, and at home or abroad at work by the day, she often earned that which found its way to India, Africa or elsewhere, in the spread of the gospel. Her home though small and poor was neat and tidy. She belonged to the church of which the judge was an officer, and often sat down with him at the table of the Lord, as she will again. O how joyously at the feast of the Bridegroom in the palace of the King. But it so happened that the judge and the African had never had any free conversation together about the things of the kingdom. He respected her. She venerated him. At last she received a severe injury from which she never recovered, and for many weary months before her death was dependent and helpless, alone and bed-ridden.

During this time the judge's ample table and abundant wardrobe had contributed its full share to the comforts of the poor woman. Never a day but she was remembered. But for a long time for one reason and another he put off from time to time a personal visit, which he yet fully purposed in his heart to make her. Until at last one day as he thought of the cheeriness of his own pleasant time, the thought of the contrast between this and the loneliness and desolation of the poor woman's cabin came into his mind, and while it heightened his gratitude for the goodness of God to him, it filled him with sadness and sympathy for her.

"Who can tell but I may cheer her a little, and perhaps by a little timely sympathy save her from repining at her hard lot? Possibly, too, I may be able to throw some light upon the rugged pathway along which she is going to the kingdom?"

The judge loved to do good; it was a great luxury to him. So, taking a well filled basket, and making sure that purse as well as scrip was stored with convenient small change, he sallied forth to visit the poor woman.

As the door opened, he was struck with the air of neatness in the cabin. If she was bed-rid, some kind hand supplied the place of hers. Everything was in order, swept and garnished neat as a pin. "Not so desolate after all," thought he.

But again, as the judge looked around, and contrasted the social joys of his own ample mansion, where the voice of children and of music, as well as the presence of books and friends made all cheerful and happy, with the cheerless solitude of the poor woman, alone here from morning till night and from night until morning, only as one or another called out of kindness to keep her from suffering, his heart filled again with sadness and sympathy.

Seating himself on the stool at the side of the poor woman's cot, he began speaking to her in words of condolence.

"It must be hard for you, Nancy, to be shut up here alone so many days and nights?"

"O, no, thank God, massa judge, the good Lord keeps me from feeling bad. I'se happy now as ever I was in all my days."

"But, Nancy, lying here from morning till night and from night till morning all alone, and racked with pain, dependent upon others for everything, do you not get tired and down-hearted, and think your lot a hard one to bear?"

"Well, I'se 'pendent on other, dat's sure, 'deed I is, an I was allers used to have something to give to de poor, an to de missionary, too, an to de minister, but den I'se no poorer dan my good Lord was when he was here in de worl, and I'se nebber suffer half so much yet as he suffer for me on de cross. I'se berry happy when I tink of dese tings."

"But, Nancy, you are all alone here."

"Yes, massa, I'se all alone, dat's true, but den Jesus is here, too, all de time. I'm nebber alone, no how, and he's good company."

"But, Nancy, how do you feel when you think about death? What if you should die here all alone some night?"

"O massa judge, I 'spect to. I 'spect nothing else, but jes to go off all alone here some night, as you say, or some day. But it's all one, night or day, to poor Nancy. And den, massa, I spec I'll not go alone, after all, for Jesus says in de blessed book 'I'll come an' take you to myself, dat where I am dar you may be also,' an' I believe Him. I'se not afraid to die alone.'

"But, Nancy, sometimes when I think of dying, I am filled with trouble. I think how bad I am, what a sinner, and how unfit for heaven. And I think now what if I should die suddenly, just as I am, what would become of me? Are you not afraid to die and go into the presence of a holy God?"

"O, no, massa, 'deed I'se not."

"Why not, Nancy?"

"O, massa, I was 'fraid; berry much. When I was fust injer, I see I must die, an' I thought how can such a sinner as I is ebber go into such a holy place as de new Jerusalem is? An' I was miseble, sure. Den, by an by, after a while, I jes' thought I must trus' myself to de blessed Jesus, to make me ready for de kingdom jus' as I did to forgib all my sins. So I found res' for my poor soul in Jesus, an sene dat time I feel somehow all better. For now, I know he will make me all ready and pure and white for de new Jerusalem above. An' now I love to think about the time when I shall come to 'pear befo' the Father's throne, wid him in glory, all starry, spagle white."

The judge sat in silence, admiring the power of grace. Not yet himself deeply affected by the light reflected from this star in disguise. A little pressure more was required, another chafing question, to bring out the ray destined to pierce his own soul.

"Well, Nancy, one thing more let me ask. Do you never complain?"

"Complain! O, massa, judge, complain, do you say, massa? Why massa! Who should such a one as I is, complain ob? The good Lor'? Why, he knows what's bes, for poor Nancy. His will be done."

Nancy said this in tones of the deepest sincerity, and a little more. There was just a shade of wonder at the question, as much as to say, What, an officer in the church, a man of education, a judge, can you think a poor creature like me might complain of the dealings of a merciful God and Savior like mine?"

The arrow took effect. The judge bowed his head in silence a moment, and then rose and bade Nancy good-bye, without the word of consolation and prayer, which he fully purposed when he went into the cabin.

All the way home he kept saying to himself, "Well, I never yet said, 'His will be done,' in that way. I never felt it. Alone, poor, helpless, bed-ridden, dependent, miserable in body, and yet happy as an angel. Ah! there is a power that I never felt. But, I must feel it, and, God helping me, I will. Not afraid to die."

Trusting Jesus to purify her from all sin, and present her spotless before God, waiting joyously his summons. O, blessed faith! I must know more of this, and I will."

Two weeks, night and day, the arrow rankled, rankled, rankled. His pain increased. Sleep forsook him, and his family became alarmed. He said nothing, but often groaned in spirit and sighed deeply. Sometimes the tears were seen to steal down his manly cheeks. All wondered, and all waited to hear what had come over the strong mind and manly heart of the judge.

At last, one day while he was bowed before God, he felt in his heart "Thy will will be done." The storm-tossed sea of his soul was suddenly calmed, and peace filled his heart—peace as a river. Now he, too, could trust Jesus to make for him his pathway on earth and fit him for heaven, and take him to it whenever and from whatever place it might please him.

It was the beginning of a new life for him—a change quite as great as at the time of his conversion, and as it has proved, the beginning of blessed things for his own family, and church and town, and for the cause of Christ generally. Consistent and steadfast before, he has been a burning and a shining light, letting his light shine far and near ever since.

He went in the fullness of wealth and education, and influence and honor, to the poor, lone, lorn African woman, to do her good if he might with either counsel or food, or clothing or money. This was the full purpose and prayer of his heart; and yet, while he gave nothing to her, he received from her what all his wealth could not purchase or all his wisdom devise.

She, poor body, had nothing to give, nor so much as ever dreamed of giving aught to any body. And yet, without a thought of it, she did give to the rich and honorable judge what was worth more to him than the wealth and honors of all the world.

And what does this illustrate to us? What but the power of spirituality? What but the power which poured upon the few illiterate fishermen of Gallilee in the Pentecostal baptism, fitted them for the reformation of the world, almost in a single generation?

Obedience to God.

Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do in anything
To do it as for thee.
All may of thee partake;
Nothing can be so mean
Which with this tincture, "For Thy sake,"
Will not grow bright and clean.
A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for God's laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

COBBETT.—This extraordinary man, alluding to the number of his "works," observed: "If any young man wishes to know the grand secret relative to the performance of such wondrous labor, it is told him in a few words: Be abstinent; be sober; go to bed at eight o'clock and get up at four—the last two being of still more importance than the two former. A full half of all that I have ever written has been written before ten o'clock in the day; so that I have had as much leisure as any man that I ever knew any thing of. If young men will but set about the thing in earnest, let them not fear of success; they will soon find that it is disagreeable to sit up or to rise late. Literary coxcombs talk of 'consuming the midnight oil.' No oil, and a very small portion of candles, have I ever consumed, and I am convinced that no writing is so good as that which comes from under the light of the sun."

FASHION.—There is only one thing more powerful than a steam engine, and that is fashion. It makes men ridiculous and women spendthrifts. It takes the human family by the nose, and leads them into captivity. It makes the Hollander wear eighteen pair of breeches at once, and causes the Englishman to wear boots so sharpened at the point that they could be used for toothpicks. It builds our churches, fills our pews, and even regulates the rights of sepulture. Fashion is a great power. What a pity it can never be enlisted on the side of common sense, early hours, goodness and economy.

FAMILY COURTESY.—Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward the members of their own family, will be rude and thoughtless to all the world. But let the family intercourse be true, tender and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood.

To be read by those who are eager to make Proselytes.—It was said by Borgia of the expedition of the French into Italy, that they came with chalk in their hands to mark out their lodgings, not with arms to force their way in. I, in like manner, would have my doctrine enter quietly into the minds that are fit and capable of receiving it; for confutations cannot be employed, when the difference is upon first principles and very notions, and even upon forms of demonstration.—Bacon, Novum Organum.

☞ Coal oil is said to be a sure destroyer of bedbugs. Apply plentifully with a small brush or feather to the places where they most do congregate. The cure is effectual and permanent. Gilt frames, chandeliers, etc., rubbed slightly over with coal oil, will not be disturbed by flies.

How to rid a barn of fleas.—Take quick lime, slack it, and sow freely. It will exterminate them in pig-sties, or any place they inhabit.

Precautions.

1. Never sleep in a room where there is any green paper on the walls, as this color is made of arsenic or lead; the former is by far the most dangerous, being scheeles green and is known positively by a drop of muriatic acid on the green leaving it white.

2. White glazed visiting-cards contain sugar of lead, and will poison a child who is tempted to chew them from the slight sweetish taste.

3. Green glazed cards used for concert tickets, are still more poisonous; a single one of them contains a grain and a half of arsenic, enough to kill a child.

4. Never put a pin in the mouth or between the teeth, for a single instant, because a sudden effort to laugh or speak, may convey it into the throat, or lungs, or stomach, causing death in a few minutes, or requiring the windpipe to be cut open to get it out; if it has passed into the stomach, it may, as it has done, cause years of suffering, ceasing only when it has made its way out of the body through the walls of the abdomen or other portion of the system.

5. It is best to have no button or string about any garment worn during the night. A long, loose night-gown is the best thing to sleep in. Many a man has facilitated an attack of apoplexy by buttoning his shirt-collar.

6. If you wake up of a cold night, and find yourself very restless, get out of bed, and standing on a piece of carpet or cloth of any kind, spend five or ten minutes in rubbing the whole body vigorously and rapidly with the hands, having previously thrown the bed clothing towards the foot of the bed so as to air both bed and body.

7. If you find that you have inadvertantly eaten too much, instead of taking something to settle the stomach, thus adding to the load under which it already labors, take a continuous walk with just enough activity to keep up a very slight moisture or perspiration of the skin, and do not stop until entirely relieved, but end your exercise in a warm room, so as to cool off very slowly.

8. Never put on a pair of new boots or shoes on a journey, especially on a visit to the city; rather wear your easiest, oldest pair, otherwise you will soon be painfully disabled.

9. A loosely-fitting boot or shoe, while traveling in winter, will keep the feet warmer, without any stockings at all, than a tight pair, over the thickest, warmest hose.

10. Riding against a cold wind, immediately after singing or speaking in public, is suicide.

11. Many public speakers have been disabled for life by speaking under a hoarseness of voice.

12. If you happen to get wet in cold weather, keep moving on foot with a rapidity sufficient to keep off a feeling of chilliness until you get into a house, and not waiting to undress, drink instantly and plentifully of hot tea of some sort; then undress, wipe dry quickly, and put on warm, dry clothing.

13. Never go to bed with cold feet, if you want to sleep well.

14. If a person faints, place him instantly flat on a bed, or floor, or earth, on his back, and quietly let him alone at least for ten minutes; if it is simply a fainting fit, the blood, flowing on a level will more speedily equalize itself throughout the system; cold water dashed in the face, or a sitting position are unnecessary and pernicious.

15. Never blow your nose, nor spit the product of a cough, nor throw a fruit-peel on the sidewalk.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Nicotine found in the Viscera of a Snufftaker.

M. Morin, of Rouen, anxious to ascertain whether nicotine could be detected in the viscera, subjected the lungs and liver of a snufftaker, who had died at seventy, to a careful analysis, and found the alkaloid just mentioned. Portions of the lungs and liver were reduced to a pulp and soaked in distilled water, slightly acidulated for the lungs with sulphuric acid, and for the liver with oxalic acid. Several days afterward, the liquor was filtered through paper free from carbonate of lime, then concentrated to a third of its volume, and filtered again to free it from the flakes which had formed. It was now once more evaporated, and treated with pure alcohol, when fresh flakes formed. The alcohol was then removed by heat after filtration. The residue was mixed with a small quantity of pure potash. On cooling, sulphuric ether was added; and after a few hours, the decanted liquor was evaporated in vacuo. The substance now obtained, having the smell and the acrid taste of nicotine, was treated by the bichloride of mercury, chloride of platinum, tannin, biniodide of potassium, the salts of copper and lead, and with all the reactions of nicotine were obtained.—Lancet.

SOME FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO, which those who use it will read and forget:—

Rees' Cyclopedia says a drop or two of the oil, placed on the tongue of a cat, produces convulsions and death in the space of a minute.

A college of physicians has said that not less than twenty thousand, in our land, annually die by the use of this poison.

Dr. Shaw names some eighty diseases, and says they may be attributed to tobacco.

Gov. Sullivan says: "My brother, Gen. Sullivan, used snuff, and his snuff lodged him prematurely in the grave."

Bocarme, of Belgium, was murdered in two minutes and a half by a little nicotine, or alkali of tobacco.

Dr. Twitchell believed that sudden deaths and tobacco, among men, were usually found together, and he sustained this opinion by an array of facts altogether conclusive.

Three young men formed a smoking club, and they all died within two years of the the time they formed it. The doctor was asked what they died of. He said they were smoked to death.

A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth, in a dram shop. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said: "It was a mysterious act of God." The minister, at the funeral, consoled the friends by saying much the same thing. Physicians said it was "heart disease," and said nothing about the cause of the disease. A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said, "Tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart; it ceased to beat, and the victim fell!

☞ A distinguished physician of Paris, Dr. Robert De Lambelle, announces that a shock of electricity given a patient dying from the effects of chloroform, immediately counteracts its influence and restores the sufferer to life.

Lo! I am with you alway.

I.

"Lo! I am with you alway." Blessed words!
Imparting strength to many a vacant heart;
Last words of Christ to those he loved on earth,—
From those who trust him he will ne'er depart.

II.

When earthly friends are powerless help to give,
We lean not on the Almighty arm in vain;
Remember he who wounds alone can heal,—
Have faith in God, and losses shall be gain.

III.

When idols from our clasping arms are torn,
To teach us not "to lay up treasures here,"
Hear Jesus, who is ever still the same,—
"Lo! I am with you." Ah! what words of cheer.

IV.

Distrust him not, though clouds are o'er thy path,
"Lo! I am with you" till the end of time;
Thy Father's discipline submissive bear,
And thou ere long shalt see his wise design.

V.

"'Lo! I am with you,' tempest-tossed and tried,
Then wherefore didst thou doubt my power to save?
Far more than Conqueror is thy Savior's might,
None shall ere perish that my Father gave."

VI.

When thou art called a heavy cross to bear,
"Lo! I am with you" makes the pilgrim strong;
Reproach and shame our Master too has borne,
What matters it if we to Christ belong?

VII.

I am with thee,—this promise thou hast known,
Dear aged pilgrim on the shores of time,
Down to hoar hairs he's safely carried thee,
And thou canst testify this covenant God is mine

IX.

"Lo! I am with you" in the last dread hour,
For "so he giveth his beloved sleep;"
Around and underneath the Almighty arms
"Our life, if hid in Christ," he'll safely keep.

"Let us go on unto Perfection."

In order to understand what the apostle meant by this injunction, it is necessary to give the Scriptures a candid and prayerful examination upon the subject. We find there are some, even among us, who do not understand the doctrine of christian perfection, and are in the fog as to what is meant by being perfect and holy, as taught by our Lord and Savior and the apostles.

As your excellent paper seems to delight in giving light to all around, I thought it would not be amiss to send you an extract from the writings of John Wesley on the subject. It will be found in the "Guide to Christian Perfection," Vol. 1, No. 1. I think Mr. Wesley gives us the doctrine of the New Testament on the point, and that clearly. GEO. BLISS.

"WHAT IS CHRISTIAN PERFECTION?

If we would successfully exhort christians to go on to perfection, we must show what that perfection is; for no one will be likely to attain to it till it be defined and laid clearly before his understanding. I do not conceive the perfection here spoken of to be the perfection of angels. As those glorious beings never left their first estate, never declined from their original perfection, . . . all their apprehension of things is clear and distinct, and their judgment always true; hence, though their knowledge is limited, (for they are creatures) though they are ignorant of innumerable things, yet they are not liable to mistake, for their knowledge is perfect in its kind. And as their affections are all constantly guided by their unerring understanding, so that all their actions are suitable thereto; so they do every moment not their own wills, but the good and acceptable will of God. Therefore it is not possible for man, whose understanding is darkened, to whom mistakes are as natural as ignorance, who cannot think at all but by the medium of organs which are weakened and depraved, like other parts of the corruptible body,—it is not possible, I say, for man always to think right, to apprehend things distinctly, and judge things truly of them. In consequence hereof, his affections depending on his understanding are variously disordered, and his words and actions are influenced more or less by the disorder both of his understanding and affections. It follows that no man while in the body can possibly attain to angelic perfection."

. . . "The highest perfection which man can attain, while in this house of our tabernacle, does not exclude ignorance and error, and a thousand other infirmities. Now from wrong judgments, wrong words and actions will necessarily flow; and in some cases, wrong affections also may spring from the same source. I may judge wrong of you: I may think more or less highly of you than I ought to think; and this mistake in my judgment may not only occasion something wrong in my behavior, but it may have a still deeper effect; it may occasion something wrong in my affections. From a wrong apprehension, I may love and esteem you either more or less than I ought. Nor can I be freed from a liableness to such a mistake, while I remain in a corruptible body. . . . Hence the best men may say from the heart—

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merits of thy death,"

for innumerable violation of Adamic as well as the angelic law. It is well therefore for us that we are not under these, but the law of love. Love is now the fulfilling of the law which is given fallen man. This is now, with respect to us, the perfect law. But even against this, through the present weakness of our understanding, we are continually liable to transgress. Therefore, every man living needs the blood of atonement, or he could not stand before God."

"What is, then, the perfection of which man is capable, while he dwells in a corruptible body? It is the complying with the command, 'My son, give me thine heart;' it is the loving of the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind. This is the sum of christian perfection; it is all comprised in that one word—LOVE. The first branch of it is the love of God; and he that loves God loves his brother also; it is inseparably connected with the second, 'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Thou shalt love every man as thy own soul—as Christ loved us. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets; these contain the whole of christian perfection."

"Another view of this is given us in the words of the great apostle, 'Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus;' for although this immediately and directly refers to the humility of our Lord, yet it may be taken in a far more extensive sense, so as to include the whole disposition of his mind; all affections of his temper, both towards God and man. Now it is certain that as there was no evil affection in him, so no good affection or temper was wanting. So that whatsoever things are holy, whatsoever things are lovely, are all included in the mind that was in Christ Jesus.

"St. Paul, when writing to the Galatians, places perfection in yet another view. It is the one individual fruit of the Spirit, which he describes thus: 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, fidelity, meekness, temperance.' What a glorious constellation of graces is here! Now suppose all these things be knit together in one, to be united together in the soul of a believer, this is christian perfection.

"Again; he writes to christians of Ephesus of putting on the new man, which is after God, created in righteousness and true holiness; and to the Colossians of the 'new man, renewed after the image of him that created him.' . . .

"St. Peter expresses it in a still different manner, though to the same effect. 'As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.' 1 Pet. 1: 15. According to this apostle, then, perfection is another name for universal holiness, inward and outward righteousness, holiness of life arising from holiness of heart. If any expressions can be stronger than these, they are those of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, 1 Epistle, 5: 23. The very God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may the whole of you, the spirit, the soul, and the body, (this is the literal translation) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"We cannot show this sanctification in a more excellent way than by complying with the exhortation of the apostle, 'I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.' To the same effect St. Peter says, (1st Epistle 2: 5) 'Ye are a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God thro' Jesus Christ.' But what sacrifices shall we offer now, seeing the Jewish dispensation is at an end? If you have truly presented yourselves to God, you offer up to him continually all your thoughts, and words, and actions, through the Son of his love, as a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving.

"Thus you experience that he whose name is called Jesus does not bear the name in vain, that he does in fact save his people from their sins, the root as well as the branches. And this salvation from sin—from all sins—is another description of perfection, though indeed it expresses only the least, the lowest branch of it,—only the negative part of the great salvation."

From Bro. J. A. Sober.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish simply to say through the Crisis, that I have removed from Grand Blanc, Genesee county, Mich., to Deerfield, Livingston county, Mich.; and my address will be, until further notice, Argentine, Genesee county, Mich. Brethren and friends will therefore take notice and direct their favors accordingly.

I am endeavoring still to warn the church and world of the judgment at hand, and kindred truths. Never, in all my experience in the Advent cause, did I feel such firm and abiding convictions of the divine origin and correctness, in the main, of the great truths we preach, than now. The signs of the times are such as to convince, it seems to me, every student of prophecy that the end of this age is nigh at hand. The nations are distressed and perplexed beyond a parallel, as Christ said they would be in the last days, as recorded by Luke; or, in Apocalyptic language, they are ANGRY. Their perplexity makes them mad, and they foam like the raging sea, and I hope the great Peace-maker will soon say, "Be still."

Rome is waning, and soon must fall to rise no more forever. The Turkish Empire is almost consumed, or "dried up." The "time of trouble" is being inaugurated, which will end in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." There are indications of speedy deliverance. Amid the general gloom and darkness of our national history and the entire world, the christian need not be alarmed; but on the contrary rejoice and sing,—

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near."

Deerfield, Mich., Aug. 26th, '62.

From P. J. Tisdale.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the privilege to write a few lines for the Crisis. I like the paper very much, and prize it next to the Bible.

There are a few in this place who love the Lord and his appearing. I belong to them. I enlisted under the banner of King Jesus some five or six years ago. Bro. P. C. Rodman was the first one to tell me about the Lord's coming. Although I was young, it sounded sweet to my ears, and I have loved it ever since. I love it even more to-day than ever.

Brethren and Sisters, lift up your heads, the great Life-giver is soon coming to reward his faithful children. By the grace of God I will be among his faithful children,

"Whene'er the archangel's trump shall sound."

May we be kept spotless and blameless until he comes, that we may be found of him in peace, and be permitted to share in the kingdom of immortal glory,

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Exeter, R. I., 1862.

From Jas. A. Purdy.

BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I have been desirous for some time past of writing a few lines to you concerning my experience. About the space of two years I neglected reading God's holy word. The different preachers I went to hear would say that men's souls were immortal, and when a man died he would fly to heaven or sink to an unknown hell. I thought, what need of a resurrection of the dead? And they would talk about a "merciful" God,—that he was casting the wicked into eternal torture, there to burn eternally. Therefore I thought if there was a God at all, there must be a wrong somewhere in teaching these erroneous ideas. I, with many more poor perishing souls, have been driven from the Savior to die the second death; but, glory be to God, to my great surprise, in the year 1860 I met with two tracts, one entitled "The Wicked not Immortal," the other "Death not Life, or the Destruction of the Wicked." Through these I was led to the pages of divine truth; and oh! what a blessing they proved to me. They explained the hidden mysteries.

I learned God's word was true from the beginning to the end. I was shown a crucified Savior and a risen Mediator. The Spirit of God arrested me, and at the expiration of three months, after a diligent search of the Scriptures, I cried unto the Lord, saying, "What shall I do to be saved?" These words came powerfully to my mind, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I threw myself into the arms of Jesus, and found peace and rest, and was healed. Ah! I found peace in believing in Christ. When He who is our life shall appear, I hope to appear with him in glory. What a glorious promise to all that are looking for the "blessed hope," and the bright "appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "To the law and to the testimony." Our Savior says, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

O blessed day! happy hour! joyful moment! when the sight of our precious Savior first saluted the eyes of my mind and became the object of my faith. It was the beginning of days, yea, my great birth-day to happiness; and now with you, dear pilgrims, I am journeying on to the promised inheritance, expecting Jesus soon to come to destroy the wicked, replenish the earth, give immortality and eternal life to all those that endure to the end.

Three days at the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

Praise the Lord for the three days I spent at the Wilbraham Campmeeting! On arriving at the ground, and surveying the circle, I could but exclaim, "How goodly are thy tents, oh Jacob! and thy tabernacles, oh Israel!"—Num. 24: 5. The order of the meeting was as nearly perfect as possible,—not a man, woman or child did I see misbehave.

But the order at the tables during meals seemed to exceed even that; to see that campmeeting patriarch, Bro. Munger, at his post at the instant, and as soon as all were seated, to hear him ask, "Will the brethren please come to order," and then invite some brother near the centre to ask a blessing, and to observe the strict attention given by over two hundred persons, justifies all that is here said on the subject of order.

The spirit of the meeting was blessed, notwithstanding doctrinal differences known to exist on some subjects; and I was delighted to observe the deference paid to one another by brethren of opposite sentiments.

Being kindly provided with lodging by brethren of the Springfield tent, at the close of the exercises at the stand on Wed. evening, I joined them in the prayer meeting in the tent; and such an outpouring of the Spirit as we then received, reminded me of the campmeetings I attended over thirty years ago, when Methodists did not have to mourn the absence of the Holy Spirit!

Finally, to be permitted to see and worship with so many hundreds of brethren and sisters, all "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ" (Titus 2: 13), I regard as one of the greatest blessings of my christian life. And now to all that look for redemption in Jerusalem,* permit me to send this greeting.

Grace before Meat.

"One father of a household among our acquaintance,—a christian brother, too, whom we highly esteem,—mumbles his 'grace' somewhere back in his bronchial region, as if fearful some one at the table might over him. Another will pitch his voice at a key fit for calling a neighbor from across the way. Another dashes into his petitions like Job's war horses, in the midst of the bustle of taking seats. Another bobs down his head, and has bobbed it up again ere you are fully aware what he is at. Another mumbles along with the dead monotony of a cart on the pavements. So the number who really edify in performing this service is lamentably small. If we might be allowed to offer counsel touching the matter, we should say: Come to this devotional service as to any other devotional service, in a reverent spirit, and with the desire to religiously profit all concerned. Do not be hasty in the thanksgiving and prayer. Wait till all are seated, and the silence has become perfect. Then speak quietly, but audibly, seriously, earnestly. Do not fall into the same unvarying sound of words. Having a formula at the tongue's end, is apt to deliver the tongue from all dependance on the heart. Do not ask merely that the food may be 'blessed to the nourishment of the body,' but that, with gratitude and devotion, it may likewise be a means of grace to the soul. Do not offer an irrelevant prayer, as if forgetful of the place and occasion. Do not, the moment the last word falls from your lips, seize the knife and fork, or turn with some trifling remark to your next neighbor at the table. Let there be a pause; be as deliberate in closing as in commencing the service. Let the impression be enstamped on all listening that you seriously mean to commune with God in this service—not to recite a dry formula."

P. S. The great trouble among us is, many of our good brethren neglect this duty entirely—not more so in one locality than another. M. M.

Farewell Hymn.

Farewell, my brethren, I leave you now,
To my own country I must go,
To hear of strife, and war and blood,
But oh! my trust shall be in God

The widow's God he says he'll be,
The promise sure is sweet to me,
So I will lean upon his word—
Blest promise does that book afford

With you I've spent some happy hours,
O! may we meet in Eden's bowers,
To sing redemption's joyful song,
Amid that holy, happy throng

When the archangel trump shall sound,
And wake the sleepers under ground,
We'll rise triumphant in the air,
Meet all our Father's children there.

O! then no tears will ever flow,
And we no more shall sorrow know,
For we have gained our blest abode,
And there we'll scale the mount of God.

And when on Zion's height we stand,
With harps of gold all in our hand,
We'll praise our Lord, for lo, 'tis he
Hath given us the victory!

A city fair of purest gold,
No mortal eye can e'er behold,
But saints victorious then shall see
That city bright in majesty.

The tree of life all blooming fair,
Its golden fruit none can compare,
Life's river pure, with flowing stream,—
We'll drink and never thirst again.

O! meet me on that peaceful shore,
Where parting shall be known no more;
Then farewell till we meet again,
Where Christ our King shall ever reign

Selections.

The Judge and the poor African Woman.

In one of the populous and beautiful towns on the banks of "La Belle Riviere," there dwelt a poor lone African woman. . . She was queenly in the power and beauty of her spiritual progress, though poor as poverty could make her in this world's goods. . . . .

The judge was rich and highly esteemed. He dwelt in a mansion, not so fine as to repel, not so splendid as to make him the envy of the foolish, large enough to be the social centre of the town, and plain enough to make one feel it a home. His heart was in keeping with his home, large and open.

The poor African woman lived in a cabin on an alley, all alone, without chick or child, kith or kin.

Her own hands ministered amply to her own wants while she had health, and at home or abroad at work by the day, she often earned that which found its way to India, Africa or elsewhere, in the spread of the gospel. Her home though small and poor was neat and tidy. She belonged to the church of which the judge was an officer, and often sat down with him at the table of the Lord, as she will again. O how joyously at the feast of the Bridegroom in the palace of the King. But it so happened that the judge and the African had never had any free conversation together about the things of the kingdom. He respected her. She venerated him. At last she received a severe injury from which she never recovered, and for many weary months before her death was dependent and helpless, alone and bed-ridden.

During this time the judge's ample table and abundant wardrobe had contributed its full share to the comforts of the poor woman. Never a day but she was remembered. But for a long time for one reason and another he put off from time to time a personal visit, which he yet fully purposed in his heart to make her. Until at last one day as he thought of the cheeriness of his own pleasant time, the thought of the contrast between this and the loneliness and desolation of the poor woman's cabin came into his mind, and while it heightened his gratitude for the goodness of God to him, it filled him with sadness and sympathy for her.

"Who can tell but I may cheer her a little, and perhaps by a little timely sympathy save her from repining at her hard lot? Possibly, too, I may be able to throw some light upon the rugged pathway along which she is going to the kingdom?"

The judge loved to do good; it was a great luxury to him. So, taking a well filled basket, and making sure that purse as well as scrip was stored with convenient small change, he sallied forth to visit the poor woman.

As the door opened, he was struck with the air of neatness in the cabin. If she was bed-rid, some kind hand supplied the place of her's. Everything was in order, swept and garnished neat as a pin. "Not so desolate after all," thought he.

But again, as the judge looked around, and contrasted the social joys of his own ample mansion, where the voice of children and of music, as well as the presence of books and friends made all cheerful and happy, with the cheerless solitude of the poor woman, alone here from morning till night and from night until morning, only as one or another called out of kindness to keep her from suffering, his heart filled again with sadness and sympathy.

Seating himself on the stool at the side of the poor woman's cot, he began speaking to her in words of condolence.

"It must be hard for you, Nancy, to be shut up here alone so many days and nights?"

"O, no, thank God, massa judge, the good Lord keeps me from feeling bad. I'se happy now as ever I was in all my days."

"But, Nancy, lying here from morning till night and from night till morning all alone, and racked with pain, dependent upon others for everything, do you not get tired and down-hearted, and think your lot a hard one to bear?"

"Well, I'se 'pendent on other, dat's sure, 'deed I is, an I was allers used to have something to give to de poor, an to de missionary, too, an to de minister, but den I'se no poorer dan my good Lord was when he was here in de worl, and I'se nebber suffer half so much yet as he suffer for me on de cross. I'se berry happy when I tink of dese tings."

"But, Nancy, you are all alone here."

"Yes, massa, I'se all alone, dat's true, but den Jesus is here, too, all de time. I'm nebber alone, no how, and he's good company."

"But, Nancy, how do you feel when you think about death? What if you should die here all alone some night?"

"O massa judge, I 'spect to. I 'spect nothing else, but jes to go off all alone here some night, as you say, or some day. But it's all one, night or day, to poor Nancy. And den, massa, I spec I'll not go alone, after all, for Jesus says in de blessed book 'I'll come an' take you to myself, dat where I am dar you may be also,' an' I believe Him. I'se not afraid to die alone.'

"But, Nancy, sometimes when I think of dying, I am filled with trouble. I think how bad I am, what a sinner, and how unfit for heaven. And I think now what if I should die suddenly, just as I am, what would become of me? Are you not afraid to die and go into the presence of a holy God?"

"O, no, massa, 'deed I'se not."

"Why not, Nancy?"

"O, massa, I was 'fraid; berry much. When I was fust injer, I see I must die, an' I thought how can such a sinner as I is ebber go into such a holy place as de new Jerusalem is? An' I was miseble, sure. Den, by an by, after a while, I jes' thought I must trus' myself to de blessed Jesus, to make me ready for de kingdom jus' as I did to forgib all my sins. So I found res' for my poor soul in Jesus, an sene dat time I feel somehow all better. For now, I know he will make me all ready and pure and white for de new Jerusalem above. An' now I love to think about the time when I shall come to 'pear befo' the Father's throne, wid him in glory, all starry, spagle white."

The judge sat in silence, admiring the power of grace. Not yet himself deeply affected by the light reflected from this star in disguise. A little pressure more was required, another chafing question, to bring out the ray destined to pierce his own soul.

"Well, Nancy, one thing more let me ask. Do you never complain?"

"Complain! O, massa, judge, complain, do you say, massa? Why massa! Who should such a one as I is, complain ob? The good Lor'? Why, he knows what's bes, for poor Nancy. His will be done."

Nancy said this in tones of the deepest sincerity, and a little more. There was just a shade of wonder at the question, as much as to say, What, an officer in the church, a man of education, a judge, can you think a poor creature like me might complain of the dealings of a merciful God and Savior like mine?"

The arrow took effect. The judge bowed his head in silence a moment, and then rose and bade Nancy good-bye, without the word of consolation and prayer, which he fully purposed when he went into the cabin.

All the way home he kept saying to himself, "Well, I never yet said, 'His will be done,' in that way. I never felt it. Alone, poor, helpless, bed-ridden, dependent, miserable in body, and yet happy as an angel. Ah! there is a power that I never felt. But, I must feel it, and, God helping me, I will. Not afraid to die."

Trusting Jesus to purify her from all sin, and present her spotless before God, waiting joyously his summons. O, blessed faith! I must know more of this, and I will!"

Two weeks, night and day, the arrow rankled, rankled, rankled. His pain increased. Sleep forsook him, and his family became alarmed. He said nothing, but often groaned in spirit and sighed deeply. Sometimes the tears were seen to steal down his manly cheeks. All wondered, and all waited to hear what had come over the strong mind and manly heart of the judge.

At last, one day while he was bowed before God, he felt in his heart "Thy will will be done." The storm-tossed sea of his soul was suddenly calmed, and peace filled his heart—peace as a river. Now he, too, could trust Jesus to make for him his pathway on earth and fit him for heaven, and take him to it whenever and from whatever place it might please him.

It was the beginning of a new life for him—a change quite as great as at the time of his conversion, and as it has proved, the beginning of blessed things for his own family, and church and town, and for the cause of Christ generally. Consistent and steadfast before, he has been a burning and a shining light, letting his light shine far and near ever since.

He went in the fullness of wealth and education, and influence and honor, to the poor, lone, lorn African woman, to do her good if he might with either counsel or food, or clothing or money. This was the full purpose and prayer of his heart; and yet, while he gave nothing to her, he received from her what all his wealth could not purchase or all his wisdom devise.

She, poor body, had nothing to give, nor so much as ever dreamed of giving aught to any body. And yet, without a thought of it, she did give to the rich and honorable judge what was worth more to him than the wealth and honors of all the world.

And what does this illustrate to us? What but the power of spirituality? What but the power which poured upon the few illiterate fishermen of Gallilee in the Pentecostal baptism, fitted them for the reformation of the world, almost in a single generation?

Obedience to God.

Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do in anything
To do it as for thee.
All may of thee partake;
Nothing can be so mean
Which with this tincture, "For Thy sake,"
Will not grow bright and clean.
A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for God's laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

COBBETT.—This extraordinary man, alluding to the number of his "works," observed: "If any young man wishes to know the grand secret relative to the performance of such wondrous labor, it is told him in a few words: Be abstinent; be sober; go to bed at eight o'clock and get up at four—the last two being of still more importance than the two former. A full half of all that I have ever written has been written before ten o'clock in the day; so that I have had as much leisure as any man that I ever knew any thing of. If young men will but set about the thing in earnest, let them not fear of success; they will soon find that it is disagreeable to sit up or to rise late. Literary coxcombs talk of 'consuming the midnight oil.' No oil, and a very small portion of candles, have I ever consumed, and I am convinced that no writing is so good as that which comes from under the light of the sun."

FASHION.—There is only one thing more powerful than a steam engine, and that is fashion. It makes men ridiculous and women spendthrifts. It takes the human family by the nose, and leads them into captivity. It makes the Hollander wear eighteen pair of breeches at once, and causes the Englishman to wear boots so sharpened at the point that they could be used for toothpicks. It builds our churches, fills our pews, and even regulates the rights of sepulture. Fashion is a great power. What a pity it can never be enlisted on the side of common sense, early hours, goodness and economy.

FAMILY COURTESY.—Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward the members of their own family, will be rude and thoughtless to all the world. But let the family intercourse be true, tender and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood.

To be read by those who are eager to make Proselytes.—It was said by Borgia of the expedition of the French into Italy, that they came with chalk in their hands to mark out their lodgings, not with arms to force their way in. I, in like manner, would have my doctrine enter quietly into the minds that are fit and capable of receiving it; for confutations cannot be employed, when the difference is upon first principles and very notions, and even upon forms of demonstration.—Bacon, Novum Organum.

☞ Coal oil is said to be a sure destroyer of bedbugs. Apply plentifully with a small brush or feather to the places where they most do congregate. The cure is effectual and permanent. Gilt frames, chandeliers, etc., rubbed slightly over with coal oil, will not be disturbed by flies.

How to rid a barn of fleas.—Take quick lime, slack it, and sow freely. It will exterminate them in pig-sties, or any place they inhabit.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH"—Paul.

Precautions.

1. Never sleep in a room where there is any green paper on the walls, as this color is made of arsenic or lead; the former is by far the most dangerous, being scheeles green, and is known positively by a drop of muriatic acid on the green leaving it white.

2. White glazed visiting-cards contain sugar of lead, and will poison a child who is tempted to chew them from the slight sweetish taste.

3. Green glazed cards used for concert tickets, are still more poisonous; a single one of them contains a grain and a half of arsenic, enough to kill a child.

4. Never put a pin in the mouth or between the teeth, for a single instant, because a sudden effort to laugh or speak, may convey it into the throat, or lungs, or stomach, causing death in a few minutes, or requiring the windpipe to be cut open to get it out; if it has passed into the stomach, it may, as it has done, cause years of suffering, ceasing only when it has made its way out of the body through the walls of the abdomen or other portion of the system.

5. It is best to have no button or string about any garment worn during the night. A long, loose night-gown is the best thing to sleep in. Many a man has facilitated an attack of apoplexy by buttoning his shirt-collar.

6. If you wake up of a cold night, and find yourself very restless, get out of bed, and standing on a piece of carpet or cloth of any kind, spend five or ten minutes in rubbing the whole body vigorously and rapidly with the hands, having previously thrown the bed clothing towards the foot of the bed so as to air both bed and body.

7. If you find that you have inadvertantly eaten too much, instead of taking something to settle the stomach, thus adding to the load under which it already labors, take a continuous walk with just enough activity to keep up a very slight moisture or perspiration on the skin, and do not stop until entirely relieved, but end your exercise in a warm room, so as to cool off very slowly.

8. Never put on a pair of new boots or shoes on a journey, especially on a visit to the city; rather wear your easiest, oldest pair, otherwise you will soon be painfully disabled.

9. A loosely-fitting boot or shoe, while traveling in winter, will keep the feet warmer, without any stockings at all, than a tight pair, over the thickest, warmest hose.

10. Riding against a cold wind, immediately after singing or speaking in public, is suicide.

11. Many public speakers have been disabled for life by speaking under a hoarseness of voice.

12. If you happen to get wet in cold weather, keep moving on foot with a rapidity sufficient to keep off a feeling of chilliness until you get into a house, and not waiting to undress, drink instantly and plentifully of hot tea of some sort; then undress, wipe dry quickly, and put on warm, dry clothing.

13. Never go to bed with cold feet, if you want to sleep well.

14. If a person faints, place him instantly flat on a bed, or floor, or earth, on his back, and quietly let him alone at least for ten minutes; if it is simply a fainting fit, the blood, flowing on a level will more speedily equalize itself throughout the system; cold water dashed in the face, or a sitting position are unnecessary and pernicious.

15. Never blow your nose, nor spit the product of a cough, nor throw a fruit-peel on the sidewalk.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Nicotine found in the Viscera of a Snufftaker.

M. Morin, of Rouen, anxious to ascertain whether nicotine could be detected in the viscera, subjected the lungs and liver of a snufftaker, who had died at seventy, to a careful analysis, and found the alkaloid just mentioned. Portions of the lungs and liver were reduced to a pulp and soaked in distilled water, slightly acidulated for the lungs with sulphuric acid, and for the liver with oxalic acid. Several days afterward, the liquor was filtered through paper free from carbonate of lime, then concentrated to a third of its volume, and filtered again to free it from the flakes which had formed. It was now once more evaporated, and treated with pure alcohol, when fresh flakes formed. The alcohol was then removed by heat after filtration. The residue was mixed with a small quantity of pure potash. On cooling, sulphuric ether was added; and after a few hours, the decanted liquor was evaporated in vacuo. The substance now obtained, having the smell and the acrid taste of nicotine, was treated by the bichloride of mercury, chloride of platinum, tannin, biniodide of potassium, the salts of copper and lead, and with all the reactions of nicotine were obtained.—Lancet.

SOME FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO, which those who use it will read and forget:—

Rees' Cyclopedia says a drop or two of the oil, placed on the tongue of a cat, produces convulsions and death in the space of a minute.

A college of physicians has said that not less than twenty thousand, in our land, annually die by the use of this poison.

Dr. Shaw names some eighty diseases, and says they may be attributed to tobacco.

Gov. Sullivan says: "My brother, Gen. Sullivan, used snuff, and his snuff lodged him prematurely in the grave."

Bocarme, of Belgium, was murdered in two minutes and a half by a little nicotine, or alkali of tobacco.

Dr. Twitchell believed that sudden deaths and tobacco, among men, were usually found together, and he sustained this opinion by an array of facts altogether conclusive.

Three young men formed a smoking club, and they all died within two years of the the time they formed it. The doctor was asked what they died of. He said they were smoked to death.

A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth, in a dram shop. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said: "It was a mysterious act of God." The minister, at the funeral, consoled the friends by saying much the same thing. Physicians said it was "heart disease," and said nothing about the cause of the disease. A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said, "Tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart; it ceased to beat, and the victim fell!

☞ A distinguished physician of Paris, Dr. Robert De Lambelle, announces that a shock of electricity given a patient dying from the effects of chloroform, immediately counteracts its influence and restores the sufferer to life.

Lo! I am with you alway.

I.

"Lo! I am with you alway." Blessed words!
Imparting strength to many a vacant heart;
Last words of Christ to those he loved on earth,—
From those who trust him he will ne'er depart.

II.

When earthly friends are powerless help to give,
We lean not on the Almighty arm in vain;
Remember he who wounds alone can heal,—
Have faith in God, and losses shall be gain.

III.

When idols from our clasping arms are torn,
To teach us not "to lay up treasures here,"
Hear Jesus, who is ever still the same,—
"Lo! I am with you." Ah! what words of cheer.

IV.

Distrust him not, though clouds are o'er thy path,
"Lo! I am with you" till the end of time;
Thy Father's discipline submissive bear,
And thou ere long shalt see his wise design.

V.

"Lo! I am with you,' tempest-tossed and tried,
Then wherefore didst thou doubt my power to save?
Far more than Conqueror is thy Savior's might,
None shall ere perish that my Father gave."

VI.

When thou art called a heavy cross to bear,
"Lo! I am with you" makes the pilgrim strong,
Reproach and shame our Master too has borne,
What matters it if we to Christ belong?

VII.

I am with thee,—this promise thou hast known,
Dear aged pilgrim on the shores of time,
Down to hoar hairs he's safely carried thee,
And thou canst testify this covenant God is mine

IX.

"Lo! I am with you" in the last dread hour,
For "so he giveth his beloved sleep;"
Around and underneath the Almighty arms
"Our life, if hid in Christ," he'll safely keep

AMY.

"Let us go on unto Perfection."

In order to understand what the apostle meant by this injunction, it is necessary to give the Scriptures a candid and prayerful examination upon the subject. We find there are some, even among us, who do not understand the doctrine of christian perfection, and are in the fog as to what is meant by being perfect and holy, as taught by our Lord and Savior and the apostles.

As your excellent paper seems to delight in giving light to all around, I thought it would not be amiss to send you an extract from the writings of John Wesley on the subject. It will be found in the "Guide to Christian Perfection," Vol. 1, No. 1. I think Mr. Wesley gives us the doctrine of the New Testament on the point, and that clearly. GEO. BLISS.

"WHAT IS CHRISTIAN PERFECTION?

If we would successfully exhort christians to go on to perfection, we must show what that perfection is; for no one will be likely to attain to it till it be defined and laid clearly before his understanding. I do not conceive the perfection here spoken of to be the perfection of angels. As those glorious beings never left their first estate, never declined from their original perfection, . . . all their apprehension of things is clear and distinct, and their judgment always true; hence, though their knowledge is limited, (for they are creatures) though they are ignorant of innumerable things, yet they are not liable to mistake, for their knowledge is perfect in its kind. And as their affections are all constantly guided by their unerring understanding, so that all their actions are suitable thereto; so they do every moment not their own wills, but the good and acceptable will of God. Therefore it is not possible for man, whose understanding is darkened, to whom mistakes are as natural as ignorance, who cannot think at all but by the medium of organs which are weakened and depraved, like other parts of the corruptible body,—it is not possible, I say, for man always to think right, to apprehend things distinctly, and judge things truly of them. In consequence hereof, his affections depending on his understanding are variously disordered, and his words and actions are influenced more or less by the disorder both of his understanding and affections. It follows that no man while in the body can possibly attain to angelic perfection."

. . . "The highest perfection which man can attain, while in this house of our tabernacle, does not exclude ignorance and error, and a thousand other infirmities. Now from wrong judgments, wrong words and actions will necessarily flow; and in some cases, wrong affections also may spring from the same source. I may judge wrong of you: I may think more or less highly of you than I ought to think; and this mistake in my judgment may not only occasion something wrong in my behavior, but it may have a still deeper effect, it may occasion something wrong in my affections. From a wrong apprehension, I may love and esteem you either more or less than I ought. Nor can I be freed from a liableness to such a mistake, while I remain in a corruptible body. . . . Hence the best men may say from the heart—

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merits of thy death,"

for innumerable violation of Adamic as well as the angelic law. It is well therefore for us that we are not under these, but the law of love. Love is now the fulfilling of the law which is given fallen man. This is now, with respect to us, the perfect law. But even against this, through the present weakness of our understanding, we are continually liable to transgress. Therefore, every man living needs the blood of atonement, or he could not stand before God."

"What is, then, the perfection of which man is capable, while he dwells in a corruptible body? It is the complying with the command, 'My son, give me thine heart;' it is the loving of the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind. This is the sum of christian perfection; it is all comprised in that one word—LOVE. The first branch of it is the love of God; and he that loves God loves his brother also; it is inseparably connected with the second, 'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Thou shalt love every man as thy own soul—as Christ loved us. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets; these contain the whole of christian perfection.

"Another view of this is given us in the words of the great apostle, 'Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:' for although this immediately and directly refers to the humility of our Lord, yet it may be taken in a far more extensive sense, so as to include the whole disposition of his mind; all affections of his temper, both towards God and man. Now it is certain that as there was no evil affection in him, so no good affection or temper was wanting. So that whatsoever things are holy, whatsoever things are lovely, are all included in the mind that was in Christ Jesus.

"St. Paul, when writing to the Galatians, places perfection in yet another view. It is the one individual fruit of the Spirit, which he describes thus: 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, fidelity, meekness, temperance.' What a glorious constellation of graces is here! Now suppose all these things be knit together in one, to be united together in the soul of a believer, this is christian perfection.

"Again; he writes to christians of Ephesus of putting on the new man, which is after God, created in righteousness and true holiness; and to the Colossians of the 'new man, renewed after the image of him that created him.'. . . .

"St. Peter expresses it in a still different manner, though to the same effect. 'As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.' 1 Pet. 1: 15. According to this apostle, then, perfection is another name for universal holiness, inward and outward righteousness, holiness of life arising from holiness of heart. If any expressions can be stronger than these, they are those of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, 1 Epistle, 5: 23. The very God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may the whole of you, the spirit, the soul, and the body, (this is the literal translation) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"We cannot show this sanctification in a more excellent way than by complying with the exhortation of the apostle, 'I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.' To the same effect St. Peter says, (1st Epistle 2: 5) 'Ye are a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God thro' Jesus Christ.' But what sacrifices shall we offer now, seeing the Jewish dispensation is at an end? If you have truly presented yourselves to God, you offer up to him continually all your thoughts, and words, and actions, through the Son of his love, as a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving.

"Thus you experience that he whose name is called Jesus does not bear the name in vain; that he does in fact save his people from their sins, the root as well as the branches. And this salvation from sin—from all sins—is another description of perfection, though indeed it expresses only the least, the lowest branch of it,—only the negative part of the great salvation."

From Bro. J. A. Sober.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish simply to say through the Crisis, that I have removed from Grand Blanc, Genesee county, Mich., to Deerfield, Livingston county, Mich.; and my address will be, until further notice, Argentine, Genesee county, Mich. Brethren and friends will therefore take notice and direct their favors accordingly.

I am endeavoring still to warn the church and world of the judgment at hand, and kindred truths. Never, in all my experience in the Advent cause, did I feel such firm and abiding convictions of the divine origin and correctness, in the main, of the great truths we preach, than now. The signs of the times are such as to convince, it seems to me, every student of prophecy that the end of this age is nigh at hand. The nations are distressed and perplexed beyond a parallel, as Christ said they would be in the last days, as recorded by Luke; or, in Apocalyptic language, they are ANGRY. Their perplexity makes them mad, and they foam like the raging sea, and I hope the great Peace-maker will soon say, "Be still."

Rome is waning, and soon must fall to rise no more forever. The Turkish Empire is almost consumed, or "dried up." The "time of trouble" is being inaugurated, which will end in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." There are indications of speedy deliverance. Amid the general gloom and darkness of our national history and the entire world, the christian need not be alarmed; but on the contrary rejoice and sing,—

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near."

Deerfield, Mich., Aug. 26th, '62.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the privilege to write a few lines for the Crisis. I like the paper very much, and prize it next to the Bible.

There are a few in this place who love the Lord and his appearing. I belong to them. I enlisted under the banner of King Jesus some five or six years ago. Bro. P. C. Rodman was the first one to tell me about the Lord's coming. Although I was young, it sounded sweet to my ears, and I have loved it ever since. I love it even more to-day than ever.

Brethren and Sisters, lift up your heads, the great Life-giver is soon coming to reward his faithful children. By the grace of God I will be among his faithful children,

"Whene'er the archangel's trump shall sound."

May we be kept spotless and blameless until he comes, that we may be found of him in peace, and be permitted to share in the kingdom of immortal glory,

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Exeter, R. I., 1862.

From Jas. A. Purdy.

BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I have been desirous for some time past of writing a few lines to you concerning my experience. About the space of two years I neglected reading God's holy word. The different preachers I went to hear would say that men's souls were immortal, and when a man died he would fly to heaven or sink to an unknown hell. I thought, what need of a resurrection of the dead? And they would talk about a "merciful" God,—that he was casting the wicked into eternal torture, there to burn eternally. Therefore I thought if there was a God at all, there must be a wrong somewhere in teaching these erroneous ideas. I, with many more poor perishing souls, have been driven from the Savior to die the second death; but, glory be to God, to my great surprise, in the year 1860 I met with two tracts, one entitled "The Wicked not Immortal," the other "Death not Life, or the Destruction of the Wicked." Through these I was led to the pages of divine truth; and oh! what a blessing they proved to me. They explained the hidden mysteries.

I learned God's word was true from the beginning to the end. I was shown a crucified Savior and a risen Mediator. The Spirit of God arrested me, and at the expiration of three months, after a diligent search of the Scriptures, I cried unto the Lord, saying, "What shall I do to be saved?" These words came powerfully to my mind; "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I threw myself into the arms of Jesus, and found peace and rest, and was healed. Ah! I found peace in believing in Christ. When He who is our life shall appear, I hope to appear with him in glory. What a glorious promise to all that are looking for the "blessed hope," and the bright "appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "To the law and to the testimony." Our Savior says, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

O blessed day! happy hour! joyful moment! when the sight of our precious Savior first saluted the eyes of my mind and became the object of my faith. It was the beginning of days, yea, my great birth-day to happiness; and now with you, dear pilgrims, I am journeying on to the promised inheritance, expecting Jesus soon to come to destroy the wicked, replenish the earth, give immortality and eternal life to all those that endure to the end.

Three days at the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

Praise the Lord for the three days I spent at the Wilbraham Campmeeting! On arriving at the ground, and surveying the circle, I could but exclaim, "How goodly are thy tents, oh Jacob! and thy tabernacles, oh Israel!"—Num. 24: 5. The order of the meeting was as nearly perfect as possible,—not a man, woman or child did I see misbehave.

But the order at the tables during meals seemed to exceed even that; to see that campmeeting patriarch, Bro. Munger, at his post at the instant, and as soon as all were seated, to hear him ask, "Will the brethren please come to order," and then invite some brother near the centre to ask a blessing, and to observe the strict attention given by over two hundred persons, justifies all that is here said on the subject of order.

The spirit of the meeting was blessed, notwithstanding doctrinal differences known to exist on some subjects; and I was delighted to observe the deference paid to one another by brethren of opposite sentiments.

Being kindly provided with lodging by brethren of the Springfield tent, at the close of the exercises at the stand on Wed. evening, I joined them in the prayer meeting in the tent; and such an outpouring of the Spirit as we then received, reminded me of the campmeetings I attended over thirty years ago, when Methodists did not have to mourn the absence of the Holy Spirit!

Finally, to be permitted to see and worship with so many hundreds of brethren and sisters, all "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ" (Titus 2: 13), I regard as one of the greatest blessings of my christian life. And now to all that look for redemption in Jerusalem,* permit me to send this greeting.

Grace before Meat.

"One father of a household among our acquaintance,—a christian brother, too, whom we highly esteem,—mumbles his 'grace' somewhere back in his bronchial region, as if fearful some one at the table might over him. Another will pitch his voice at a key fit for calling a neighbor from across the way. Another dashes into his petitions like Job's war horses, in the midst of the bustle of taking seats. Another bobs down his head, and has bobbed it up again ere you are fully aware what he is at. Another mumbles along with the dead monotony of a cart on the pavements. So the number who really edify in performing this service is lamentably small. If we might be allowed to offer counsel touching the matter, we should say: Come to this devotional service as to any other devotional service, in a reverent spirit, and with the desire to religiously profit all concerned. Do not be hasty in the thanksgiving and prayer. Wait till all are seated, and the silence has become perfect. Then speak quietly, but audibly, seriously, earnestly. Do not fall into the same unvarying sound of words. Having a formula at the tongue's end, is apt to deliver the tongue from all dependance on the heart. Do not ask merely that the food may be 'blessed to the nourishment of the body,' but that, with gratitude and devotion, it may likewise be a means of grace to the soul. Do not offer an irrelevant prayer, as if forgetful of the place and occasion. Do not, the moment the last word falls from your lips, seize the knife and fork, or turn with some trifling remark to your next neighbor at the table. Let there be a pause, be as deliberate in closing as in commencing the service. Let the impression be enstamped on all listening that you seriously mean to commune with God in this service—not to recite a dry formula."

P. S. The great trouble among us is, many of our good brethren neglect this duty entirely—not more so in one locality than another. M. M.

Farewell Hymn.

Farewell, my brethren, I leave you now,
To my own country I must go,
To hear of strife, and war and blood,
But oh! my trust shall be in God.

The widow's God he says he'll be,
The promise sure is sweet to me,
So I will lean upon his word—
Blest promise does that book afford

With you I've spent some happy hours,
O! may we meet in Eden's bowers,
To sing redemption's joyful song,
Amid that holy, happy throng

When the archangel trump shall sound,
And wake the sleepers under ground,
We'll rise triumphant in the air,
Meet all our Father's children there

O! then no tears will ever flow,
And we no more shall sorrow know,
For we have gained our blest abode,
And there we'll scale the mount of God.

And when on Zion's height we stand,
With harps of gold all in our hand,
We'll praise our Lord, for lo, 'tis he
Hath given us the victory!

A city fair of purest gold,
No mortal eye can e'er behold,
But saints victorious then shall see
That city bright in majesty.

The tree of life all blooming fair,
Its golden fruit none can compare,
Life's river pure, with flowing stream,—
We'll drink and never thirst again.

O! meet me on that peaceful shore,
Where parting shall be known no more,
Then farewell till we meet again,
Where Christ our King shall ever reign

Selections.

The Judge and the poor African Woman.

In one of the populous and beautiful towns on the banks of "La Belle Riviere," there dwelt a poor lone African woman. . . She was queenly in the power and beauty of her spiritual progress, though poor as poverty could make her in this world's goods. . . . .

The judge was rich and highly esteemed. He dwelt in a mansion, not so fine as to repel, not so splendid as to make him the envy of the foolish, large enough to be the social centre of the town, and plain enough to make one feel it a home. His heart was in keeping with his home, large and open.

The poor African woman lived in a cabin on an alley, all alone, without chick or child, kith or kin.

Her own hands ministered amply to her own wants while she had health, and at home or abroad at work by the day, she often earned that which found its way to India, Africa or elsewhere, in the spread of the gospel. Her home though small and poor was neat and tidy. She belonged to the church of which the judge was an officer, and often sat down with him at the table of the Lord, as she will again. O how joyously at the feast of the Bridegroom in the palace of the King. But it so happened that the judge and the African had never had any free conversation together about the things of the kingdom. He respected her. She venerated him. At last she received a severe injury from which she never recovered, and for many weary months before her death was dependent and helpless, alone and bed-ridden.

During this time the judge's ample table and abundant wardrobe had contributed its full share to the comforts of the poor woman. Never a day but she was remembered. But for a long time for one reason and another he put off from time to time a personal visit, which he yet fully purposed in his heart to make her. Until at last one day as he thought of the cheeriness of his own pleasant time, the thought of the contrast between this and the loneliness and desolation of the poor woman's cabin came into his mind, and while it heightened his gratitude for the goodness of God to him, it filled him with sadness and sympathy for her.

"Who can tell but I may cheer her a little, and perhaps by a little timely sympathy save her from repining at her hard lot? Possibly, too, I may be able to throw some light upon the rugged pathway along which she is going to the kingdom?"

The judge loved to do good; it was a great luxury to him. So, taking a well filled basket, and making sure that purse as well as scrip was stored with convenient small change, he sallied forth to visit the poor woman.

As the door opened, he was struck with the air of neatness in the cabin. If she was bed-rid, some kind hand supplied the place of her's. Everything was in order, swept and garnished neat as a pin. "Not so desolate after all," thought he.

But again, as the judge looked around, and contrasted the social joys of his own ample mansion, where the voice of children and of music, as well as the presence of books and friends made all cheerful and happy, with the cheerless solitude of the poor woman, alone here from morning till night and from night until morning, only as one or another called out of kindness to keep her from suffering, his heart filled again with sadness and sympathy.

Seating himself on the stool at the side of the poor woman's cot, he began speaking to her in words of condolence.

"It must be hard for you, Nancy, to be shut up here alone so many days and nights?"

"O, no, thank God, massa judge, the good Lord keeps me from feeling bad. I'se happy now as ever I was in all my days."

"But, Nancy, lying here from morning till night and from night till morning all alone, and racked with pain, dependent upon others for everything, do you not get tired and down-hearted, and think your lot a hard one to bear?"

"Well, I'se 'pendent on other, dat's sure, 'deed I is, an I was allers used to have something to give to de poor, an to de missionary, too, an to de minister, but den I'se no poorer dan my good Lord was when he was here in de worl, and I'se nebber suffer half so much yet as he suffer for me on de cross. I'se berry happy when I tink of dese tings."

"But, Nancy, you are all alone here."

"Yes, massa, I'se all alone, dat's true, but den Jesus is here, too, all de time. I'm nebber alone, no how, and he's good company."

"But, Nancy, how do you feel when you think about death? What if you should die here all alone some night?"

"O massa judge, I 'spect to. I 'spect nothing else, but jes to go off all alone here some night, as you say, or some day. But it's all one, night or day, to poor Nancy. And den, massa, I spec I'll not go alone, after all, for Jesus says in de blessed book 'I'll come an' take you to myself, dat where I am dar you may be also,' an' I believe Him. I'se not afraid to die alone.'

"But, Nancy, sometimes when I think of dying, I am filled with trouble. I think how bad I am, what a sinner, and how unfit for heaven. And I think now what if I should die suddenly, just as I am, what would become of me? Are you not afraid to die and go into the presence of a holy God?"

"O, no, massa, 'deed I'se not."

"Why not, Nancy?"

"O, massa, I was 'fraid; berry much. When I was fust injer, I see I must die, an' I thought how can such a sinner as I is ebber go into such a holy place as de new Jerusalem is? An' I was miseble, sure. Den, by an by, after a while, I jes' thought I must trus' myself to de blessed Jesus, to make me ready for de kingdom jus' as I did to forgib all my sins. So I found res' for my poor soul in Jesus, an sene dat time I feel somehow all better. For now, I know he will make me all ready and pure and white for de new Jerusalem above. An' now I love to think about the time when I shall come to 'pear befo' the Father's throne, wid him in glory, all starry, spagle white."

The judge sat in silence, admiring the power of grace. Not yet himself deeply affected by the light reflected from this star in disguise. A little pressure more was required, another chafing question, to bring out the ray destined to pierce his own soul.

"Well, Nancy, one thing more let me ask. Do you never complain?"

"Complain! O, massa, judge, complain, do you say, massa? Why massa! Who should such a one as I is, complain ob? The good Lor'? Why, he knows what's bes, for poor Nancy. His will be done."

Nancy said this in tones of the deepest sincerity, and a little more. There was just a shade of wonder at the question, as much as to say, What, an officer in the church, a man of education, a judge, can you think a poor creature like me might complain of the dealings of a merciful God and Savior like mine?"

The arrow took effect. The judge bowed his head in silence a moment, and then rose and bade Nancy good-bye, without the word of consolation and prayer, which he fully purposed when he went into the cabin.

All the way home he kept saying to himself, "Well, I never yet said, 'His will be done,' in that way. I never felt it. Alone, poor, helpless, bed-ridden, dependent, miserable in body, and yet happy as an angel. Ah! there is a power that I never felt. But, I must feel it, and, God helping me, I will. Not afraid to die."

Trusting Jesus to purify her from all sin, and present her spotless before God, waiting joyously his summons. O, blessed faith! I must know more of this, and I will."

Two weeks, night and day, the arrow rankled, rankled, rankled. His pain increased. Sleep forsook him, and his family became alarmed. He said nothing, but often groaned in spirit and sighed deeply. Sometimes the tears were seen to steal down his manly cheeks. All wondered, and all waited to hear what had come over the strong mind and manly heart of the judge.

At last, one day while he was bowed before God, he felt in his heart "Thy will will be done." The storm-tossed sea of his soul was suddenly calmed, and peace filled his heart—peace as a river. Now he, too, could trust Jesus to make for him his pathway on earth and fit him for heaven, and take him to it whenever and from whatever place it might please him.

It was the beginning of a new life for him—a change quite as great as at the time of his conversion, and as it has proved, the beginning of blessed things for his own family, and church and town, and for the cause of Christ generally. Consistent and steadfast before, he has been a burning and a shining light, letting his light shine far and near ever since.

He went in the fullness of wealth and education, and influence and honor, to the poor, lone, lorn African woman, to do her good if he might with either counsel or food, or clothing or money. This was the full purpose and prayer of his heart; and yet, while he gave nothing to her, he received from her what all his wealth could not purchase or all his wisdom devise.

She, poor body, had nothing to give, nor so much as ever dreamed of giving aught to any body. And yet, without a thought of it, she did give to the rich and honorable judge what was worth more to him than the wealth and honors of all the world.

And what does this illustrate to us? What but the power of spirituality? What but the power which poured upon the few illiterate fishermen of Gallilee in the Pentecostal baptism, fitted them for the reformation of the world, almost in a single generation?

Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do in anything
To do it as for thee.
All may of thee partake;
Nothing can be so mean
Which with this tincture, "For Thy sake,"
Will not grow bright and clean.
A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for God's laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

COBBETT.—This extraordinary man, alluding to the number of his "works," observed: "If any young man wishes to know the grand secret relative to the performance of such wondrous labor, it is told him in a few words: Be abstinent; be sober; go to bed at eight o'clock and get up at four—the last two being of still more importance than the two former. A full half of all that I have ever written has been written before ten o'clock in the day; so that I have had as much leisure as any man that I ever knew any thing of. If young men will but set about the thing in earnest, let them not fear of success; they will soon find that it is disagreeable to sit up or to rise late. Literary coxcombs talk of 'consuming the midnight oil.' No oil, and a very small portion of candles, have I ever consumed, and I am convinced that no writing is so good as that which comes from under the light of the sun."

FASHION.—There is only one thing more powerful than a steam engine, and that is fashion. It makes men ridiculous and women spendthrifts. It takes the human family by the nose, and leads them into captivity. It makes the Hollander wear eighteen pair of breeches at once, and causes the Englishman to wear boots so sharpened at the point that they could be used for toothpicks. It builds our churches, fills our pews, and even regulates the rights of sepulture. Fashion is a great power. What a pity it can never be enlisted on the side of common sense, early hours, goodness and economy.

FAMILY COURTESY.—Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward the members of their own family, will be rude and thoughtless to all the world. But let the family intercourse be true, tender and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood.

To be read by those who are eager to make Proselytes.—It was said by Borgia of the expedition of the French into Italy, that they came with chalk in their hands to mark out their lodgings, not with arms to force their way in. I, in like manner, would have my doctrine enter quietly into the minds that are fit and capable of receiving it; for confutations cannot be employed, when the difference is upon first principles and very notions, and even upon forms of demonstration.—Bacon, Novum Organum.

☞ Coal oil is said to be a sure destroyer of bedbugs. Apply plentifully with a small brush or feather to the places where they most do congregate. The cure is effectual and permanent. Gilt frames, chandeliers, etc., rubbed slightly over with coal oil, will not be disturbed by flies.

How to rid a barn of fleas.—Take quick lime, slack it, and sow freely. It will exterminate them in pig-sties, or any place they inhabit.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH"—Paul.

Precautions.

1. Never sleep in a room where there is any green paper on the walls, as this color is made of arsenic or lead; the former is by far the most dangerous, being scheeles green, and is known positively by a drop of muriatic acid on the green leaving it white.

2. White glazed visiting-cards contain sugar of lead, and will poison a child who is tempted to chew them from the slight sweetish taste.

3. Green glazed cards used for concert tickets, are still more poisonous; a single one of them contains a grain and a half of arsenic, enough to kill a child.

4. Never put a pin in the mouth or between the teeth, for a single instant, because a sudden effort to laugh or speak, may convey it into the throat, or lungs, or stomach, causing death in a few minutes, or requiring the windpipe to be cut open to get it out; if it has passed into the stomach, it may, as it has done, cause years of suffering, ceasing only when it has made its way out of the body through the walls of the abdomen or other portion of the system.

5. It is best to have no button or string about any garment worn during the night. A long, loose night-gown is the best thing to sleep in. Many a man has facilitated an attack of apoplexy by buttoning his shirt-collar.

6. If you wake up of a cold night, and find yourself very restless, get out of bed, and standing on a piece of carpet or cloth of any kind, spend five or ten minutes in rubbing the whole body vigorously and rapidly with the hands, having previously thrown the bed clothing towards the foot of the bed so as to air both bed and body.

7. If you find that you have inadvertantly eaten too much, instead of taking something to settle the stomach, thus adding to the load under which it already labors, take a continuous walk with just enough activity to keep up a very slight moisture or perspiration of the skin, and do not stop until entirely relieved, but end your exercise in a warm room, so as to cool off very slowly.

8. Never put on a pair of new boots or shoes on a journey, especially on a visit to the city; rather wear your easiest, oldest pair, otherwise you will soon be painfully disabled.

9. A loosely-fitting boot or shoe, while traveling in winter, will keep the feet warmer, without any stockings at all, than a tight pair, over the thickest, warmest hose.

10. Riding against a cold wind, immediately after singing or speaking in public, is suicide.

11. Many public speakers have been disabled for life by speaking under a hoarseness of voice.

12. If you happen to get wet in cold weather, keep moving on foot with a rapidity sufficient to keep off a feeling of chilliness until you get into a house, and not waiting to undress, drink instantly and plentifully of hot tea of some sort; then undress, wipe dry quickly, and put on warm, dry clothing.

13. Never go to bed with cold feet, if you want to sleep well.

14. If a person faints, place him instantly flat on a bed, or floor, or earth, on his back, and quietly let him alone at least for ten minutes; if it is simply a fainting fit, the blood, flowing on a level will more speedily equalize itself throughout the system; cold water dashed in the face, or a sitting position are unnecessary and pernicious.

15. Never blow your nose, nor spit the product of a cough, nor throw a fruit-peel on the sidewalk.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Nicotine found in the Viscera of a Snufftaker.

M. Morin, of Rouen, anxious to ascertain whether nicotine could be detected in the viscera, subjected the lungs and liver of a snufftaker, who had died at seventy, to a careful analysis, and found the alkaloid just mentioned. Portions of the lungs and liver were reduced to a pulp and soaked in distilled water, slightly acidulated for the lungs with sulphuric acid, and for the liver with oxalic acid. Several days afterward, the liquor was filtered through paper free from carbonate of lime, then concentrated to a third of its volume, and filtered again to free it from the flakes which had formed. It was now once more evaporated, and treated with pure alcohol, when fresh flakes formed. The alcohol was then removed by heat after filtration. The residue was mixed with a small quantity of pure potash. On cooling, sulphuric ether was added; and after a few hours, the decanted liquor was evaporated in vacuo. The substance now obtained, having the smell and the acrid taste of nicotine, was treated by the bichloride of mercury, chloride of platinum, tannin, biniodide of potassium, the salts of copper and lead, and with all the reactions of nicotine were obtained.—Lancet.

SOME FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO, which those who use it will read and forget:—

Rees' Cyclopedia says a drop or two of the oil, placed on the tongue of a cat, produces convulsions and death in the space of a minute.

A college of physicians has said that not less than twenty thousand, in our land, annually die by the use of this poison.

Dr. Shaw names some eighty diseases, and says they may be attributed to tobacco.

Gov. Sullivan says: "My brother, Gen. Sullivan, used snuff, and his snuff lodged him prematurely in the grave."

Bocarme, of Belgium, was murdered in two minutes and a half by a little nicotine, or alkali of tobacco.

Dr. Twitchell believed that sudden deaths and tobacco, among men, were usually found together, and he sustained this opinion by an array of facts altogether conclusive.

Three young men formed a smoking club, and they all died within two years of the the time they formed it. The doctor was asked what they died of. He said they were smoked to death.

A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth, in a dram shop. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said: "It was a mysterious act of God." The minister, at the funeral, consoled the friends by saying much the same thing. Physicians said it was "heart disease," and said nothing about the cause of the disease. A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said, "Tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart; it ceased to beat, and the victim fell!

☞ A distinguished physician of Paris, Dr. Robert De Lambelle, announces that a shock of electricity given a patient dying from the effects of chloroform, immediately counteracts its influence and restores the sufferer to life.

Lo! I am with you alway.

I.

"Lo! I am with you alway." Blessed words!
Imparting strength to many a vacant heart;
Last words of Christ to those he loved on earth,—
From those who trust him he will ne'er depart.

II.

When earthly friends are powerless help to give,
We lean not on the Almighty arm in vain;
Remember he who wounds alone can heal,—
Have faith in God, and losses shall be gain.

III.

When idols from our clasping arms are torn,
To teach us not "to lay up treasures here,"
Hear Jesus, who is ever still the same,—
"Lo! I am with you." Ah! what words of cheer.

IV.

Distrust him not, though clouds are o'er thy path,
"Lo! I am with you" till the end of time;
Thy Father's discipline submissive bear,
And thou ere long shalt see his wise design.

V.

"'Lo! I am with you,' tempest-tossed and tried,
Then wherefore didst thou doubt my power to save?
Far more than Conqueror is thy Savior's might,
None shall ere perish that my Father gave."

VI.

When thou art called a heavy cross to bear,
"Lo! I am with you" makes the pilgrim strong.
Reproach and shame our Master too has borne,
What matters it if we to Christ belong?

VII.

I am with thee,—this promise thou hast known,
Dear aged pilgrim on the shores of time,
Down to hoar hairs he's safely carried thee,
And thou canst testify this covenant God is mine.

IX.

"Lo! I am with you" in the last dread hour,
For "so he giveth his beloved sleep;"
Around and underneath the Almighty arms
"Our life, if hid in Christ," he'll safely keep.

"Let us go on unto Perfection."

In order to understand what the apostle meant by this injunction, it is necessary to give the Scriptures a candid and prayerful examination upon the subject. We find there are some, even among us, who do not understand the doctrine of christian perfection, and are in the fog as to what is meant by being perfect and holy, as taught by our Lord and Savior and the apostles.

As your excellent paper seems to delight in giving light to all around, I thought it would not be amiss to send you an extract from the writings of John Wesley on the subject. It will be found in the "Guide to Christian Perfection," Vol. 1, No. 1. I think Mr. Wesley gives us the doctrine of the New Testament on the point, and that clearly. GEO. BLISS.

"WHAT IS CHRISTIAN PERFECTION?

If we would successfully exhort christians to go on to perfection, we must show what that perfection is; for no one will be likely to attain to it till it be defined and laid clearly before his understanding. I do not conceive the perfection here spoken of to be the perfection of angels. As those glorious beings never left their first estate, never declined from their original perfection, . . . all their apprehension of things is clear and distinct, and their judgment always true; hence, though their knowledge is limited, (for they are creatures) though they are ignorant of innumerable things, yet they are not liable to mistake, for their knowledge is perfect in its kind. And as their affections are all constantly guided by their unerring understanding, so that all their actions are suitable thereto; so they do every moment not their own wills, but the good and acceptable will of God. Therefore it is not possible for man, whose understanding is darkened, to whom mistakes are as natural as ignorance, who cannot think at all but by the medium of organs which are weakened and depraved, like other parts of the corruptible body,—it is not possible, I say, for man always to think right, to apprehend things distinctly, and judge things truly of them. In consequence hereof, his affections depending on his understanding are variously disordered, and his words and actions are influenced more or less by the disorder both of his understanding and affections. It follows that no man while in the body can possibly attain to angelic perfection."

. . . "The highest perfection which man can attain, while in this house of our tabernacle, does not exclude ignorance and error, and a thousand other infirmities. Now from wrong judgments, wrong words and actions will necessarily flow, and in some cases, wrong affections also may spring from the same source. I may judge wrong of you; I may think more or less highly of you than I ought to think, and this mistake in my judgment may not only occasion something wrong in my behavior, but it may have a still deeper effect, it may occasion something wrong in my affections. From a wrong apprehension, I may love and esteem you either more or less than I ought. Nor can I be freed from a liableness to such a mistake, while I remain in a corruptible body. . . . Hence the best men may say from the heart—

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merits of thy death,"

for innumerable violation of Adamic as well as the angelic law. It is well therefore for us that we are not under these, but the law of love. Love is now the fulfilling of the law which is given fallen man. This is now, with respect to us, the perfect law. But even against this, through the present weakness of our understanding, we are continually liable to transgress. Therefore, every man living needs the blood of atonement, or he could not stand before God."

"What is, then, the perfection of which man is capable, while he dwells in a corruptible body? It is the complying with the command, 'My son, give me thine heart;' it is the loving of the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind. This is the sum of christian perfection; it is all comprised in that one word—LOVE. The first branch of it is the love of God; and he that loves God loves his brother also; it is inseparably connected with the second, 'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Thou shalt love every man as thy own soul—as Christ loved us. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets; these contain the whole of christian perfection.

"Another view of this is given us in the words of the great apostle, 'Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:' for although this immediately and directly refers to the humility of our Lord, yet it may be taken in a far more extensive sense, so as to include the whole disposition of his mind; all affections of his temper, both towards God and man. Now it is certain that as there was no evil affection in him, so no good affection or temper was wanting. So that whatsoever things are holy, whatsoever things are lovely, are all included in the mind that was in Christ Jesus.

"St. Paul, when writing to the Galatians, places perfection in yet another view. It is the one individual fruit of the Spirit, which he describes thus: 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, fidelity, meekness, temperance.' What a glorious constellation of graces is here! Now suppose all these things be knit together in one, to be united together in the soul of a believer, this is christian perfection.

"Again; he writes to christians of Ephesus of putting on the new man, which is after God, created in righteousness and true holiness; and to the Colossians of the 'new man, renewed after the image of him that created him.'. . . .

"St. Peter expresses it in a still different manner, though to the same effect. 'As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.' 1 Pet. 1: 15. According to this apostle, then, perfection is another name for universal holiness, inward and outward righteousness, holiness of life arising from holiness of heart. If any expressions can be stronger than these, they are those of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, 1 Epistle, 5: 23. The very God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may the whole of you, the spirit, the soul, and the body, (this is the literal translation) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"We cannot show this sanctification in a more excellent way than by complying with the exhortation of the apostle, 'I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.' To the same effect St. Peter says, (1st Epistle 2: 5) 'Ye are a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God thro' Jesus Christ.' But what sacrifices shall we offer now, seeing the Jewish dispensation is at an end? If you have truly presented yourselves to God, you offer up to him continually all your thoughts, and words, and actions, through the Son of his love, as a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving.

"Thus you experience that he whose name is called Jesus does not bear the name in vain; that he does in fact save his people from their sins, the root as well as the branches. And this salvation from sin—from all sins—is another description of perfection, though indeed it expresses only the least, the lowest branch of it,—only the negative part of the great salvation."

From Bro. J. A. Sober.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish simply to say through the Crisis, that I have removed from Grand Blanc, Genesee county, Mich., to Deerfield, Livingston county, Mich., and my address will be, until further notice, Argentine, Genesee county, Mich. Brethren and friends will therefore take notice and direct their favors accordingly.

I am endeavoring still to warn the church and world of the judgment at hand, and kindred truths. Never, in all my experience in the Advent cause, did I feel such firm and abiding convictions of the divine origin and correctness, in the main, of the great truths we preach, than now. The signs of the times are such as to convince, it seems to me, every student of prophecy that the end of this age is nigh at hand. The nations are distressed and perplexed beyond a parallel, as Christ said they would be in the last days, as recorded by Luke; or, in Apocalyptic language, they are ANGRY. Their perplexity makes them mad, and they foam like the raging sea, and I hope the great Peace-maker will soon say, "Be still."

Rome is waning, and soon must fall to rise no more forever. The Turkish Empire is almost consumed, or "dried up." The "time of trouble" is being inaugurated, which will end in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." There are indications of speedy deliverance. Amid the general gloom and darkness of our national history and the entire world, the christian need not be alarmed; but on the contrary rejoice and sing,—

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near."

Deerfield, Mich., Aug. 26th, '62.

From P. J. Tisdale.

BRO GRANT:—I take the privilege to write a few lines for the Crisis. I like the paper very much, and prize it next to the Bible.

There are a few in this place who love the Lord and his appearing. I belong to them. I enlisted under the banner of King Jesus some five or six years ago. Bro. P. C. Rodman was the first one to tell me about the Lord's coming. Although I was young, it sounded sweet to my ears, and I have loved it ever since. I love it even more to-day than ever.

Brethren and Sisters, lift up your heads, the great Life-giver is soon coming to reward his faithful children. By the grace of God I will be among his faithful children,

"Whene'er the archangel's trump shall sound."

May we be kept spotless and blameless until he comes, that we may be found of him in peace, and be permitted to share in the kingdom of immortal glory,

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Exeter, R. I., 1862.

From Jas. A. Purdy.

BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I have been desirous for some time past of writing a few lines to you concerning my experience. About the space of two years I neglected reading God's holy word. The different preachers I went to hear would say that men's souls were immortal, and when a man died he would fly to heaven or sink to an unknown hell. I thought, what need of a resurrection of the dead? And they would talk about a "merciful" God,—that he was casting the wicked into eternal torture, there to burn eternally. Therefore I thought if there was a God at all, there must be a wrong somewhere in teaching these erroneous ideas. I, with many more poor perishing souls, have been driven from the Savior to die the second death; but, glory be to God, to my great surprise, in the year 1860 I met with two tracts, one entitled "The Wicked not Immortal," the other "Death not Life, or the Destruction of the Wicked." Through these I was led to the pages of divine truth; and oh! what a blessing they proved to me. They explained the hidden mysteries.

I learned God's word was true from the beginning to the end. I was shown a crucified Savior and a risen Mediator. The Spirit of God arrested me, and at the expiration of three months, after a diligent search of the Scriptures, I cried unto the Lord, saying, "What shall I do to be saved?" These words came powerfully to my mind, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I threw myself into the arms of Jesus, and found peace and rest, and was healed. Ah! I found peace in believing in Christ. When He who is our life shall appear, I hope to appear with him in glory. What a glorious promise to all that are looking for the "blessed hope," and the bright "appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "To the law and to the testimony." Our Savior says, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

O blessed day! happy hour! joyful moment! when the sight of our precious Savior first saluted the eyes of my mind and became the object of my faith. It was the beginning of days, yea, my great birth-day to happiness; and now with you, dear pilgrims, I am journeying on to the promised inheritance, expecting Jesus soon to come to destroy the wicked, replenish the earth, give immortality and eternal life to all those that endure to the end.

Three days at the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

Praise the Lord for the three days I spent at the Wilbraham Campmeeting! On arriving at the ground, and surveying the circle, I could but exclaim, "How goodly are thy tents, oh Jacob! and thy tabernacles, oh Israel!"—Num. 24: 5. The order of the meeting was as nearly perfect as possible,—not a man, woman or child did I see misbehave.

But the order at the tables during meals seemed to exceed even that; to see that campmeeting patriarch, Bro. Munger, at his post at the instant, and as soon as all were seated, to hear him ask, "Will the brethren please come to order," and then invite some brother near the centre to ask a blessing, and to observe the strict attention given by over two hundred persons, justifies all that is here said on the subject of order.

The spirit of the meeting was blessed, notwithstanding doctrinal differences known to exist on some subjects; and I was delighted to observe the deference paid to one another by brethren of opposite sentiments.

Being kindly provided with lodging by brethren of the Springfield tent, at the close of the exercises at the stand on Wed. evening, I joined them in the prayer meeting in the tent, and such an outpouring of the Spirit as we then received, reminded me of the campmeetings I attended over thirty years ago, when Methodists did not have to mourn the absence of the Holy Spirit!

Finally, to be permitted to see and worship with so many hundreds of brethren and sisters, all "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ" (Titus 2: 13), I regard as one of the greatest blessings of my christian life. And now to all that look for redemption in Jerusalem,* permit me to send this greeting.

Grace before Meat.

"One father of a household among our acquaintance,—a christian brother, too, whom we highly esteem,—mumbles his 'grace' somewhere back in his bronchial region, as if fearful some one at the table might over him. Another will pitch his voice at a key fit for calling a neighbor from across the way. Another dashes into his petitions like Job's war horses, in the midst of the bustle of taking seats. Another bobs down his head, and has bobbed it up again ere you are fully aware what he is at. Another mumbles along with the dead monotony of a cart on the pavements. So the number who really edify in performing this service is lamentably small. If we might be allowed to offer counsel touching the matter, we should say: Come to this devotional service as to any other devotional service, in a reverent spirit, and with the desire to religiously profit all concerned. Do not be hasty in the thanksgiving and prayer. Wait till all are seated, and the silence has become perfect. Then speak quietly, but audibly, seriously, earnestly. Do not fall into the same unvarying sound of words. Having a formula at the tongue's end, is apt to deliver the tongue from all dependance on the heart. Do not ask merely that the food may be 'blessed to the nourishment of the body,' but that, with gratitude and devotion, it may likewise be a means of grace to the soul. Do not offer an irrelevant prayer, as if forgetful of the place and occasion. Do not, the moment the last word falls from your lips, seize the knife and fork, or turn with some trifling remark to your next neighbor at the table. Let there be a pause; be as deliberate in closing as in commencing the service. Let the impression be constamped on all listening that you seriously mean to commune with God in this service—not to recite a dry formula."

P. S. The great trouble among us is, many of our good brethren neglect this duty entirely—not more so in one locality than another. M. M.

Farewell Hymn.

Farewell, my brethren, I leave you now,
To my own country I must go,
To hear of strife, and war and blood,
But oh! my trust shall be in God.

The widow's God he says he'll be,
The promise sure is sweet to me,
So I will lean upon his word—
Blest promise does that book afford.

With you I've spent some happy hours,
O! may we meet in Eden's bowers,
To sing redemption's joyful song,
Amid that holy, happy throng.

When the archangel trump shall sound,
And wake the sleepers under ground,
We'll rise triumphant in the air,
Meet all our Father's children there.

O! then no tears will ever flow,
And we no more shall sorrow know,
For we have gained our blest abode,
And there we'll scale the mount of God.

And when on Zion's height we stand,
With harps of gold all in our hand,
We'll praise our Lord, for lo, 'tis he
Hath given us the victory!

A city fair of purest gold,
No mortal eye can e'er behold,
But saints victorious then shall see
That city bright in majesty.

The tree of life all blooming fair,
Its golden fruit none can compare,
Life's river pure, with flowing stream,—
We'll drink and never thirst again.

O! meet me on that peaceful shore,
Where parting shall be known no more,
Then farewell till we meet again,
Where Christ our King shall ever reign.

The Judge and the poor African Woman.

In one of the populous and beautiful towns on the banks of "La Belle Riviere," there dwelt a poor lone African woman. . . She was queenly in the power and beauty of her spiritual progress, though poor as poverty could make her in this world's goods. . . . .

The judge was rich and highly esteemed. He dwelt in a mansion, not so fine as to repel, not so splendid as to make him the envy of the foolish, large enough to be the social centre of the town, and plain enough to make one feel it a home. His heart was in keeping with his home, large and open.

The poor African woman lived in a cabin on an alley, all alone, without chick or child, kith or kin.

Her own hands ministered amply to her own wants while she had health, and at home or abroad at work by the day, she often earned that which found its way to India, Africa or elsewhere, in the spread of the gospel. Her home though small and poor was neat and tidy. She belonged to the church of which the judge was an officer, and often sat down with him at the table of the Lord, as she will again. O how joyously at the feast of the Bridegroom in the palace of the King. But it so happened that the judge and the African had never had any free conversation together about the things of the kingdom. He respected her. She venerated him. At last she received a severe injury from which she never recovered, and for many weary months before her death was dependent and helpless, alone and bed-ridden.

During this time the judge's ample table and abundant wardrobe had contributed its full share to the comforts of the poor woman. Never a day but she was remembered. But for a long time for one reason and another he put off from time to time a personal visit, which he yet fully purposed in his heart to make her. Until at last one day as he thought of the cheeriness of his own pleasant time, the thought of the contrast between this and the loneliness and desolation of the poor woman's cabin came into his mind, and while it heightened his gratitude for the goodness of God to him, it filled him with sadness and sympathy for her.

"Who can tell but I may cheer her a little, and perhaps by a little timely sympathy save her from repining at her hard lot? Possibly, too, I may be able to throw some light upon the rugged pathway along which she is going to the kingdom?"

The judge loved to do good; it was a great luxury to him. So, taking a well filled basket, and making sure that purse as well as scrip was stored with convenient small change, he sallied forth to visit the poor woman.

As the door opened, he was struck with the air of neatness in the cabin. If she was bed-rid, some kind hand supplied the place of her's. Everything was in order, swept and garnished neat as a pin. "Not so desolate after all," thought he.

But again, as the judge looked around, and contrasted the social joys of his own ample mansion, where the voice of children and of music, as well as the presence of books and friends made all cheerful and happy, with the cheerless solitude of the poor woman, alone here from morning till night and from night until morning, only as one or another called out of kindness to keep her from suffering, his heart filled again with sadness and sympathy.

Seating himself on the stool at the side of the poor woman's cot, he began speaking to her in words of condolence.

"It must be hard for you, Nancy, to be shut up here alone so many days and nights?"

"O, no, thank God, massa judge, the good Lord keeps me from feeling bad. I'se happy now as ever I was in all my days."

"But, Nancy, lying here from morning till night and from night till morning all alone, and racked with pain, dependent upon others for everything, do you not get tired and down-hearted, and think your lot a hard one to bear?"

"Well, I'se 'pendent on other, dat's sure, 'deed I is, an I was allers used to have something to give to de poor, an to de missionary, too, an to de minister, but den I'se no poorer dan my good Lord was when he was here in de worl, and I'se nebber suffer half so much yet as he suffer for me on de cross. I'se berry happy when I tink of dese tings."

"But, Nancy, you are all alone here."

"Yes, massa, I'se all alone, dat's true, but den Jesus is here, too, all de time. I'm nebber alone, no how, and he's good company."

"But, Nancy, how do you feel when you think about death? What if you should die here all alone some night?"

"O massa judge, I 'spect to. I 'spect nothing else, but jes to go off all alone here some night, as you say, or some day. But it's all one, night or day, to poor Nancy. And den, massa, I spec I'll not go alone, after all, for Jesus says in de blessed book 'I'll come an' take you to myself, dat where I am dar you may be also,' an' I believe Him. I'se not afraid to die alone."

"But, Nancy, sometimes when I think of dying, I am filled with trouble. I think how bad I am, what a sinner, and how unfit for heaven. And I think now what if I should die suddenly, just as I am, what would become of me? Are you not afraid to die and go into the presence of a holy God?"

"O, no, massa, 'deed I'se not."

"Why not, Nancy?"

"O, massa, I was 'fraid, berry much. When I was fust injer, I see I must die, an' I thought how can such a sinner as I is ebber go into such a holy place as de new Jerusalem is? An' I was miseble, sure. Den, by an by, after a while, I jes' thought I must trus' myself to de blessed Jesus, to make me ready for de kingdom jus' as I did to forgib all my sins. So I found res' for my poor soul in Jesus, an sene dat time I feel somehow all better. For now, I know he will make me all ready and pure and white for de new Jerusalem above. An' now I love to think about the time when I shall come to 'pear befo' the Father's throne, wid him in glory, all starry, spagle white."

The judge sat in silence, admiring the power of grace. Not yet himself deeply affected by the light reflected from this star in disguise. A little pressure more was required, another chafing question, to bring out the ray destined to pierce his own soul.

"Well, Nancy, one thing more let me ask. Do you never complain?"

"Complain! O, massa, judge, complain, do you say, massa? Why massa! Who should such a one as I is, complain ob? The good Lor'? Why, he knows what's bes, for poor Nancy. His will be done."

Nancy said this in tones of the deepest sincerity, and a little more. There was just a shade of wonder at the question, as much as to say, What, an officer in the church, a man of education, a judge, can you think a poor creature like me might complain of the dealings of a merciful God and Savior like mine?

The arrow took effect. The judge bowed his head in silence a moment, and then rose and bade Nancy good-bye, without the word of consolation and prayer, which he fully purposed when he went into the cabin.

All the way home he kept saying to himself, "Well, I never yet said, 'His will be done,' in that way. I never felt it. Alone, poor, helpless, bed-ridden, dependent, miserable in body, and yet happy as an angel. Ah! there is a power that I never felt. But, I must feel it, and, God helping me, I will. Not afraid to die."

Trusting Jesus to purify her from all sin, and present her spotless before God, waiting joyously his summons. O, blessed faith! I must know more of this, and I will."

Two weeks, night and day, the arrow rankled, rankled, rankled. His pain increased. Sleep forsook him, and his family became alarmed. He said nothing, but often groaned in spirit and sighed deeply. Sometimes the tears were seen to steal down his manly cheeks. All wondered, and all waited to hear what had come over the strong mind and manly heart of the judge.

At last, one day while he was bowed before God, he felt in his heart "Thy will will be done." The storm-tossed sea of his soul was suddenly calmed, and peace filled his heart—peace as a river. Now he, too, could trust Jesus to make for him his pathway on earth and fit him for heaven, and take him to it whenever and from whatever place it might please him.

It was the beginning of a new life for him—a change quite as great as at the time of his conversion, and as it has proved, the beginning of blessed things for his own family, and church and town, and for the cause of Christ generally. Consistent and steadfast before, he has been a burning and a shining light, letting his light shine far and near ever since.

He went in the fullness of wealth and education, and influence and honor, to the poor, lone, lorn African woman, to do her good if he might with either counsel or food, or clothing or money. This was the full purpose and prayer of his heart; and yet, while he gave nothing to her, he received from her what all his wealth could not purchase or all his wisdom devise.

She, poor body, had nothing to give, nor so much as ever dreamed of giving aught to any body. And yet, without a thought of it, she did give to the rich and honorable judge what was worth more to him than the wealth and honors of all the world.

And what does this illustrate to us? What but the power of spirituality? What but the power which poured upon the few illiterate fishermen of Gallilee in the Pentecostal baptism, fitted them for the reformation of the world, almost in a single generation?

Obedience to God.

Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do in anything
To do it as for thee.
All may of thee partake;
Nothing can be so mean
Which with this tincture, "For Thy sake,"
Will not grow bright and clean.
A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for God's laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

COBBETT.—This extraordinary man, alluding to the number of his "works," observed: "If any young man wishes to know the grand secret relative to the performance of such wondrous labor, it is told him in a few words: Be abstinent; be sober; go to bed at eight o'clock and get up at four—the last two being of still more importance than the two former. A full half of all that I have ever written has been written before ten o'clock in the day; so that I have had as much leisure as any man that I ever knew any thing of. If young men will but set about the thing in earnest, let them not fear of success; they will soon find that it is disagreeable to sit up or to rise late. Literary coxcombs talk of 'consuming the midnight oil.' No oil, and a very small portion of candles, have I ever consumed, and I am convinced that no writing is so good as that which comes from under the light of the sun."

FASHION.—There is only one thing more powerful than a steam engine, and that is fashion. It makes men ridiculous and women spendthrifts. It takes the human family by the nose, and leads them into captivity. It makes the Hollander wear eighteen pair of breeches at once, and causes the Englishman to wear boots so sharpened at the point that they could be used for toothpicks. It builds our churches, fills our pews, and even regulates the rights of sepulture. Fashion is a great power. What a pity it can never be enlisted on the side of common sense, early hours, goodness and economy.

FAMILY COURTESY.—Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward the members of their own family, will be rude and thoughtless to all the world. But let the family intercourse be true, tender and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gentle and considerate, and the members of the family thus trained will carry into the world and society the habits of their childhood.

To be read by those who are eager to make Proselytes.—It was said by Borgia of the expedition of the French into Italy, that they came with chalk in their hands to mark out their lodgings, not with arms to force their way in. I, in like manner, would have my doctrine enter quietly into the minds that are fit and capable of receiving it; for confutations cannot be employed, when the difference is upon first principles and very notions, and even upon forms of demonstration.—Bacon, Novum Organum.

☞ Coal oil is said to be a sure destroyer of bedbugs. Apply plentifully with a small brush or feather to the places where they most do congregate. The cure is effectual and permanent. Gilt frames, chandeliers, etc., rubbed slightly over with coal oil, will not be disturbed by flies.

How to rid a barn of fleas.—Take quick lime, slack it, and sow freely. It will exterminate them in pig-sties, or any place they inhabit.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Precautions.

1. Never sleep in a room where there is any green paper on the walls, as this color is made of arsenic or lead, the former is by far the most dangerous, being scheeles green, and is known positively by a drop of muriatic acid on the green leaving it white.

2. White glazed visiting-cards contain sugar of lead, and will poison a child who is tempted to chew them from the slight sweetish taste.

3. Green glazed cards used for concert tickets, are still more poisonous; a single one of them contains a grain and a half of arsenic, enough to kill a child.

4. Never put a pin in the mouth or between the teeth, for a single instant, because a sudden effort to laugh or speak, may convey it into the throat, or lungs, or stomach, causing death in a few minutes, or requiring the windpipe to be cut open to get it out; if it has passed into the stomach, it may, as it has done, cause years of suffering, ceasing only when it has made its way out of the body through the walls of the abdomen or other portion of the system.

5. It is best to have no button or string about any garment worn during the night. A long, loose night-gown is the best thing to sleep in. Many a man has facilitated an attack of apoplexy by buttoning his shirt-collar.

6. If you wake up of a cold night, and find yourself very restless, get out of bed, and standing on a piece of carpet or cloth of any kind, spend five or ten minutes in rubbing the whole body vigorously and rapidly with the hands, having previously thrown the bed clothing towards the foot of the bed so as to air both bed and body.

7. If you find that you have inadvertantly eaten too much, instead of taking something to settle the stomach, thus adding to the load under which it already labors, take a continuous walk with just enough activity to keep up a very slight moisture or perspiration of the skin, and do not stop until entirely relieved, but end your exercise in a warm room, so as to cool off very slowly.

8. Never put on a pair of new boots or shoes on a journey, especially on a visit to the city; rather wear your easiest, oldest pair, otherwise you will soon be painfully disabled.

9. A loosely-fitting boot or shoe, while traveling in winter, will keep the foot warmer, without any stockings at all, than a tight pair, over the thickest, warmest hose.

10. Riding against a cold wind, immediately after singing or speaking in public, is suicide.

11. Many public speakers have been disabled for life by speaking under a hoarseness of voice.

12. If you happen to get wet in cold weather, keep moving on foot with a rapidity sufficient to keep off a feeling of chilliness until you get into a house, and not waiting to undress, drink instantly and plentifully of hot tea of some sort; then undress, wipe dry quickly, and put on warm, dry clothing.

13. Never go to bed with cold feet, if you want to sleep well.

14. If a person faints, place him instantly flat on a bed, or floor, or earth, on his back, and quietly let him alone at least for ten minutes; if it is simply a fainting fit, the blood, flowing on a level will more speedily equalize itself throughout the system; cold water dashed in the face, or a sitting position are unnecessary and pernicious.

15. Never blow your nose, nor spit the product of a cough, nor throw a fruit-peel on the sidewalk.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Nicotine found in the Viscera of a Snufftaker.

M. Morin, of Rouen, anxious to ascertain whether nicotine could be detected in the viscera, subjected the lungs and liver of a snufftaker, who had died at seventy, to a careful analysis, and found the alkaloid just mentioned. Portions of the lungs and liver were reduced to a pulp and soaked in distilled water, slightly acidulated for the lungs with sulphuric acid, and for the liver with oxalic acid. Several days afterward, the liquor was filtered through paper free from carbonate of lime, then concentrated to a third of its volume, and filtered again to free it from the flakes which had formed. It was now once more evaporated, and treated with pure alcohol, when fresh flakes formed. The alcohol was then removed by heat after filtration. The residue was mixed with a small quantity of pure potash. On cooling, sulphuric ether was added; and after a few hours, the decanted liquor was evaporated in vacuo. The substance now obtained, having the smell and the acrid taste of nicotine, was treated by the bichloride of mercury, chloride of platinum, tannin, biniodide of potassium, the salts of copper and lead, and with all the reactions of nicotine were obtained.—Lancet.

SOME FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO, which those who use it will read and forget:—

Rees' Cyclopedia says a drop or two of the oil, placed on the tongue of a cat, produces convulsions and death in the space of a minute.

A college of physicians has said that not less than twenty thousand, in our land, annually die by the use of this poison.

Dr. Shaw names some eighty diseases, and says they may be attributed to tobacco.

Gov. Sullivan says: "My brother, Gen. Sullivan, used snuff, and his snuff lodged him prematurely in the grave."

Bocarme, of Belgium, was murdered in two minutes and a half by a little nicotine, or alkali of tobacco.

Dr. Twitchell believed that sudden deaths and tobacco, among men, were usually found together, and he sustained this opinion by an array of facts altogether conclusive.

Three young men formed a smoking club, and they all died within two years of the the time they formed it. The doctor was asked what they died of. He said they were smoked to death.

A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth, in a dram shop. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said: "It was a mysterious act of God." The minister, at the funeral, consoled the friends by saying much the same thing. Physicians said it was "heart disease," and said nothing about the cause of the disease. A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said, "Tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart; it ceased to beat, and the victim fell!

☞ A distinguished physician of Paris, Dr. Robert De Lambelle, announces that a shock of electricity given a patient dying from the effects of chloroform, immediately counteracts its influence and restores the sufferer to life.

The Vale of Tears.

There is an awful, dreary vale,
That terminates life's barren heath;
There mighty foes the soul assail,
'Tis called—The Solemn Vale of Death.

This steep descent—this vale unknown—
Each child of Adam must descend,
Must tread the slippery path alone,
No human arm can then befriend.

At the dread entrance of that shade,
What gloomy fears distress the mind;
Nature shrinks back appalled, dismayed,
And fain would linger yet behind.

But, hark! methinks a voice I hear
Say: "Fainting soul, why fears prevail?
Dismiss those dark, foreboding fears,
For I've illumed this dreary vale.

"'Twas here I vanquished Death and Hell,
And, as I passed to realms of day,
Some sparkles of my glory fell,
That saints might track the shining way."

Enough; dear Jesus, be my guide,
I'll follow through the darkest vale;
I'll fear no evil at thy side,
But faith shall venture undismayed.

WALTER MANSFIELD.

Mixed Items.

Bro. Grant:—I pen the following items as a simple matter of duty before the Lord. In that light I request that they be inserted in the Crisis just as they are written, with the exception of all grammatical wrongs.

Item 1.—Short Articles.

I believe in short articles, most decidedly, in a religious paper, and short sermons in a christian pulpit. There are some cases in which short articles and short sermons are not consistent, but as a most general rule, they are in the order of benevolence and of God. I always intend to write short articles. But my present one must be an exception. To remedy the evil, however, of its length I cut it up into bits or items. Brethren and sisters, if you wish your articles read, let them be short. If you wish them not to be read, write them in "rope-yarn" style! I am as fond of reading as the most of people, but the last thing I will do is to read a long, dry article in a religious paper. Give us the honey—keep the comb, wax, hive and bees at home.

Item 2.—The Right kind of Preaching.

In a recent number of the Crisis I saw an article on the right kind of preaching. It appeared to me that the article was the right kind of an article, too. One of the greatest curses and severest blights on the christian ministry is this abominable disposition to ride a hobby. Some preachers seem to find it impossible to have more than one idea at a time—and that frequently a foolish one. This one idea must, hence, be ridden everywhere and in all circumstances, until it is "ring-boned," "spavined," "wind-broken," "sore-backed," "blind," and "foundered." God designs that the whole Gospel shall feed his people. Give us, hence, the healthy variety. "Preach the Word." Let human notions alone. Sugar, alone, sweet and good as it is, after a few days will contract the stomach, and starve a man to death, if he eat no other food. So will starch. There is variety in heaven, in earth, in the sea, in man, in the gospel.

Item 3.—New Notions.

The creed of some people seems to be—"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by all the new and strange notions that can be got up." And in some directions this creed seems well carried out. I find no fault with people for seeking "more light," but for proclaiming "more light" until they are sure it is "true light," and not ig. fat.!! Look at the history of a few past years. What notions—absurd, unscriptural, childish in the extreme—have been put forth as "more light!" 1. The door of mercy is shut. 2. The Bridegroom has come. 3. We are in the judgment day already! 4. Some of the dead have been raised of late. 5. There is no personal Devil. 6. There is no direct operation of the Holy Spirit on the human mind. 7. We must keep the Jewish Sabbath. 8. The New Jerusalem is a mere figure. 9. Infants will never be raised from the dead. 10. The angels who fell were Adam and Eve! And now, to crown the whole, we are told that the "light" is, "The wicked portion of mankind will never be raised at all"!! Why not go one step further, and say none of the dead will ever be raised at all? Why not swallow the whole French Infidel creed—"Death is an eternal sleep"? O Christ, thou art wounded in the house of thy friends!

Item 4.—All the Dead will be raised.

Does any one tell me not to write on this point; that it will hurt some one's feelings; that we all have a right to our opinions? Listen. We have no right to wrong opinions. It is far better that human feelings be hurt than that one of the most important and solemn truths of God should be ignored. Some persons, about whose piety or honesty I have nothing to say, have recently, openly and fiercely, made an attack on a bristling fortress of the Almighty—and must I be silent? God forbid. How, then, shall I hold up my face to my Judge? It is now proclaimed in "all our borders," by a number of professing preachers of the gospel, that "the wicked dead will not be raised at all"; and some of the feeble minded are being led from their common steadfastness in consequence thereof. Shall we let it alone? What are watchmen for? I will do my duty in this matter at all costs. The Bible teaches the resurrection of the dead—all of the dead—the dead small and great—the dead in the earth, in the sea, in death, in hades. This is the uniform teaching of the Bible. It is not an argument raised on a few isolated passages, but it is the general doctrine of the whole Bible. It is astounding that a sane man, pretending to believe in the word of God, should ever dream so wild a dream as the contrary. Poor human nature!

Item 5.—The Proof wanting.

What is the proof that the wicked will never be raised from the dead? The proof! There is none. Not a feeble particle. The argument is all on one side. I do not admit that the opposition has any reasonable ground whatever. It seems to me foolish to controvert the matter at all. "Thus saith the Lord" ought to settle the question forever. There are passages which do teach that the wicked as nations, armies, rulers, persecutors, etc., will not rise from the dead; but never one solitary hint that they will not rise to be judged and damned.

Item 6.—The Proof on the Right side.

Do you wish the proof on the right side? Here you have a little of it: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." "That they might obtain a better resurrection." Does not a better resurrection imply a worse one? "Many who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." "It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city." "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and yourselves thrust out." "And reserve the ungodly unto the day of judgment to be punished." "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." "I saw the dead small and great stand before God; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man, according to their works." "The second death." How can there be a second without a first? What is the punishment of the wicked? Death. Not the first death, which good people as well as wicked die; but death after judgment—the second death. These are only some few mites of the existing proof on the right side; there are mountains more of it. But is not this a plenty? Does God mean what he says? O unbelief!

Item 7.—What is done with the Evidence.

What do the opposition do with such plain and positive words of God? I will illustrate. Some years ago, in a certain part of the land, there was a high wind one night, which did some damage in a village in that region. Several signs were blown down, among other damage. And it so happened that both a lawyer and a man who worked at the turning business went to a workman to put up new signs for each of them. He accordingly prepared the signs in the day time and went in the evening to put them up. It was a dim night, and he made a mistake, and put the turner's sign over the lawyer's office. What was the wonder of the lawyer in the morning you may imagine, when he read over the entrance to his office—

All sorts of turning and twisting done here.

That is the way the words of God are treated in this matter. I most solemnly warn those engaged in this work of unaccountable error to remember, God looks "to the man who trembles at my Word." Beware! God will not be trifled with. You are doing the enemy's work. God's Holy Spirit is grieved with your recklessness. You are wounding the Christ who loves you. Beware! EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the Crisis.

Obedience.

In all the relations of life there is probably none enters more largely than the necessity of obedience. The word itself implies a superior; and the act properly attended to, when to the Superior Good, is always attended with benefit. For instance: A good and judicious parent requires his child to perform some act. It may not see the propriety of the requirement or act, yet it is not for it to stand and debate the subject; its business is to obey. This principle obtains also throughout the entire range of society. All are not conversant with the laws, yet the laws exist, and they exist for the keeping in check "the lawless and disobedient"; and in a properly administered and healthy state of affairs, the laws are no sooner broken than the penalty attached must follow, and we can only acknowledge the propriety of this, and why? In the absence of inflicted punishment there is a laxity of conduct. It may begin in the family, and the probabilities are it will not rest there, but will next be found in communities, then in States, and finally rebellion rears its hydra head, and what then?

The wisest and best of mortals have always advocated the prime necessity of obedience, and all who wish to live a godly and peaceable life must well attend to this. The christian is only a pilgrim, a sojourner in a country not his. It is no part of his business to interfere in the carnal strife. His weapon is not the tempered steel by which life can be taken. His weapon of defense is not a minnie rifle, nor is it a coat of mail. His only sword is that of the Spirit—the Word of God. So saith the Apostle to his Ephesian brethren whom he styles "the faithful in Christ Jesus." It is no business of the follower of Christ to take men's lives, but it is his business to try and imitate his Master by saving men's lives. For this purpose was the Son of God manifested. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams", therefore whatsoever the Master of the household has commanded, it MUST be obeyed if we wish for his favor, which is better than the present fleeting life.

I look back and ask, what is the cause of the broken and disjointed state of affairs in the professed church of Christ? I ask the present, and the answer I receive is, Disobedience. I think of the time in which the prophet Jeremiah lived, when the word of the Lord came to him, and when he was commanded,—"Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first fruits of his increase. . . . Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: thus saith the Lord, what iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity and are become vain? . . . . The priests said not where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit. . . . Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be ye horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water."

Thus the case stands at the present day. The Lord has in a variety of ways endeavored to endear himself to fallen humanity. He sent his prophets to Israel, and they slew them. He sent his well-beloved Son, and they said, "Come, let us kill him", and by wicked hands they slew him. But God raised him from the dead, and he did this because Jesus was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; and now he is highly exalted, and a name given him above every name, at which "every knee shall bow."

Paul, in his letter to his Roman brethren, declares himself separated unto the gospel of God, and it is that gospel which he had before promised by his prophets in the holy Scriptures; and being made a minister for God, he also declares that the Jesus, whom we call Lord, was declared to be the Son of God with power by his resurrection from the dead; and he further makes known to his brethren the fact that the apostleship they received warranted the declaration that Christ was not only the burden of prophecy, but that he was of the seed of David according to the flesh, and raised from the dead with the prerogative to command OBEDIENCE to the faith among all nations for his name.

In a time called "times of ignorance," it is said "God winked at (them), but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man (Jesus Christ) whom he hath ordained." And of this Judge it is said, "In righteousness he doth judge and make war."

With these truths before us, what is the duty of every one who hath named the name of Christ in sincerity and in truth? To my mind the question is perfectly clear. In the first place, I am settled in the truth that "the meek shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." I also read that its inheritance is dependent upon our being willing and obedient; for saith the Lord by Isaiah, who addressed himself particularly to Judah and Jerusalem, and, in general, to ALL,—"If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured by the sword for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." "Rebellion is as the sin of divination, and stubbornness as iniquity and idolatry"; and for any in these days to be deceiving themselves with the current fables of superstition, and at the same time "hope they have a hope," and who are at the same time denying the Lord of life and glory by their non-attendance to plainly revealed duties,—permit me, for the love of Christ, to ask you to forbear, show how much you can honor God and his Son by believing the gospel and obeying its requirements, and all, all will be well in the day he shall sit as a refiner and Judge. The truth, and the love of it, let all cherish. We are separated by it, or it stands as God's condemning agent. G. W. Y.

Strangers.

How good it is to feel that we are strangers to this world,—that here we have no continuing city, no permanent abiding place. The christian can rejoice, and his cup of joy may be full, as he looks forward by faith to one soon to come, and this cold, unfriendly, fighting world exchanged for a world of peace, the paradise of God. What greater theme for rejoicing than the hope of the gospel which reveals to us the earth filled with the glory of God, sorrow, pain and death forever vanquished, and the inhabitants all acquainted, all at home? How cheering the thought that there will be no strangers there. Christ will be a King of peace. His subjects will all be peaceable, for they will have his Spirit, and be filled with it.

When the King shall in glory descend, and every eye beholds him, he will say to the pilgrims and strangers—the poor of this world, but rich in faith,—Children, come home! Brethren, we want to hear this said to us,—Children, come home. And in order to go home, we must have the distinguishing characteristics necessary to gain that home; something that distinguishes us from this world, for as this world and the world to come are entirely different in their nature, so the would-be inhabitant of that world must be changed in character, i. e., put off the "old man" with his "deeds," and "put on Christ," their Captain and pattern. This step takes one from the broad road that leads to death, and places him in the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal. How true the saying of the Lord, that few find it.

I was forcibly reminded of this fact recently while conversing with a minister who has preached the gospel for a number of years, as he claims. A short time since there was a gathering of professors and non-professors; wicked and ungodly men were there, and some who in days past had rejoiced in hope of the speedy return of the Lord of glory were seen in this assembly. Before them this minister advanced sentiments that the ungodly could endorse and still keep in the broad road. The professor, and those who had looked for the King of glory, were all united, and the injunction of the Lord, "I have chosen you out of the world," disregarded.

The church seems to be impelled down with the mass, and the tide carries everything before its resistless power. The unclean spirits are in the valley of decision. The wicked are being gathered in bundles to be burned; and the whole world is being gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

I have asked myself the question, if this is coming out and being separate, if this is being found in the narrow path, who is there but may go in it? What need of a change of heart; what need of being pilgrims and strangers here; what need of a Savior, if we can take a course that is heartily approved by the proud, by the rich, by the profane swearer, by those who drink from the intoxicating cup until its maddening effects render them fit subjects to fight? All these, together with ministers and professors, can be seen going in one road, having one spirit; and it is a "broad road" in which so many can travel. I feel to say, Give me the "narrow" way, with the few strangers and pilgrims who have respect to the recompense of the reward, for the end thereof is eternal life.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Bring this test to bear upon the two classes under consideration, and judge who are Christ's and who are not. May the Lord help us to discover between the Spirit of Christ and the deceiving spirits. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God or not." The Spirit and the Word agree. Brethren, stand by the Captain of our salvation, have on the whole armor, and above all take the "shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Jesus will surely conquer. Victory will be ours ere long. For the narrow way which is traveled by pilgrims and strangers to this world,—those who walk by faith, and live by faith (Heb. 11th chapter),—ends in our Home, where peace reigns triumphant. May the Lord help us. Amen.

Acrostic.

Here in this dark, lone vale
Of sorrows, sighs and tears,
Roaming o'er hill and dale,
And fraught with hopes and fears,
Canst find no resting place
Ever here thou art toiling on—
Loth to give up the race
Heavenward, till the victory's won.
And though disease or sin beset,
Soon the blest morn will come,
Thy weary feet shall rest them yet
In thy long-wished-for home.
Naught shalt thou suffer more,
Golden harps shall greet thee then,
Safe on the shining shore.

Can true Christians Fight?

"My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight," was the language of Christ. Now shall we as believers in Christ and his doctrine, arm ourselves and go into the battle-field? Shall we take up the sword to war with our brother? "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," are the words of Christ, and again he commanded his disciples to "love one another," for "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples." Now as Christ's disciples are known by their loving one another, those that are at war with each other cannot be Christ's disciples, but are governed by "the spirits of devils," therefore we whose "weapons are not carnal" should come out and bear our testimony against war, in the fear of God, standing firm for him and his truth.

I felt influenced in my mind to write this, (although young in the good cause of Christ,) as I never yet have been able to see how a man can be a true christian and fight or believe in fighting. How he can take the Bible in one hand and pray to God for protection against those whose hearts God has power to change, and yet grasp the bloody sword of war in the other, not daring to trust in God's promises, or how he can in his heart follow out the precepts of the "Golden Rule," of doing unto others as he would that others should do unto him, while dealing out death and destruction with his rifle, or how he can pray to God to "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," while sending the destructive bomb into their midst. What I have written I have expressed in a spirit of friendship. S. G. GIDLEY.

Not in Darkness.

How blessed not to be in darkness, in such a critical period of the world's history! How blessed not to be preaching "peace and safety" when "sudden destruction cometh"! How blessed to be in union and harmony with Jehovah and his Son Jesus Christ, now the appointed day of judgment is just before us!

How blessed to have a heart that loves to obey our Lord and Master to the letter, and literally and positively "watch . . . . and pray always, that (we) may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. Bless the Lord for such a heart!—a heart that rejoices in the purpose of Jesus to destroy the works of the devil, and to establish his own kingdom.

Bless the Lord for the knowledge of heirship to that kingdom! SAMUEL COREY.

Let Duty guide Thee.

"Haste not! rest not! calmly wait;
Meekly bear the storms of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right whate'er betide!
Haste not! rest not! conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last!"
—Goethe.

Let duty guide thee, soldier, in the stern conflict of daily life. Worldly interests will try to intervene between thee and thy duty; heed them not. Temptation will arise to shake thy faith in God and right; resist them manfully. Human passions will strive to poison the heart with wild and fierce emotions, that fain would drown thy soul in the depths of perdition; cherish them not even for a moment. A thousand foes will meet thee at every turn in thy journey heavenward. Some, crafty and insidious, will seek to allure thee into the paths of folly by deceitful words of unmeaning praise, while others with foul words of slander will try to tarnish thy name with deeds of which thy heart never dreamed. Meet them all alike, firmly, sternly resisting the blandishments of the one, and meekly bearing the reproach the other would heap upon thee. In all thine actions, thoughts and desires, let duty guide thee. Let right triumph in all thy deeds, whether the world praises or derides thee.

Shrink not from labor and toil when duty calls. Avoid not the conflict against evil when the bugle note of the contest summons thee to bear aloft the standard of truth. Cast aside all considerations of self for the sake of Him who agonized in Gethsemane, and died on Calvary for thee. The hour, the time, the age demands all thy energies for the right, for justice, God. Perform thy duty well while the battle rages, and when peace shall wreathe her banner around the universe, noble will be thy reward.

Yes, scarred warrior, when the battle is over, and the wild commotion of earth has given place to the grateful scenes of Messiah's peaceful reign, sweet indeed will be thy repose, blest thy retirement from the long conflict. Crowned with honor for every duty performed, rewarded for every victory gained over sin, thou shalt ever rejoice in the smiles of the dear Redeemer, and ever chant the pean of praise around his throne. That will be honor enough, a reward rich enough to repay all sacrifices of self-interest here. Eternal repose in the kingdom of God, unending joy in the society of earth's redeemed, of angels who have ministered unseen to thee in thine earthly journey, and of Him who redeemed thee.

Then, christian warrior, battle for the right, rest not, faint not, though weary with the increasing conflict, but urge thy course onward, for glory, honor and immortality is thy sure reward in the bright millennial age to come.

The Perfection of Saints.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 48.

In Gen. 17: 1, the Lord said to Abram, "Walk before me, and be thou perfect." And when he made a covenant with Abram, he changed his name to Abraham, because he was to be the father of many nations. And in Lev. 11: 44, the Lord said to the children of Israel, "Ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy, for I am holy." In Luke 6: 36, our Savior instructs us how we should manifest a kind and merciful disposition towards our enemies, in order to pattern after our kind and heavenly Father. In Col. 1: 28, the apostle Paul tells how he preaches Christ the hope of glory to the saints, teaching them in all wisdom, in order that every man may be presented as a "perfect man in Christ Jesus." Also in Col. 4: 12, the apostle speaks of Epaphras, a servant of God, laboring fervently in prayer, that the saints may "stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." And James (1: 4) informs us that we must let "patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." In Eph. 5: 1, 2, we are required to be "followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us."

Dear brethren and sisters, in the tenderness of love I would say to you, I humbly hope you will pray earnestly to our heavenly Father, that he would enable you by his wisdom and grace to go forth and "grow up as calves of the stall"; that you may shine forth in the kingdom, when the precious Savior comes to gather his jewels, and reign with them forever. We are not required to be perfect gods; but to be perfect men and women in Christ; and in order to attain to this state of enjoyment, we must go on unto perfection; yes, we must labor with good brother Paul to keep our bodies under, lest we ourselves should become castaways. We must try, in the strength of Israel's God, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and study to make ourselves useful in the work of the Lord what little time we have to use the means for the salvation of our fellow beings. For this purpose let us examine ourselves, and see if we be in the faith; and if we are, let us add to our faith virtue (or boldness), and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, or godlikeness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity, or love. And if we are thus armed and equipped with these spiritual weapons, we shall be able through grace to slay the enemies of the cross, and bring them humble at the feet of Jesus, where they will become clothed and in their right minds.

I hope these few lines written in prayers and tears, will be blessed to the good of my dear brethren and sisters in the Advent cause, and to the salvation of some one of my fellow beings. Yours looking for the King of the true Israel. B. PERHAM.

Millerism Revived.

If any of our readers have supposed that Millerism died out with Mr. Miller, its author, they were mistaken. The Advent Herald still lives and continues its figurings to prove that the end is at hand. The Rev. J. V. Himes, in its last issue, announces that he is about to set forth on a new mission to proclaim the kingdom coming. His manifesto reads much like that of a general about to invade a hostile country. He says:—

"I enter on this glorious work anew in the strength of God and the unshaken confidence in Protestant principles of interpretation—that the visions of Daniel reach to the everlasting kingdom—that the book of Revelation gives a history of the true church, and also of the papal power, and carries us to the end of all things—that a prophetic day denotes a natural year, and a prophetic time 360 natural years—that the times and seasons were to be understood and proclaimed. The church was not to be in darkness, that that day should overtake her as a thief. And believing (with the most distinguished, pious, and learned expositors of the word of God in this century) that the signs of this time and the fulfillment of the prophecies indicate the speedy termination of this dispensation, I give myself entirely to the work of proclaiming these things. As a 'watchman on the walls of Zion' I can do no less, if I am faithful to my proper work.

I ask the sympathy, prayers, and cooperation of all who cherish this faith, and look for the speedy coming of the Lord in his kingdom, whether you look for the event soon, without definite time, or, with me, to the termination of the periods in 1867 and 1868.

I shall solicit new subscriptions for the Advent Herald, collect old dues, and further the interests of the office."

It is certainly gratifying to those who are not quite ready for the general breaking up, to know that Mr. Himes has put it off till "1867 or 8," six or seven years ahead. But a little sense would suggest that past failures should make him more modest in his prophecies, and especially to avoid "fixing the time." The reckoning has been so often corrected that it will hardly bear tinkering again.

The above was taken from what purports to be the Christian Observer. The thought occurred to me while reading it, whether the name was appropriate. What ought to be expected of a "Christian Observer" but a close watching of the signs of the times, in connection with the study of prophecy, and a Christ-like spirit in proclaiming the same to a world? Yet what have we here? An ignoring of the great truths concerning prophecy,—the coming of our blessed Lord and establishment of his kingdom, and the most contemptuous ridicule cast upon one who is endeavoring to convince his fellow men of their mighty weight and certainty. Is not the article a fair sample indeed of the "scoffing" of the last days? Where in the ranks of infidelity could we find a clearer or more striking one? A "Christian Observer!" talking about not being "quite ready for the general breaking up"—"tinkering the reckoning again," and so on,—phrases that we might well expect from the lips of the bar-room gambler, or any openly profane and wicked reviler of christianity! A paper professing to declare from week to week the truths of religion! The Lord pity them in their blindness and ignorance! "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you." With such a benediction from such a source, well may those who are proclaiming God's truth rejoice, thank God, and take courage. The time of [illegible] is near. [illegible]

Our Passions like a Lion.—An Indian once brought up a young lion, and finding him weak and harmless, never attempted to control him. ### The Vale of Tears.

There is an awful, dreary vale,
That terminates life's barren heath;
There mighty foes the soul assail,
'Tis called—The Solemn Vale of Death.

This steep descent—this vale unknown—
Each child of Adam must descend,
Must tread the slippery path alone;
No human arm can then befriend.

At the dread entrance of that shade,
What gloomy fears distress the mind;
Nature shrinks back appalled, dismayed,
And fain would linger yet behind.

But, hark! methinks a voice I hear
Say: "Fainting soul, why fears prevail?
Dismiss those dark, foreboding fears,
For I've illumed this dreary vale.

"'Twas here I vanquished Death and Hell,
And, as I passed to realms of day,
Some sparkles of my glory fell,
That saints might track the shining way."

Enough; dear Jesus, be my guide,
I'll follow through the darkest vale;
I'll fear no evil at thy side,
But faith shall venture undismayed.

Mixed Items.

Bro. Grant:—I pen the following items as a simple matter of duty before the Lord. In that light I request that they be inserted in the Crisis just as they are written, with the exception of all grammatical wrongs.

Item 1.—Short Articles.

I believe in short articles, most decidedly, in a religious paper, and short sermons in a christian pulpit. There are some cases in which short articles and short sermons are not consistent, but as a most general rule, they are in the order of benevolence and of God. I always intend to write short articles. But my present one must be an exception. To remedy the evil, however, of its length I cut it up into bits or items. Brethren and sisters, if you wish your articles read, let them be short. If you wish them not to be read, write them in "rope-yarn" style! I am as fond of reading as the most of people, but the last thing I will do is to read a long, dry article in a religious paper. Give us the honey—keep the comb, wax, hive and bees at home.

Item 2.—The Right kind of Preaching.

In a recent number of the Crisis I saw an article on the right kind of preaching. It appeared to me that the article was the right kind of an article, too. One of the greatest curses and severest blights on the christian ministry is this abominable disposition to ride a hobby. Some preachers seem to find it impossible to have more than one idea at a time—and that frequently a foolish one. This one idea must, hence, be ridden everywhere and in all circumstances, until it is "ring-boned," "spavined," "wind-broken," "sore-backed," "blind," and "foundered." God designs that the whole Gospel shall feed his people. Give us, hence, the healthy variety. "Preach the Word." Let human notions alone. Sugar, alone, sweet and good as it is, after a few days will contract the stomach, and starve a man to death, if he eat no other food. So will starch. There is variety in heaven, in earth, in the sea, in man, in the gospel.

Item 3.—New Notions.

The creed of some people seems to be—"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by all the new and strange notions that can be got up." And in some directions this creed seems well carried out. I find no fault with people for seeking "more light," but for proclaiming "more light" until they are sure it is "true light," and not ig. fat!! Look at the history of a few past years. What notions—absurd, unscriptural, childish in the extreme—have been put forth as "more light!" 1. The door of mercy is shut. 2. The Bridegroom has come. 3. We are in the judgment day already! 4. Some of the dead have been raised of late. 5. There is no personal Devil. 6. There is no direct operation of the Holy Spirit on the human mind. 7. We must keep the Jewish Sabbath. 8. The New Jerusalem is a mere figure. 9. Infants will never be raised from the dead. 10. The angels who fell were Adam and Eve! And now, to crown the whole, we are told that the "light" is, "The wicked portion of mankind will never be raised at all"!! Why not go one step further, and say none of the dead will ever be raised at all? Why not swallow the whole French Infidel creed—"Death is an eternal sleep"? O Christ, thou art wounded in the house of thy friends!

Item 4.—All the Dead will be raised.

Does any one tell me not to write on this point; that it will hurt some one's feelings; that we all have a right to our opinions? Listen. We have no right to wrong opinions. It is far better that human feelings be hurt than that one of the most important and solemn truths of God should be ignored. Some persons, about whose piety or honesty I have nothing to say, have recently, openly and fiercely, made an attack on a bristling fortress of the Almighty—and must I be silent? God forbid. How, then, shall I hold up my face to my Judge? It is now proclaimed in "all our borders," by a number of professing preachers of the gospel, that "the wicked dead will not be raised at all"; and some of the feeble minded are being led from their common steadfastness in consequence thereof. Shall we let it alone? What are watchmen for? I will do my duty in this matter at all costs. The Bible teaches the resurrection of the dead—all of the dead—the dead small and great—the dead in the earth, in the sea, in death, in hades. This is the uniform teaching of the Bible. It is not an argument raised on a few isolated passages, but it is the general doctrine of the whole Bible. It is astounding that a sane man, pretending to believe in the word of God, should ever dream so wild a dream as the contrary. Poor human nature!

Item 5.—The Proof wanting.

What is the proof that the wicked will never be raised from the dead? The proof! There is none. Not a feeble particle. The argument is all on one side. I do not admit that the opposition has any reasonable ground whatever. It seems to me foolish to controvert the matter at all. "Thus saith the Lord" ought to settle the question forever. There are passages which do teach that the wicked as nations, armies, rulers, persecutors, etc., will not rise from the dead; but never one solitary hint that they will not rise to be judged and damned.

Item 6.—The Proof on the Right side.

Do you wish the proof on the right side? Here you have a little of it: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." "That they might obtain a better resurrection." Does not a better resurrection imply a worse one? "Many who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." "It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city." "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and yourselves thrust out." "And reserve the ungodly unto the day of judgment to be punished." "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." "I saw the dead small and great stand before God; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man, according to their works." "The second death." How can there be a second without a first? What is the punishment of the wicked? Death. Not the first death, which good people as well as wicked die; but death after judgment—the second death. These are only some few mites of the existing proof on the right side; there are mountains more of it. But is not this a plenty? Does God mean what he says? O unbelief!

Item 7.—What is done with the Evidence.

What do the opposition do with such plain and positive words of God? I will illustrate. Some years ago, in a certain part of the land, there was a high wind one night, which did some damage in a village in that region. Several signs were blown down, among other damage. And it so happened that both a lawyer and a man who worked at the turning business went to a workman to put up new signs for each of them. He accordingly prepared the signs in the day time and went in the evening to put them up. It was a dim night, and he made a mistake, and put the turner's sign over the lawyer's office. What was the wonder of the lawyer in the morning you may imagine, when he read over the entrance to his office—

All sorts of turning and twisting done here.

That is the way the words of God are treated in this matter. I, most solemnly warn those engaged in this work of unaccountable error to remember, God looks "to the man who trembles at my Word." Beware! God will not be trifled with. You are doing the enemy's work. God's Holy Spirit is grieved with your recklessness. You are wounding the Christ who loves you. Beware! Edwin Burnham.

For the Crisis.

Obedience.

In all the relations of life there is probably none enters more largely than the necessity of obedience. The word itself implies a superior; and the act properly attended to, when to the Superior Good, is always attended with benefit. For instance: A good and judicious parent requires his child to perform some act. It may not see the propriety of the requirement or act, yet it is not for it to stand and debate the subject; its business is to obey. This principle obtains also throughout the entire range of society. All are not conversant with the laws, yet the laws exist, and they exist for the keeping in check "the lawless and disobedient"; and in a properly administered and healthy state of affairs, the laws are no sooner broken than the penalty attached must follow; and we can only acknowledge the propriety of this, and why? In the absence of inflicted punishment there is a laxity of conduct. It may begin in the family, and the probabilities are it will not rest there, but will next be found in communities, then in States, and finally rebellion rears its hydra head, and what then?

The wisest and best of mortals have always advocated the prime necessity of obedience; and all who wish to live a godly and peaceable life must well attend to this. The christian is only a pilgrim, a sojourner in a country not his. It is no part of his business to interfere in the carnal strife. His weapon is not the tempered steel by which life can be taken. His weapon of defense is not a minnie rifle, nor is it a coat of mail. His only sword is that of the Spirit—the Word of God. So saith the Apostle to his Ephesian brethren whom he styles "the faithful in Christ Jesus." It is no business of the follower of Christ to take men's lives; but it is his business to try and imitate his Master by saving men's lives. For this purpose was the Son of God manifested. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams", therefore whatsoever the Master of the household has commanded, it must be obeyed if we wish for his favor, which is better than the present fleeting life.

I look back and ask, what is the cause of the broken and disjointed state of affairs in the professed church of Christ? I ask the present, and the answer I receive is, Disobedience. I think of the time in which the prophet Jeremiah lived, when the word of the Lord came to him, and when he was commanded,—"Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first fruits of his increase. . . . Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: thus saith the Lord, what iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity and are become vain? . . . . The priests said not where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit. . . . Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be ye horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water."

Thus the case stands at the present day. The Lord has in a variety of ways endeavored to endear himself to fallen humanity. He sent his prophets to Israel, and they slew them. He sent his well-beloved Son, and they said, "Come, let us kill him", and by wicked hands they slew him. But God raised him from the dead, and he did this because Jesus was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; and now he is highly exalted, and a name given him above every name, at which "every knee shall bow."

Paul, in his letter to his Roman brethren, declares himself separated unto the gospel of God, and it is that gospel which he had before promised by his prophets in the holy Scriptures; and being made a minister for God, he also declares that the Jesus, whom we call Lord, was declared to be the Son of God with power by his resurrection from the dead; and he further makes known to his brethren the fact that the apostleship they received warranted the declaration that Christ was not only the burden of prophecy, but that he was of the seed of David according to the flesh, and raised from the dead with the prerogative to command obedience to the faith among all nations for his name.

In a time called "times of ignorance," it is said "God winked at (them), but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man (Jesus Christ) whom he hath ordained." And of this Judge it is said, "In righteousness he doth judge and make war."

With these truths before us, what is the duty of every one who hath named the name of Christ in sincerity and in truth? To my mind the question is perfectly clear. In the first place, I am settled in the truth that "the meek shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." I also read that its inheritance is dependent upon our being willing and obedient; for saith the Lord by Isaiah, who addressed himself particularly to Judah and Jerusalem, and, in general, to all,—"If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured by the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." "Rebellion is as the sin of divination, and stubbornness as iniquity and idolatry"; and for any in these days to be deceiving themselves with the current fables of superstition, and at the same time "hope they have a hope," and who are at the same time denying the Lord of life and glory by their non-attendance to plainly revealed duties,—permit me, for the love of Christ, to ask you to forbear; show how much you can honor God and his Son by believing the gospel and obeying its requirements, and all, all will be well in the day he shall sit as a refiner and Judge. The truth, and the love of it, let all cherish. We are separated by it, or it stands as God's condemning agent. O. W. Y.

Strangers.

How good it is to feel that we are strangers to this world,—that here we have no continuing city, no permanent abiding place. The christian can rejoice, and his cup of joy may be full, as he looks forward by faith to one soon to come, and this cold, unfriendly, fighting world exchanged for a world of peace, the paradise of God. What greater theme for rejoicing than the hope of the gospel which reveals to us the earth filled with the glory of God, sorrow, pain and death forever vanquished, and the inhabitants all acquainted, all at home? How cheering the thought that there will be no strangers there. Christ will be a King of peace. His subjects will all be peaceable, for they will have his Spirit, and be filled with it.

When the King shall in glory descend, and every eye beholds him, he will say to the pilgrims and strangers—the poor of this world, but rich in faith,—Children, come home! Brethren, we want to hear this said to us,—Children, come home. And in order to go home, we must have the distinguishing characteristics necessary to gain that home; something that distinguishes us from this world; for as this world and the world to come are entirely different in their nature, so the would-be inhabitant of that world must be changed in character, i. e, put off the "old man" with his "deeds," and "put on Christ," their Captain and pattern. This step takes one from the broad road that leads to death, and places him in the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal. How true the saying of the Lord, that few find it.

I was forcibly reminded of this fact recently while conversing with a minister who has preached the gospel for a number of years, as he claims. A short time since there was a gathering of professors and non-professors; wicked and ungodly men were there; and some who in days past had rejoiced in hope of the speedy return of the Lord of glory were seen in this assembly. Before them this minister advanced sentiments that the ungodly could endorse and still keep in the broad road. The professor, and those who had looked for the King of glory, were all united, and the injunction of the Lord, "I have chosen you out of the world," disregarded.

The church seems to be impelled down with the mass, and the tide carries everything before its resistless power. The unclean spirits are in the valley of decision. The wicked are being gathered in bundles to be burned; and the whole world is being gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

I have asked myself the question, if this is coming out and being separate, if this is being found in the narrow path, who is there but may go in it? What need of a change of heart; what need of being pilgrims and strangers here; what need of a Savior, if we can take a course that is heartily approved by the proud, by the rich, by the profane swearer, by those who drink from the intoxicating cup until its maddening effects render them fit subjects to fight? All these, together with ministers and professors, can be seen going in one road, having one spirit; and it is a "broad road" in which so many can travel. I feel to say, Give me the "narrow" way, with the few strangers and pilgrims who have respect to the recompense of the reward, for the end thereof is eternal life.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Bring this test to bear upon the two classes under consideration, and judge who are Christ's and who are not. May the Lord help us to discover between the Spirit of Christ and the deceiving spirits. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God or not." The Spirit and the Word agree. Brethren, stand by the Captain of our salvation, have on the whole armor, and above all take the "shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Jesus will surely conquer. Victory will be ours ere long. For the narrow way which is traveled by pilgrims and strangers to this world,—those who walk by faith, and live by faith (Heb. 11th chapter),—ends in our Home, where peace reigns triumphant. May the Lord help us. Amen.

Acrostic.

Here in this dark, lone vale
Of sorrows, sighs and tears,
Roaming o'er hill and dale,
And fraught with hopes and fears;
Canst find no resting place?
Ever here thou'rt toiling on—
Loth to give up thy race
Heavenward, till the victory's won.
And though disease or sin beset,
Soon the blest morn will come,
Thy weary feet shall rest them yet
In thy long-wished-for home
Naught shalt thou suffer more;
Golden harps shall greet thee then,
Safe on the shining shore.

Can true Christians Fight?

"My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight," was the language of Christ. Now shall we as believers in Christ and his doctrine, arm ourselves and go into the battle-field? Shall we take up the sword to war with our brother? "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," are the words of Christ; and again he commanded his disciples to "love one another," for "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples." Now as Christ's disciples are known by their loving one another, those that are at war with each other cannot be Christ's disciples, but are governed by "the spirits of devils," therefore we whose "weapons are not carnal" should come out and bear our testimony against war, in the fear of God, standing firm for him and his truth.

I felt influenced in my mind to write this, (although young in the good cause of Christ,) as I never yet have been able to see how a man can be a true christian and fight or believe in fighting. How he can take the Bible in one hand and pray to God for protection against those whose hearts God has power to change, and yet grasp the bloody sword of war in the other, not daring to trust in God's promises; or how he can in his heart follow out the precepts of the "Golden Rule," of doing unto others as he would that others should do unto him, while dealing out death and destruction with his rifle; or how he can pray to God to "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," while sending the destructive bomb into their midst. What I have written I have expressed in a spirit of friendship. S. G. Gidley.

Not in Darkness.

How blessed not to be in darkness, in such a critical period of the world's history! How blessed not to be preaching "peace and safety" when "sudden destruction cometh"! How blessed to be in union and harmony with Jehovah and his Son Jesus Christ, now the appointed day of judgment is just before us!

How blessed to have a heart that loves to obey our Lord and Master to the letter, and literally and positively "watch . . . . and pray always, that (we) may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21 : 36. Bless the Lord for such a heart!—a heart that rejoices in the purpose of Jesus to destroy the works of the devil, and to establish his own kingdom.

Bless the Lord for the knowledge of heirship to that kingdom! Samuel Curry.

Let Duty guide Thee.

"Haste not! rest not! calmly wait;
Meekly bear the storms of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right whate'er betide!
Haste not! rest not! conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last!"
—Goethe.

Let duty guide thee, soldier, in the stern conflict of daily life. Worldly interests will try to intervene between thee and thy duty; heed them not. Temptation will arise to shake thy faith in God and right; resist them manfully. Human passions will strive to poison the heart with wild and fierce emotions, that fain would drown thy soul in the depths of perdition; cherish them not even for a moment. A thousand foes will meet thee at every turn in thy journey heavenward. Some, crafty and insidious, will seek to allure thee into the paths of folly by deceitful words of unmeaning praise, while others with foul words of slander will try to tarnish thy name with deeds of which thy heart never dreamed. Meet them all alike, firmly, sternly resisting the blandishments of the one, and meekly bearing the reproach the other would heap upon thee. In all thine actions, thoughts and desires, let duty guide thee. Let right triumph in all thy deeds, whether the world praises or derides thee.

Shrink not from labor and toil when duty calls. Avoid not the conflict against evil when the bugle note of the contest summons thee to bear aloft the standard of truth. Cast aside all considerations of self for the sake of Him who agonized in Gethsemane, and died on Calvary for thee. The hour, the time, the age demands all thy energies for the right, for justice, God. Perform thy duty well while the battle rages, and when peace shall wreathe her banner around the universe, noble will be thy reward.

Yes, scarred warrior, when the battle is over, and the wild commotion of earth has given place to the grateful scenes of Messiah's peaceful reign, sweet indeed will be thy repose, blest thy retirement from the long conflict. Crowned with honor for every duty performed, rewarded for every victory gained over sin, thou shalt ever rejoice in the smiles of the dear Redeemer, and ever chant the pean of praise around his throne. That will be honor enough, a reward rich enough to repay all sacrifices of self-interest here. Eternal repose in the kingdom of God, unending joy in the society of earth's redeemed, of angels who have ministered unseen to thee in thine earthly journey, and of Him who redeemed thee.

Then, christian warrior, battle for the right, rest not, faint not, though weary with the increasing conflict, but urge thy course onward, for glory, honor and immortality is thy sure reward in the bright millennial age to come.

Palmer, Mass. Orrin P. Allen.

The Perfection of Saints.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5 48.

In Gen. 17 . 1, the Lord said to Abram, "Walk before me, and be thou perfect." And when he made a covenant with Abram, he changed his name to Abraham, because he was to be the father of many nations. And in Lev. 11 : 44, the Lord said to the children of Israel, "Ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy." In Luke 6 : 36, our Savior instructs us how we should manifest a kind and merciful disposition towards our enemies, in order to pattern after our kind and heavenly Father. In Col. 1 : 28, the apostle Paul tells how he preaches Christ the hope of glory to the saints, teaching them in all wisdom, in order that every man may be presented as a "perfect man in Christ Jesus." Also in Col. 4 : 12, the apostle speaks of Epaphras, a servant of God, laboring fervently in prayer, that the saints may "stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." And James (1 : 4) informs us that we must let "patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." In Eph. 5 : 1, 2, we are required to be "followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us."

Dear brethren and sisters, in the tenderness of love I would say to you, I humbly hope you will pray earnestly to our heavenly Father, that he would enable you by his wisdom and grace to go forth and "grow up as calves of the stall"; that you may shine forth in the kingdom, when the precious Savior comes to gather his jewels, and reign with them forever. We are not required to be perfect gods; but to be perfect men and women in Christ: and in order to attain to this state of enjoyment, we must go on unto perfection; yea, we must labor with good brother Paul to keep our bodies under, lest we ourselves should become castaways. We must try, in the strength of Israel's God, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and study to make ourselves useful in the work of the Lord what little time we have to use the means for the salvation of our fellow beings. For this purpose let us examine ourselves, and see if we be in the faith; and if we are, let us add to our faith virtue (or boldness), and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, or godlikeness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity, or love. And if we are thus armed and equipped with those spiritual weapons, we shall be able through grace to slay the enemies of the cross, and bring them humble at the feet of Jesus, where they will become clothed and in their right minds.

I hope these few lines written in prayers and tears, will be blessed to the good of my dear brethren and sisters in the Advent cause, and to the salvation of some one of my fellow beings. Yours looking for the King of the true Israel. B. Pennam.

Millerism Revived.

If any of our readers have supposed that Millerism died out with Mr. Miller, its author, they were mistaken. The Advent Herald still lives and continues its figurings to prove that the end is at hand. The Rev. J. V. Himes, in its last issue, announces that he is about to set forth on a new mission to proclaim the kingdom coming. His manifesto reads much like that of a general about to invade a hostile country. He says:—

"I enter on this glorious work anew in the strength of God and the unshaken confidence in Protestant principles of interpretation—that the visions of Daniel reach to the everlasting kingdom—that the book of Revelation gives a history of the true church, and also of the papal power, and carries us to the end of all things—that a prophetic day denotes a natural year, and a prophetic time 360 natural years—that the times and seasons were to be understood and proclaimed. The church was not to be in darkness, that that day should overtake her as a thief. And believing (with the most distinguished, pious, and learned expositors of the word of God in this century) that the signs of this time and the fulfillment of the prophecies indicate the speedy termination of this dispensation, I give myself entirely to the work of proclaiming these things. As a 'watchman on the walls of Zion' I can do no less, if I am faithful to my proper work.

I ask the sympathy, prayers, and cooperation of all who cherish this faith, and look for the speedy coming of the Lord in his kingdom, whether you look for the event soon, without definite time, or, with me, to the termination of the periods in 1867 and 1868.

I shall solicit new subscriptions for the Advent Herald, collect old dues, and further the interests of the office."

It is certainly gratifying to those who are not quite ready for the general breaking up, to know that Mr. Himes has put it off till "1867 or 8," six or seven years ahead. But a little sense would suggest that past failures should make him more modest in his prophecies, and especially to avoid "fixing the time." The reckoning has been so often corrected that it will hardly bear tinkering again.

The above was taken from what purports to be the Christian Observer. The thought occurred to me while reading it, whether the name was appropriate. What ought to be expected of a "Christian Observer" but a close watching of the signs of the times, in connection with the study of prophecy, and a Christ-like spirit in proclaiming the same to a world? Yet what have we here? An ignoring of the great truths concerning prophecy,—the coming of our blessed Lord and establishment of his kingdom, and the most contemptuous ridicule cast upon one who is endeavoring to convince his fellow men of their mighty weight and certainty. Is not the article a fair sample indeed of the "scoffing" of the last days? Where in the ranks of infidelity could we find a clearer or more striking one? A "Christian Observer!" talking about not being "quite ready for the general breaking up"—"tinkering the reckoning again," and so on,—phrases that we might well expect from the lips of the bar-room gambler, or any openly profane and wicked reviler of christianity! A paper professing to declare from week to week the truths of religion! The Lord pity them in their blindness and ignorance! "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you." With such a benediction from such a source, well may those who are proclaiming God's truth rejoice, thank God, and take courage. The time of deliverance is near. A. G. [illegible]

Our Passions like a Lion.—An Indian once brought up a young lion, and finding him weak and harmless, never attempted to control him. Every day the lion gained in strength and became more formidable, until at last, when excited by rage, he fell upon the Indian and tore him to pieces. Our evil habits and passions [illegible] much resemble that lion.

The Vale of Tears.

There is an awful, dreary vale,
That terminates life's barren heath;
There mighty foes the soul assail,
'Tis called—The Solemn Vale of Death.

This steep descent—this vale unknown—
Each child of Adam must descend,
Must tread the slippery path alone;
No human arm can then befriend.

At the dread entrance of that shade,
What gloomy fears distress the mind;
Nature shrinks back appalled, dismayed,
And fain would linger yet behind.

But, hark! methinks a voice I hear
Say: "Fainting soul, why fears prevail?
Dismiss those dark, foreboding fears,
For I've illumed this dreary vale.

"'Twas here I vanquished Death and Hell,
And, as I passed to realms of day,
Some sparkles of my glory fell,
That saints might track the shining way."

Enough; dear Jesus, be my guide,
I'll follow through the darkest vale;
I'll fear no evil at thy side,
But faith shall venture undismayed.

Mixed Items.

Bro. Grant:—I pen the following items as a simple matter of duty before the Lord. In that light I request that they be inserted in the Crisis just as they are written, with the exception of all grammatical wrongs.

Item 1.—Short Articles.

I believe in short articles, most decidedly, in a religious paper, and short sermons in a christian pulpit. There are some cases in which short articles and short sermons are not consistent, but as a most general rule, they are in the order of benevolence and of God. I always intend to write short articles. But my present one must be an exception. To remedy the evil, however, of its length I cut it up into bits or items. Brethren and sisters, if you wish your articles read, let them be short. If you wish them not to be read, write them in "rope-yarn" style! I am as fond of reading as the most of people, but the last thing I will do is to read a long, dry article in a religious paper. Give us the honey—keep the comb, wax, hive and bees at home.

Item 2.—The Right kind of Preaching.

In a recent number of the Crisis I saw an article on the right kind of preaching. It appeared to me that the article was the right kind of an article, too. One of the greatest curses and severest blights on the christian ministry is this abominable disposition to ride a hobby. Some preachers seem to find it impossible to have more than one idea at a time—and that frequently a foolish one. This one idea must, hence, be ridden everywhere and in all circumstances, until it is "ring-boned," "spavined," "wind-broken," "sore-backed," "blind," and "foundered." God designs that the whole Gospel shall feed his people. Give us, hence, the healthy variety. "Preach the Word." Let human notions alone. Sugar, alone, sweet and good as it is, after a few days will contract the stomach, and starve a man to death, if he eat no other food. So will starch. There is variety in heaven, in earth, in the sea, in man, in the gospel.

Item 3.—New Notions.

The creed of some people seems to be—"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by all the new and strange notions that can be got up." And in some directions this creed seems well carried out. I find no fault with people for seeking "more light," but for proclaiming "more light" until they are sure it is "true light," and not ig. fat.!! Look at the history of a few past years. What notions—absurd, unscriptural, childish in the extreme—have been put forth as "more light!" 1. The door of mercy is shut. 2. The Bridegroom has come. 3. We are in the judgment day already! 4. Some of the dead have been raised of late. 5. There is no personal Devil. 6. There is no direct operation of the Holy Spirit on the human mind. 7. We must keep the Jewish Sabbath. 8. The New Jerusalem is a mere figure. 9. Infants will never be raised from the dead. 10. The angels who fell were Adam and Eve! And now, to crown the whole, we are told that the "light" is, "The wicked portion of mankind will never be raised at all"!! Why not go one step further, and say none of the dead will ever be raised at all? Why not swallow the whole French Infidel creed—"Death is an eternal sleep"? O Christ, thou art wounded in the house of thy friends!

Item 4.—All the Dead will be raised.

Does any one tell me not to write on this point; that it will hurt some one's feelings; that we all have a right to our opinions? Listen. We have no right to wrong opinions. It is far better that human feelings be hurt than that one of the most important and solemn truths of God should be ignored. Some persons, about whose piety or honesty I have nothing to say, have recently, openly and fiercely, made an attack on a bristling fortress of the Almighty—and must I be silent? God forbid. How, then, shall I hold up my face to my Judge? It is now proclaimed in "all our borders," by a number of professing preachers of the gospel, that "the wicked dead will not be raised at all"; and some of the feeble minded are being led from their common steadfastness in consequence thereof. Shall we let it alone? What are watchmen for? I will do my duty in this matter at all costs. The Bible teaches the resurrection of the dead—all of the dead—the dead small and great—the dead in the earth, in the sea, in death, in hades. This is the uniform teaching of the Bible. It is not an argument raised on a few isolated passages, but it is the general doctrine of the whole Bible. It is astounding that a sane man, pretending to believe in the word of God, should ever dream so wild a dream as the contrary. Poor human nature!

Item 5.—The Proof wanting.

What is the proof that the wicked will never be raised from the dead? The proof! There is none. Not a feeble particle. The argument is all on one side. I do not admit that the opposition has any reasonable ground whatever. It seems to me foolish to controvert the matter at all. "Thus saith the Lord" ought to settle the question forever. There are passages which do teach that the wicked as nations, armies, rulers, persecutors, etc., will not rise from the dead; but never one solitary hint that they will not rise to be judged and damned.

Item 6.—The Proof on the Right side.

Do you wish the proof on the right side? Here you have a little of it: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." "That they might obtain a better resurrection." Does not a better resurrection imply a worse one? "Many who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." "It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city." "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and yourselves thrust out." "And reserve the ungodly unto the day of judgment to be punished." "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." "I saw the dead small and great stand before God; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man, according to their works." "The second death." How can there be a second without a first? What is the punishment of the wicked? Death. Not the first death, which good people as well as wicked die; but death after judgment—the second death. These are only some few mites of the existing proof on the right side; there are mountains more of it. But is not this a plenty? Does God mean what he says? O unbelief!

Item 7.—What is done with the Evidence.

What do the opposition do with such plain and positive words of God? I will illustrate. Some years ago, in a certain part of the land, there was a high wind one night, which did some damage in a village in that region. Several signs were blown down, among other damage. And it so happened that both a lawyer and a man who worked at the turning business went to a workman to put up new signs for each of them. He accordingly prepared the signs in the day time and went in the evening to put them up. It was a dim night, and he made a mistake, and put the turner's sign over the lawyer's office. What was the wonder of the lawyer in the morning, you may imagine, when he read over the entrance to his office—

ALL SORTS OF TURNING AND TWISTING DONE HERE.

That is the way the words of God are treated in this matter. I most solemnly warn those engaged in this work of unaccountable error to remember, God looks "to the man who trembles at my Word." Beware! God will not be trifled with. You are doing the enemy's work. God's Holy Spirit is grieved with your recklessness. You are wounding the Christ who loves you. Beware! Edwin Burnham.

For the Crisis.

Obedience.

In all the relations of life there is probably none enters more largely than the necessity of obedience. The word itself implies a superior; and the act properly attended to, when to the Superior Good, is always attended with benefit. For instance: A good and judicious parent requires his child to perform some act. It may not see the propriety of the requirement or act, yet it is not for it to stand and debate the subject; its business is to obey. This principle obtains also throughout the entire range of society. All are not conversant with the laws, yet the laws exist, and they exist for the keeping in check "the lawless and disobedient"; and in a properly administered and healthy state of affairs, the laws are no sooner broken than the penalty attached must follow; and we can only acknowledge the propriety of this, and why? In the absence of inflicted punishment there is a laxity of conduct. It may begin in the family, and the probabilities are it will not rest there, but will next be found in communities, then in States, and finally rebellion rears its hydra head, and what then?

The wisest and best of mortals have always advocated the prime necessity of obedience; and all who wish to live a godly and peaceable life must well attend to this. The christian is only a pilgrim, a sojourner in a country not his. It is no part of his business to interfere in the carnal strife. His weapon is not the tempered steel by which life can be taken. His weapon of defense is not a minnie rifle, nor is it a coat of mail. His only sword is that of the Spirit—the Word of God. So saith the Apostle to his Ephesian brethren whom he styles "the faithful in Christ Jesus." It is no business of the follower of Christ to take men's lives; but it is his business to try and imitate his Master by saving men's lives. For this purpose was the Son of God manifested. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams"; therefore whatsoever the Master of the household has commanded, it MUST be obeyed if we wish for his favor, which is better than the present fleeting life.

I look back and ask, what is the cause of the broken and disjointed state of affairs in the professed church of Christ? I ask the present, and the answer I receive is, Disobedience. I think of the time in which the prophet Jeremiah lived, when the word of the Lord came to him, and when he was commanded,—"Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first fruits of his increase. . . . Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: thus saith the Lord, what iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity and are become vain? . . . . The priests said not where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit. . . . Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be ye horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water."

Thus the case stands at the present day. The Lord has in a variety of ways endeavored to endear himself to fallen humanity. He sent his prophets to Israel, and they slew them. He sent his well-beloved Son, and they said, "Come, let us kill him"; and by wicked hands they slew him. But God raised him from the dead, and he did this because Jesus was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; and now he is highly exalted, and a name given him above every name, at which "every knee shall bow."

Paul, in his letter to his Roman brethren, declares himself separated unto the gospel of God, and it is that gospel which he had before promised by his prophets in the holy Scriptures; and being made a minister for God, he also declares that the Jesus, whom we call Lord, was declared to be the Son of God with power by his resurrection from the dead; and he further makes known to his brethren the fact that the apostleship they received warranted the declaration that Christ was not only the burden of prophecy, but that he was of the seed of David according to the flesh, and raised from the dead with the prerogative to command OBEDIENCE to the faith among all nations for his name.

In a time called "times of ignorance," it is said "God winked at (them), but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man (Jesus Christ) whom he hath ordained." And of this Judge it is said, "In righteousness he doth judge and make war."

With these truths before us, what is the duty of every one who hath named the name of Christ in sincerity and in truth? To my mind the question is perfectly clear. In the first place, I am settled in the truth that "the meek shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." I also read that its inheritance is dependent upon our being willing and obedient; for saith the Lord by Isaiah, who addressed himself particularly to Judah and Jerusalem, and, in general, to ALL,—"If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured by the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." "Rebellion is as the sin of divination, and stubbornness as iniquity and idolatry"; and for any in these days to be deceiving themselves with the current fables of superstition, and at the same time "hope they have a hope," and who are at the same time denying the Lord of life and glory by their non-attendance to plainly revealed duties,—permit me, for the love of Christ, to ask you to forbear; show how much you can honor God and his Son by believing the gospel and obeying its requirements, and all, all will be well in the day he shall sit as a refiner and Judge. The truth, and the love of it, let all cherish. We are separated by it, or it stands as God's condemning agent. G. W. Y.

Strangers.

How good it is to feel that we are strangers to this world,—that here we have no continuing city, no permanent abiding place. The christian can rejoice, and his cup of joy may be full, as he looks forward by faith to one soon to come, and this cold, unfriendly, fighting world exchanged for a world of peace, the paradise of God. What greater theme for rejoicing than the hope of the gospel which reveals to us the earth filled with the glory of God; sorrow, pain and death forever vanquished, and the inhabitants all acquainted, all at home? How cheering the thought that there will be no strangers there. Christ will be a King of peace. His subjects will all be peaceable, for they will have his Spirit, and be filled with it.

When the King shall in glory descend, and every eye beholds him, he will say to the pilgrims and strangers—the poor of this world, but rich in faith,—Children, come home! Brethren, we want to hear this said to us,—Children, come home. And in order to go home, we must have the distinguishing characteristics necessary to gain that home; something that distinguishes us from this world; for as this world and the world to come are entirely different in their nature, so the would-be inhabitant of that world must be changed in character, i. e, put off the "old man" with his "deeds," and "put on Christ," their Captain and pattern. This step takes one from the broad road that leads to death, and places him in the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal. How true the saying of the Lord, that few find it.

I was forcibly reminded of this fact recently while conversing with a minister who has preached the gospel for a number of years, as he claims. A short time since there was a gathering of professors and non-professors; wicked and ungodly men were there; and some who in days past had rejoiced in hope of the speedy return of the Lord of glory were seen in this assembly. Before them this minister advanced sentiments that the ungodly could endorse and still keep in the broad road. The professor, and those who had looked for the King of glory, were all united, and the injunction of the Lord, "I have chosen you out of the world," disregarded.

The church seems to be impelled down with the mass, and the tide carries everything before its resistless power. The unclean spirits are in the valley of decision. The wicked are being gathered in bundles to be burned; and the whole world is being gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

I have asked myself the question, if this is coming out and being separate, if this is being found in the narrow path, who is there but may go in it? What need of a change of heart; what need of being pilgrims and strangers here; what need of a Savior, if we can take a course that is heartily approved by the proud, by the rich, by the profane swearer, by those who drink from the intoxicating cup until its maddening effects render them fit subjects to fight? All these, together with ministers and professors, can be seen going in one road, having one spirit; and it is a "broad road" in which so many can travel. I feel to say, Give me the "narrow" way, with the few strangers and pilgrims who have respect to the recompense of the reward, for the end thereof is eternal life.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Bring this test to bear upon the two classes under consideration, and judge who are Christ's and who are not. May the Lord help us to discover between the Spirit of Christ and the deceiving spirits. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God or not." The Spirit and the Word agree. Brethren, stand by the Captain of our salvation, have on the whole armor, and above all take the "shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Jesus will surely conquer. Victory will be ours ere long. For the narrow way which is traveled by pilgrims and strangers to this world,—those who walk by faith, and live by faith (Heb. 11th chapter),—ends in our Home, where peace reigns triumphant. May the Lord help us. Amen.

Acrostic.

Here in this dark, lone vale
Of sorrows, sighs and tears,
Roaming o'er hill and dale,
And fraught with hopes and fears;
Canst find no resting place?
Ever here thou'rt toiling on—
Loth to give up thy race
Heavenward, till the victory's won.
And though disease or sin beset,
Soon the blest morn will come,
Thy weary feet shall rest them yet
In thy long-wished-for home
Naught shalt thou suffer more;
Golden harps shall greet thee then,
Safe on the shining shore.

Can true Christians Fight?

"My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight," was the language of Christ. Now shall we as believers in Christ and his doctrine, arm ourselves and go into the battle-field? Shall we take up the sword to war with our brother? "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," are the words of Christ; and again he commanded his disciples to "love one another," for "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples." Now as Christ's disciples are known by their loving one another, those that are at war with each other cannot be Christ's disciples, but are governed by "the spirits of devils;" therefore we whose "weapons are not carnal" should come out and bear our testimony against war, in the fear of God, standing firm for him and his truth.

I felt influenced in my mind to write this, (although young in the good cause of Christ,) as I never yet have been able to see how a man can be a true christian and fight or believe in fighting. How he can take the Bible in one hand and pray to God for protection against those whose hearts God has power to change, and yet grasp the bloody sword of war in the other, not daring to trust in God's promises; or how he can in his heart follow out the precepts of the "Golden Rule," of doing unto others as he would that others should do unto him, while dealing out death and destruction with his rifle; or how he can pray to God to "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," while sending the destructive bomb into their midst. What I have written I have expressed in a spirit of friendship. S. G. Gidley.

Not in Darkness.

How blessed not to be in darkness, in such a critical period of the world's history! How blessed not to be preaching "peace and safety" when "sudden destruction cometh"! How blessed to be in union and harmony with Jehovah and his Son Jesus Christ, now the appointed day of judgment is just before us!

How blessed to have a heart that loves to obey our Lord and Master to the letter, and literally and positively "watch . . . . and pray always, that (we) may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. Bless the Lord for such a heart!—a heart that rejoices in the purpose of Jesus to destroy the works of the devil, and to establish his own kingdom.

Bless the Lord for the knowledge of heirship to that kingdom! Samuel Curry.

Let Duty guide Thee.

"Haste not! rest not! calmly wait;
Meekly bear the storms of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right whate'er betide!
Haste not! rest not! conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last!"
—Goethe.

Let duty guide thee, soldier, in the stern conflict of daily life. Worldly interests will try to intervene between thee and thy duty; heed them not. Temptation will arise to shake thy faith in God and right; resist them manfully. Human passions will strive to poison the heart with wild and fierce emotions, that fain would drown thy soul in the depths of perdition; cherish them not even for a moment. A thousand foes will meet thee at every turn in thy journey heavenward. Some, crafty and insidious, will seek to allure thee into the paths of folly by deceitful words of unmeaning praise, while others with foul words of slander will try to tarnish thy name with deeds of which thy heart never dreamed. Meet them all alike, firmly, sternly resisting the blandishments of the one, and meekly bearing the reproach the other would heap upon thee. In all thine actions, thoughts and desires, let duty guide thee. Let right triumph in all thy deeds, whether the world praises or derides thee.

Shrink not from labor and toil when duty calls. Avoid not the conflict against evil when the bugle note of the contest summons thee to bear aloft the standard of truth. Cast aside all considerations of self for the sake of Him who agonized in Gethsemane, and died on Calvary for thee. The hour, the time, the age demands all thy energies for the right, for justice, God. Perform thy duty well while the battle rages, and when peace shall wreathe her banner around the universe, noble will be thy reward.

Yes, scarred warrior, when the battle is over, and the wild commotion of earth has given place to the grateful scenes of Messiah's peaceful reign, sweet indeed will be thy repose, blest thy retirement from the long conflict. Crowned with honor for every duty performed, rewarded for every victory gained over sin, thou shalt ever rejoice in the smiles of the dear Redeemer, and ever chant the pean of praise around his throne. That will be honor enough, a reward rich enough to repay all sacrifices of self-interest here. Eternal repose in the kingdom of God, unending joy in the society of earth's redeemed, of angels who have ministered unseen to thee in thine earthly journey, and of Him who redeemed thee.

Then, christian warrior, battle for the right, rest not, faint not, though weary with the increasing conflict, but urge thy course onward, for glory, honor and immortality is thy sure reward in the bright millennial age to come.

The Perfection of Saints.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 48.

In Gen. 17: 1, the Lord said to Abram, "Walk before me, and be thou perfect." And when he made a covenant with Abram, he changed his name to Abraham, because he was to be the father of many nations. And in Lev. 11: 44, the Lord said to the children of Israel, "Ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy." In Luke 6: 36, our Savior instructs us how we should manifest a kind and merciful disposition towards our enemies, in order to pattern after our kind and heavenly Father. In Col. 1: 28, the apostle Paul tells how he preaches Christ the hope of glory to the saints, teaching them in all wisdom, in order that every man may be presented as a "perfect man in Christ Jesus." Also in Col. 4: 12, the apostle speaks of Epaphras, a servant of God, laboring fervently in prayer, that the saints may "stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." And James (1: 4) informs us that we must let "patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." In Eph. 5: 1, 2, we are required to be "followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us."

Dear brethren and sisters, in the tenderness of love I would say to you, I humbly hope you will pray earnestly to our heavenly Father, that he would enable you by his wisdom and grace to go forth and "grow up as calves of the stall"; that you may shine forth in the kingdom, when the precious Savior comes to gather his jewels, and reign with them forever. We are not required to be perfect gods; but to be perfect men and women in Christ: and in order to attain to this state of enjoyment, we must go on unto perfection; yes, we must labor with good brother Paul to keep our bodies under, lest we ourselves should become castaways. We must try, in the strength of Israel's God, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and study to make ourselves useful in the work of the Lord what little time we have to use the means for the salvation of our fellow beings. For this purpose let us examine ourselves, and see if we be in the faith; and if we are, let us add to our faith virtue (or boldness), and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, or godlikeness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity, or love. And if we are thus armed and equipped with those spiritual weapons, we shall be able through grace to slay the enemies of the cross, and bring them humble at the feet of Jesus, where they will become clothed and in their right minds.

I hope these few lines written in prayers and tears, will be blessed to the good of my dear brethren and sisters in the Advent cause, and to the salvation of some one of my fellow beings. Yours looking for the King of the true Israel. B. Perham.

Millerism Revived.

If any of our readers have supposed that Millerism died out with Mr. Miller, its author, they were mistaken. The Advent Herald still lives and continues its figurings to prove that the end is at hand. The Rev. J. V. Himes, in its last issue, announces that he is about to set forth on a new mission to proclaim the kingdom coming. His manifesto reads much like that of a general about to invade a hostile country. He says:—

"I enter on this glorious work anew in the strength of God and the unshaken confidence in Protestant principles of interpretation—that the visions of Daniel reach to the everlasting kingdom—that the book of Revelation gives a history of the true church, and also of the papal power, and carries us to the end of all things—that a prophetic day denotes a natural year, and a prophetic time 360 natural years—that the times and seasons were to be understood and proclaimed. The church was not to be in darkness, that that day should overtake her as a thief. And believing (with the most distinguished, pious, and learned expositors of the word of God in this century) that the signs of this time and the fulfillment of the prophecies indicate the speedy termination of this dispensation, I give myself entirely to the work of proclaiming these things. As a 'watchman on the walls of Zion' I can do no less, if I am faithful to my proper work.

I ask the sympathy, prayers, and co-operation of all who cherish this faith, and look for the speedy coming of the Lord in his kingdom, whether you look for the event soon, without definite time, or, with me, to the termination of the periods in 1867 and 1868.

I shall solicit new subscriptions for the Advent Herald, collect old dues, and further the interests of the office."

It is certainly gratifying to those who are not quite ready for the general breaking up, to know that Mr. Himes has put it off till "1867 or 8," six or seven years ahead. But a little sense would suggest that past failures should make him more modest in his prophecies, and especially to avoid "fixing the time." The reckoning has been so often corrected that it will hardly bear tinkering again.

The above was taken from what purports to be the Christian Observer. The thought occurred to me while reading it, whether the name was appropriate. What ought to be expected of a "Christian Observer" but a close watching of the signs of the times, in connection with the study of prophecy, and a Christ-like spirit in proclaiming the same to a world? Yet what have we here? An ignoring of the great truths concerning prophecy,—the coming of our blessed Lord and establishment of his kingdom, and the most contemptuous ridicule cast upon one who is endeavoring to convince his fellow men of their mighty weight and certainty. Is not the article a fair sample indeed of the "scoffing" of the last days? Where in the ranks of infidelity could we find a clearer or more striking one? A "Christian Observer!" talking about not being "quite ready for the general breaking up"—"tinkering the reckoning again," and so on,—phrases that we might well expect from the lips of the bar-room gambler, or any openly profane and wicked reviler of christianity! A paper professing to declare from week to week the truths of religion! The Lord pity them in their blindness and ignorance! "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you." With such a benediction from such a source, well may those who are proclaiming God's truth rejoice, thank God, and take courage. The time of [illegible] is near. A. G. [illegible]

Our Passions like a Lion.—An Indian once brought up a young lion, and finding him weak and harmless, never attempted to control him. Every day the lion gained in strength and became more formidable, until at last, when excited by [illegible] he fell upon the Indian and tore him to pieces. Our evil habits and passions very much resemble that lion.

Bible Rules for Christian Women.

Few women become distinguished in the world. Not many acquire a reputation outside the immediate community in which they reside. But because God has thus appointed, that their virtues shine in seclusion, and their influence flows chiefly through domestic channels, it does not follow that their sphere of christian usefulness is less extensive, or their duties in the vineyard of the Lord less important than those of the other sex.

Poets and novelists, out of their own corrupt imaginations, have drawn pictures of female excellence, too high for the masses of women to attain unto, and, if reached, too ideal for a world of realities; but the Word of Truth, adapting itself as it always does to every condition of life, lays down a few simple, comprehensive principles, which, incorporated in the heart of any woman, whatever her natural endowments, or outward circumstances, will make her useful and beautiful in the world, and honored in the sight of her heavenly Father.

We will briefly notice these Bible principles; hoping "to stir up" the "pure minds" of our beloved sisters, and provoke them to good works.

An unwavering faith in the Lord Jesus, is the unchangeable corner-stone of all true character; on this alone can she build to the glory of God. If she be married, her first duty is to her husband, for he is her head, "even as Christ is the head of the church"; therefore she is to love and obey him in all things, remembering herself to be the "weaker vessel."

She is to be an affectionate mother, training her children in the fear of the Lord. She is to "look well to the ways of her household," not eating "the bread of idleness"; loving her home, and keeping at home, ordering it with prudence and gentleness; relieving the afflicted, extending hospitality to strangers, diligently following every good work.

Let the unmarried consecrate all their time and talents to the service of their Divine Master, rejoicing that they are placed in a position where they have the fullest opportunity of becoming "holy, both in body and spirit." Says the Word: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak"; for "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence."

In deportment, they are to be grave and discreet; temperate, industrious, and lovely; adorned with a "meek and quiet spirit," for this "is, in the sight of God, of great price." What amusements, if any, are allowed her, she can best judge. Paul says: "She that liveth in pleasure, is dead while she liveth." As dress and conversation open, to the female nature, wide avenues for sinful indulgence, in these they ought to be especially careful. In conversation, they are to be chaste and sober; not given to slandering, or indulging in any of the light chit-chat," so prevalent. But when they speak, let them open their mouths with wisdom, and show the "law of kindness" in their tongues.

Their dress is to be modest, and not costly; as simple and neat in its arrangement as possible. Jewelry of all descriptions is forbidden. Her long hair is "a glory to her," therefore it is a shame to have it shorn. But she is to attire it with simplicity, indulging in no vain fashions, decorating it with no superfluity of head-dress.

Dear sisters, are these precious truths hid in your hearts, and are you ordering the minutest events of your daily lives by them? And, while companions, sons and brothers are going forth into the world, bearing its reproach, and counting not their lives dear unto them, for the sake of proclaiming the glad tidings of the coming and kingdom of Christ,—are you by your unceasing prayerfulness, your purity, and patience in well doing, casting your moral influence on this corrupt age? If so, however humble your sphere of action, you are discharging the duties God has assigned you, and in the great day when Jesus returns to make up his jewels, of you it shall be said: "She hath done what she could."

Questions.

1st. Is it right for a church to go without preaching, because many of them are too covetous to put together their mites to pay for it?

2d. Is it right for members of an organized church, or a committee of said church, to invite a preacher to come and labor with them, and not pay the necessary expenses?

3d. Is it right for a preacher to leave his family, spend his time, expenses of horse and carriage, or fare by public conveyance, and then return home, his mind harassed and perplexed to know where he is to get a dollar or two to pay for his quarter's rent, or to buy a bushel of meal to feed his wife and children?

I fear some will have to meet these questions in the coming day.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

We will now talk more with our readers about our great campmeeting at Wilbraham. As we said in our last, this was the largest one we have ever held. There were said to be seventy-four tents and eighty-four preachers. It was truly a feast of tabernacles. It was a heavenly sight to see so many together who were followers of the Prince of peace, who have no occasion for any armor but the christian. Our last report came up to Tuesday night.

Wednesday, 27th. The weather was very warm, and consequently it was pleasant being in the grove. On account of the meeting of the Advent Christian Association, we were not able to hear the preaching during the day, hence can give no special report. Bro. M. Batchelor, Rutland, Vt., preached in the morning, and Bro. Albion Ross, of Worcester, in the afternoon. We heard their sermons were well received. Bro. McIntosh, of Boston, preached in the evening.

Thursday, 28th. This was a day of much interest. At 8 o'clock A. M. we met in front of the preachers' stand for a general prayer and conference meeting. It was a heavenly, heart-searching season. The Spirit of the Lord was in our midst. Many were quickened, and firmly resolved to live nearer to the Lord. Several decided to leave off the use of tobacco and cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and Spirit, and be ready to meet the Bridegroom. Many saw the importance of entire consecration, if they would be ready for the "marriage supper of the Lamb." We felt it truly a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. At 10 o'clock we listened to a very interesting and profitable discourse from Bro. H. F. Carpenter, pastor of the church in Poultney, Vt. It was truly meat in due season for the flock of God. In short, it was a real feast of fat things—one of those sermons that last a life-time. In the afternoon, Bro. J. V. Himes, of Boston, preached on the coming of Christ, showing that "the end of all things is at hand." He feels well assured that our Savior will make his second advent to our planet about 1867–8. He is awake on this great subject, and making earnest efforts to arouse the sleeping virgins, that they may be ready for the glorious event. It is evident that the mass of professing christians in the various churches are in a very sad state at the present time,—filled with the spirit of war instead of the spirit of Christ. It is time to cry aloud and spare not. Those who are not ready to meet the Lord have no time to lose if they intend to be prepared. We were pleased to see a solemn impression on the minds of the people, in view of what is coming on the earth. Men cannot avoid the impression that some great event is at hand. In times past, they have succeeded in throwing off these feelings, but now they follow them by night and day; and they are fast passing into the state described by our Savior as the last one before his coming, when men's hearts will be "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." It is a cheering feature among our brethren and sisters that they are more and more interested in the signs of the times, and talking more about the coming of the Savior, and less about minor points of difference,—more about practical duties, and less concerning speculating theories. We shall expect to see still greater improvement in this direction. Let every child of the Lord lend a helping hand, and expect a sweet blessing in return.

In the afternoon of Wednesday, we had a smart shower, which was very timely to lay the dust on the roads leading to the camp-ground. On account of the shower, we had preaching in several tents in the evening, by Brn. J. B. Cook, T. M. Preble, R. Wendell, L. P. Judson, and the writer. We heard favorable reports from the different meetings. Some special interest was manifested among the unconverted. Bro. Willard's son, from Hammonton, N. J., was converted in one of the Boston tent, causing great joy, not only among angels, but in the hearts of anxious parents, who had taken special pains to have their noble son present at this campmeeting. He was baptized on the Lord's day, in company with seventeen others.

During the day and night, we had other reasons to give thanks to the Lord, while at the same time we were taught the importance of being continually prepared to close up the affairs of this short and uncertain life. In the afternoon, a horse broke loose, and ran with great fury through the encampment, periling the lives of scores, and yet not an individual was harmed. After passing some distance, the buggy struck a tree, which tore it from the horse, leaving it a mass of fragments; but the horse rushed on around the public walk, till he had more than half completed the circle, when he was met by his owner, who jumped in front of him and seized him by the neck, risking his own life in a most hazardous manner, for the sake of others. The effort was fully successful, but it was the most daring feat of horsemanship we ever witnessed. He received the horse into his arms, as a mother would a child, when they run to meet each other, and she throws both arms around the child's neck, receiving it into her embrace. We expected to see the man dragged and trampled upon, but it was a perfect success. We afterwards learned that when he trained the colt, he had taught him to stop whenever he met him with such an embrace. It seemed he knew he had met his friend and master, and at once gave up. But for this timely meeting of the two, we might have been obliged to chronicle some sad events.

In the evening, between ten and eleven o'clock, when most had retired, and all was still, we heard a crash, and soon a call for "a light—a light." There was an immediate rush to the scene, when it was ascertained that a limb two feet and three inches in circumference at its lower end, and thirty-three feet long, had fallen about fifty feet upon the Danielsonville tent. It was supposed that those in the tent must of necessity be killed; but it was soon found that no one was fatally injured. Bro. Holt was bruised some, and two sisters were slightly injured, who were baptized the next day.

Friday, 29th. The weather was fine. At 8 o'clock we met again in front of the stand for a general prayer and conference meeting, and had a blessed season. Twelve requested prayers, and several were blessed. Many appeared to be under conviction. Every one seemed to enjoy the meeting, feeling glad they were in the hallowed, tented grove. Preaching at 10 A. M. by Bro. S. S. Brewer, of South Glastenbury, Ct. He endeavored to show from the prophetic Scriptures that the end of the present dispensation is near at hand. In the afternoon, Bro. Wm. Sheldon, from Merrimac, Sauk Co., Wis., entertained the people with further evidences that our Savior will soon appear. Bro. S. has been laboring very successfully in the west, and intends to return soon. He is a man for the times. Would that we had a multitude of such men.

In the evening we had an interesting and profitable discourse from Bro. Timothy Cole, of Haverhill, which was well calculated to arouse the church to action. It was very timely, and much good resulted. He is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, and he loves the work. We were much cheered by his presence and soul-stirring exhortations during the week. We were thankful that the Lord directed his steps thither.

During the day Bro. Baxter, who has lectured in Boston, and various other places in the States and Canadas, showing that the Lord will come about 1868, made a visit to the camp-ground, in company with his father, an able English barrister, who entertains the same view as to the time of Christ's coming. He gave a very interesting discourse on the subject, showing that he had devoted considerable time to the study of prophecy. He stated that on Sundays, some five hundred men preach in the open air in London, and that there is much interest on the subject of Christ's second advent. It is evident that the Lord is arousing the faithful in all lands to look for the speedy return of his Son from heaven.

Saturday, 30th. A very pleasant day. At 8 o'clock, we met again in front of the preacher's stand for a prayer and conference meeting, and had a heavenly season. Some fifteen came forward for prayers, and received rich blessings from the Lord. There is deep conviction on many minds, which has not yet resulted in corresponding action.

At 10 A. M., Bro. I. C. Wellcome, of Yarmouth, Me., preached, showing the necessity of holy living, if we expect to be saved when Jesus comes. In the afternoon, we had a valuable discourse from Bro. H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., showing that we are in "the time of the end," and that soon we shall be privileged to hail the coming of the King of kings, and assemble at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."

In the evening, Bro. H. Munger, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., preached a sermon well calculated to set people to work in the vineyard of the Lord, and it was not labor in vain. At the close of the sermon, Bro. T. Cole followed with appropriate remarks, when some forty came forward for prayers, and several found peace in believing. Thus closed the week.

Sabbath morning, Aug. 31st. We think we never witnessed a more lovely morning than this. It seemed as if we enjoyed the special blessing of our heavenly Father. We could easily imagine that we were not far removed from the bowers of paradise. At 8 o'clock, we met at the stand for our memorable love-feast, during which it is said one hundred and seventy spoke of their love for Jesus, in one hour and twenty minutes. It was a love-feast indeed. One could well afford to take a long journey at considerable expense for the sake of enjoying such a scene. It will be long remembered by those who were present.

At 10 o'clock, we had a stirring sermon from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, pastor of the church at Sandy Hill, N. Y. He showed very clearly from the Scriptures that the great day of the Lord is just at hand. The vast audience listened with deep attention, and their countenances showed that their judgments were convinced of the truthfulness of our position. In the afternoon, Bro. J. Couch, of Warner, N. H., delivered an able discourse on "the signs of the times," presenting overwhelming evidence that the present dispensation will soon close. It was a solemn hour, and we trust the truth took effect on many minds. This was the last public discourse. After the sermon we repaired to the water, when Bro. Hastings buried eighteen happy souls with Christ in baptism. This was another blessed occasion. Thirty were baptized during the meeting, and five were ordained to preach the gospel,—Bro. McCulloch, of Savoy, Mass., Bro. McCandis, of Boston, Mass., Bro. Sibley, Bro. A. M. Higgins, Palmer Depot, Mass., and Bro. Butler, of Wilbraham, Mass.

In the evening, four hundred and forty gathered around the table of the Lord to commemorate his dying love. This was the most heavenly season of all. This alone would pay for the whole expense and labor connected with the entire campmeeting. Thus closed the meeting, and we parted in hope of meeting soon at the marriage supper of the Lamb, in the glorious New Jerusalem.

Pithy.

We have received, what purports to be a "Review of the discussion at Weeks Mills, China, Me," between E. B. Fletcher and ourself. The "Review" is headed, Millerite—Materialistic—Annihilation." The following closes the "Review":—

A Challenge from E. B. Fletcher to Mr. Miles Grant.

Mr. Grant:—Sir,—I propose to discuss with you the two propositions we had as a subject of debate at Weeks Mills, last June. The discussion to be held at the same place, or in that vicinity, unless some other place shall be agreed upon by the disputants. If you accept this invitation you will please inform me by a letter directed to E. B. Fletcher, Vassalboro, Me., Cross Hill.

Propositions for Discussion.

1. All men are immortal, in the sense of continued and unending being.

2. Man is not immortal, in the sense of continued and unending being.

Rules of Debate.

1. Each disputant shall state the points upon which his opponent places reliance in proof of his proposition, and shall make an effort to show them unsound; and this shall be honorably done, at the time when the arguments are stated. When either disputant gives a text as argument, he shall show, if he can, how it supports the argument or point he is proving; and when required to do so, the disputants shall state in which of the different senses of a word he is using it.

2. The duty of the chairman shall be to keep the parties to the above rules; to decide questions of order, and to govern the meeting.

2. The debaters shall occupy twenty minutes alternately, and the debate shall continue three days, occupying six hours each day, unless otherwise agreed upon. The first proposition the first half of the time; the second, the other half.

My reasons, sir, for presenting to you this paper are, 1. Those which appear in the Review to which this is appended. These are a sufficient apology. But, 2. Your notice of the discussion at Weeks Mills, in "The World's Crisis" of July 2d. In this notice you say of your opponent: "If oft repeated assertions and misrepresentations, were argumentative proof, then he certainly established his points." And of yourself, you say: "We found an abundance of scripture to show "the entire man is mortal.' As these two statements are untrue, and you know it, and the notice itself is a low ungentlemanly attack upon your opponent, it is now demanded of you that you publicly make these two statements good, if you can, by a discussion under the regulations here given or acknowledge the two statements untrue, and admit the correctness of the Review, by declining to accept this challenge. As the course taken by you at the attempted discussion, and your mis-statements and your attack upon your opponent, in your paper, are public offences, they require a public remedy, and we have the means of obtaining it. If you decline this challenge, it will demonstrate the truth of our position, and prove that you know you cannot sustain your doctrine in a fair and manly debate. If you accept of this, I will prove the falsity of your two statements, which I have quoted from your notice. If you had reasons for the first discussion, you have far more for a second, if you have any faith in your doctrine! I believe you have no confidence in your own arguments; but that your whole reliance in support of your doctrine is upon sophistries. But you now are offered a chance to prove the contrary. No further attack which you may make upon your opponent, or statements made, will put you right in the public mind. Every one knows that, if you believe you can sustain yourself, you will make the trial.

E. B. Fletcher.

Vassalboro', Me., Aug. 4, 1862.

[If Mr. Grant does not take up this challenge, I extend it to any one of his faith who will take it up.] E. B. F.

[Mr. Grant takes "up this challenge," and proposes to have the discussion at Augusta, Bangor or Portland.—Ed.]

The Contrast.

It is said "circumstances alter cases." We will not presume to dispute the fact that circumstances alter men; or, perhaps more properly speaking, develop them. There are many dough-faces in the world, but they are not all among politicians. When reading the following from the Christian Watchman of 1840, we could not help contrasting it with articles published at the present time, and inquiring what has caused such a change? As principles do not alter, the change must be in the men. If they were right then, they must be wrong now. Please read what follows, and form your own conclusions:—

Fighting Preachers.

Our worthy friend, the editor of the Church Advocate, takes us very pleasantly to task in the following manner:

"A Baptist minister and a Methodist minister enlisted as soldiers, in the army which has been sent to Mexico, to fight a people who have done us no bodily, mental, or moral harm. These ministers were both shot down dead on the bloody field of battle. They had better been preaching the gospel of the Prince of peace.

The Christian Watchman, a short time since, published an account of the 'training' of twenty-five boys, armed and equipped, who belonged to an Episcopal Institute, under the care of an Episcopal clergyman; and appended to the paragraph a remark, that such was the religion of Episcopacy.

Now here is a minister who does not, indeed, indulge in the very foolish and childish business of dressing up children in uniform, for the purpose of parading them about for an idle show, but shoulders his musket, deserts his flock, and marches to Mexico, and tries his hand at the art of killing. Did the Christian Watchman espy him among the hosts on the field? How much easier it is to see a mote than a beam!"—Church Advocate.

We did "espy" a paragraph going the rounds, credited to some Western paper, to the effect that an individual who was, or had been, a Baptist preacher, had enlisted, gone to Mexico, and fell in the battle of Buena Vista. But as no confirmative notice of it appeared in any Baptist paper, we concluded that the statement was erroneous; such is our present impression. Our Western brethren can, perhaps, enlighten us on the point.

If it were true that a Baptist preacher had left his appropriate work as a minister of the Prince of peace, and had enlisted as a follower of Moloch, the fact would, in our estimation, be far less deplorable than the other fact above alluded to. It amounted simply to this: an unworthy minister left the ministry for the army, and it was doubtless good riddance, both for the church, the ministry, and the cause of religion, that he did so. Next, he left his country for his country's good, and went to Mexico, where, although he died as a fool dieth, yet he met that kind of death which he bargained for, and which he had reason to expect, by the terms of his enlistment. We mourn over his folly, we pity his infatuation, we lament the darkness of his exit, and there we leave him. He alone is responsible for his acts, and his misdeeds have perished with him.

Not so when a clergyman is engaged in teaching beardless boys to use the musket and the sword, to wear the cockade, the military coat and feather, and take delight in "the pomp and circumstance of war." He becomes a living fountain of corruption. He does not immolate himself to the demon of war, but, like the fabled heathen deities, seizes upon the beauty of youth, to prepare as an offering on the bloody altar, causing the "children to pass through the fire unto Moloch!" He teaches them to read the Prayer Book in the morning, and to take lessons with the weapons of death in the afternoon! And he continues to be a clergyman in good standing, uncensured in his church, thus making "the church" responsible for his acts. Surely, if the error of the Baptist preacher—if there be any truth in the report that one has fallen in Mexico—is a "beam," here is a whole frame-work of beams!

A New Work.—It will be seen from his article in another column, that Bro. Brewer intends to publish soon a pamphlet on The Kingdom of God, and the Signs of the Times. We have no doubt it will be a valuable and timely work; and we bespeak for it the aid of brethren everywhere. He wants means to publish it, and asks your help; proposing to return to you the value of any offerings you may make for that purpose, in books when published. Read his "Appeal," and then open your hearts and hands with contributions and pledges after a godly sort. The signs are thickening, and the kingdom nearing; what is done, must be done quickly. W. B. ## Retribution.

The second edition of this work is now ready for delivery. The price in paper covers is only 18 cts. It is also neatly bound in cloth with Pauline Theology, and Destiny of the Wicked, making a volume of nearly 300 pages, lettered on the back "Future Punishment." Price 50 cts.

I had intended to add largely to the matter of this edition of Retribution, that I might meet the various criticisms to which it has been exposed since its publication. The pressure of other engagements prevented me from doing this, and I have chosen rather to reserve what I had to say for a new book, which I hope soon to issue on the "Resurrection of the Dead." In that I intend to give the subject a still more thorough examination.

The alterations therefore made in this edition are few. As it was stereotyped in Philadelphia, and a large portion of it while I was at a distance from that city, many typographical errors occurred in its pages. These I have usually corrected. There were also a few inaccuracies in scripture quotations, and occasional slips of the pen, or errors of the compositor, which should have been corrected in the proofs; as, in one case, the word "Remission" was used instead of "Redemption." In one or two other cases the ideas and arguments expressed have been so misrepresented, and the language so perverted, that I thought it best to make such slight changes in the pages as would place my arguments so distinctly before the reader that it would not be easy to misrepresent them. I have therefore in two or three instances so guarded and qualified the language as to cut off the opportunity of those who seek occasion to find fault. One critic having objected to my spelling of a certain Hebrew word, which is, to my certain knowledge, spelled in three different ways by different Hebrew lexicographers, I have inserted the word itself in Hebrew letters, giving him leave to spell it to suit himself, if he can.

The statement quoted in the previous edition, that it would take more than ten thousand million years to judge the world, etc., having been disavowed by the man who made it as an error of his treacherous memory, I am of course very happy to withdraw what was said concerning it. And though the argument as then stated would seem to me a very contemptible one, yet I hope to be only held accountable for what I have said concerning it, and not for the accusations of those who have charged me with malice, and falsehood, and hypocrisy, and other such qualities.

The present edition is sent forth with the hope that it may do something towards enlightening the minds of men concerning the realities of future retribution. I continue my previous offer to send a copy of it free to every person who denies the resurrection of the ungodly, if they will agree to read it carefully. I sent this offer last February to the editor of a periodical which has been largely occupied for the last six months with reviews of "Retribution." Glad as its contributors are to have free discussion in other organs, I have not as yet been able to get my offer to give Retribution and Pauline Theology away, inserted in the columns of this organ. I would therefore ask the readers of the Crisis to take pains to make known this offer to those who are candidly inquiring concerning the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust. All such can have copies of "Retribution" free, as also can the poor, and preachers, upon condition that they will carefully read them. Persons who wish to send stamps for pre-paying the postage, can do so; otherwise it may be sent at my expense. Yours in Christ,

Boston, Mass. H. L. Hastings.

An Appeal.

Dearly beloved Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I have now nearly ready for the press a work on The Kingdom of God, and the Signs of the Times, written on Matt. 21:43;—"Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."

Part Fourth.—The Eternal Age and Kingdom. First—Its Territory. Second—Its Subjects. Third—Its King. Fourth—Its Capital. Fifth—Its Throne.

Dear Friends, will you assist me in getting this little work out on a missionary tour? It is very late in the day. The long projected rays of the gospel sun over the universe, proclaim with great certainty that the sun is just about to set, and a dark, dark night of eternal silence is about to overtake the impenitent. Will you do what you can to help diffuse light on the subject? You may say, "The times are very hard." They are; and no class of men, probably, experience that fact more sensibly than the Advent ministers. For some years past, I have labored in new fields most of the time; consequently, my income has been very small. I will pay you, in return, in books, as soon as it is published, if the Lord will. If you send me aid, and should I fail to receive sufficient means to accomplish the work, I will return it to you. Come, dear brethren or sisters, try now, and see what you can do in this matter. Deny yourself a little, and send along a few dollars. Act soon. No time to delay. The reward will soon be given. If you have nothing to give yourself, ask some one that has. Will you do it? Try! My address is South Glastenbury, Conn.

A New Work.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say through the Crisis, I have been desired by some of the brethren and friends to get my work published, "On the existence of holy angels; their origin, attributes, ranks, titles; their ministry and various offices in the great work of human redemption, and the peculiar work assigned them in the approaching judgment, and in the general administration and government of God." This I propose to do (the Lord willing,) as soon as sufficient pledges are received to warrant me to go on with it. It will make a work of about seventy-two pages. Shall be able to furnish of the first edition about eight copies for $1,00.

This is a subject which should be deeply interesting and ought to be dear to the church,—one which is calculated, I verily believe, by the blessing of God, to afford much comfort and joy to the household of faith. It has been long neglected, and should especially in these latter days command our most serious and prayerful attention.

Who of the brethren or sisters will pledge to assist me in this work? Who will pledge one, two, or three, or more dollars towards getting it out? There is money enough yet among us as a people to accomplish a great amount of good, in the way of publishing these glorious truths of the latter days. O! let us then as faithful stewards do what we can. Soon property and money will be of little worth, and those who have trusted in it will perish with it. Then let us, brethren, do what we can now, while there is time and opportunity offered us for this purpose; that our memorial may be like that of the devoted Mary's of Bethany—"She hath done what she could."

All who have the means and feel like co-operating with me in this matter will please write me at once stating what they will do. My address is "Eld. William Shepherd, Newark, N. J." Let me hear from you at once. The work will be published in the course of three weeks, as it is now quite ready for the press.

The Christian Lyre.

This is evidently one of the most useful and popular books that has been published among us from the beginning. It was designed originally to accompany the Harp, as a music book, and also for conference meetings. But things took a course so as to defeat in some measure this plan. But the book has been adopted, and is used by Adventists, and by many of other denominations, who speak of it in terms of high commendation.

It was difficult to classify the hymns, and at the same time classify the meters, so that, in this respect, it is imperfect. There is also the lack of hymns on baptism, the Lord's Supper, and other choice hymns, originally intended for the work; but which were omitted. One other thing of importance to some, may be named in this connexion. It is a well known fact, that many persons do not read or have use for the music; and wish the hymns only. I had arranged to meet these defects in the Lyre, in the following way:

First, To add, in a supplement, all the hymns needed; which could be supplied cheaply to all who now have the book.

Second, To get out a neat pocket edition of the hymns of the Lyre, classified and arranged, for those who do not wish the music.

While this thing was in progress, the Board of the Christian Publication Society appointed a committee to wait on me in reference to these matters, not knowing of my designs. I will be glad to co-operate with them in these improvements of the Lyre, if judged best, or anything by which we can best serve the cause of the Advent in this department of our service.

Maine State Mission.

Beloved Brethren:—I am called upon to bid you farewell in the State, and relinquish my mission. I closed my labors the middle of August; as the evenings were short, and the farmers were so busy with their summer work, it was difficult to hold evening meetings in towns. The season, too, had become so hot that it was tedious to ride in an open carriage under a burning sun; and besides, I needed a little rest from labor, before taking the pastoral charge of the church in Boston. My heart is sad to leave you. I love the brethren and sisters in Maine, and enjoyed my mission well. I found everywhere kind hearts and hands ready to aid me, and administer to my comfort, while I found some adversaries. Though I labored hard and constantly, Jesus abundantly blessed me; and you so cheered me in my work, that I was enabled to keep up good courage, faith and hope; and my health was most excellent.

I am grieved to leave you, and were it not that my family requires my presence more at home (my companion being so feeble in health, and thinking that she cannot endure the climate of Maine), I should not have felt justified in closing my labors in the State;—though the church in Boston had so urgently demanded my return among them. I do not wish to complain at the mysterious providence that has called me from so large a field of usefulness, and confined my labors to a single church and city; yet, I must confess, I feel somewhat like a bird caught on wing and confined in a beautiful cage, to make music for a single family, when it might have made the forests vocal with its melody, and comforted many a household, and charmed many an ear. God my Savior overrules all, and knows what is best for you and me. He so orders for wise purposes, no doubt, and we submit. I only hope that you will fill my place in the mission field of Maine with a more efficient and

Bible Rules for Christian Women.

Few women become distinguished in the world. Not many acquire a reputation outside the immediate community in which they reside. But because God has thus appointed, that their virtues shine in seclusion, and their influence flows chiefly through domestic channels, it does not follow that their sphere of christian usefulness is less extensive, or their duties in the vineyard of the Lord less important than those of the other sex.

Poets and novelists, out of their own corrupt imaginations, have drawn pictures of female excellence, too high for the masses of women to attain unto, and, if reached, too ideal for a world of realities; but the Word of Truth, adapting itself as it always does to every condition of life, lays down a few simple, comprehensive principles, which, incorporated in the heart of any woman, whatever her natural endowments, or outward circumstances, will make her useful and beautiful in the world, and honored in the sight of her heavenly Father.

We will briefly notice these Bible principles; hoping "to stir up" the "pure minds" of our beloved sisters, and provoke them to good works.

An unwavering faith in the Lord Jesus, is the unchangeable corner-stone of all true character; on this alone can she build to the glory of God. If she be married, her first duty is to her husband, for he is her head, "even as Christ is the head of the church"; therefore she is to love and obey him in all things, remembering herself to be the "weaker vessel."

She is to be an affectionate mother, training her children in the fear of the Lord. She is to "look well to the ways of her household," not eating "the bread of idleness"; loving her home, and keeping at home, ordering it with prudence and gentleness; relieving the afflicted, extending hospitality to strangers, diligently following every good work.

Let the unmarried consecrate all their time and talents to the service of their Divine Master, rejoicing that they are placed in a position where they have the fullest opportunity of becoming "holy, both in body and spirit." Says the Word: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak"; for "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence."

In deportment, they are to be grave and discreet; temperate, industrious, and lovely; adorned with a "meek and quiet spirit," for this "is, in the sight of God, of great price." What amusements, if any, are allowed her, she can best judge. Paul says: "She that liveth in pleasure, is dead while she liveth." As dress and conversation open, to the female nature, wide avenues for sinful indulgence, in these they ought to be especially careful. In conversation, they are to be chaste and sober; not given to slandering, or indulging in any of the light chit-chat," so prevalent. But when they speak, let them open their mouths with wisdom, and show the "law of kindness" in their tongues.

Their dress is to be modest, and not costly; as simple and neat in its arrangement as possible. Jewelry of all descriptions is forbidden. Her long hair is "a glory to her," therefore it is a shame to have it shorn. But she is to attire it with simplicity, indulging in no vain fashions, decorating it with no superfluity of head-dress.

Dear sisters, are these precious truths hid in your hearts, and are you ordering the minutest events of your daily lives by them? And, while companions, sons and brothers are going forth into the world, bearing its reproach, and counting not their lives dear unto them, for the sake of proclaiming the glad tidings of the coming and kingdom of Christ,—are you by your unceasing prayerfulness, your purity, and patience in well doing, casting your moral influence on this corrupt age? If so, however humble your sphere of action, you are discharging the duties God has assigned you, and in the great day when Jesus returns to make up his jewels, of you it shall be said: "She hath done what she could."

Questions.

1st. Is it right for a church to go without preaching, because many of them are too covetous to put together their mites to pay for it?

2d. Is it right for members of an organized church, or a committee of said church, to invite a preacher to come and labor with them, and not pay the necessary expenses?

3d. Is it right for a preacher to leave his family, spend his time, expenses of horse and carriage, or fare by public conveyance; and then return home, his mind harassed and perplexed to know where he is to get a dollar or two to pay for his quarter's rent, or to buy a bushel of meal to feed his wife and children?

I fear some will have to meet these questions in the coming day.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

We will now talk more with our readers about our great campmeeting at Wilbraham. As we said in our last, this was the largest one we have ever held. There were said to be seventy-four tents and eighty-four preachers. It was truly a feast of tabernacles. It was a heavenly sight to see so many together who were followers of the Prince of peace, who have no occasion for any armor but the christian. Our last report came up to Tuesday night.

Wednesday, 27th. The weather was very warm, and consequently it was pleasant being in the grove. On account of the meeting of the Advent Christian Association, we were not able to hear the preaching during the day, hence can give no special report. Bro. M. Batchelor, Rutland, Vt., preached in the morning, and Bro. Albion Ross, of Worcester, in the afternoon. We heard their sermons were well received. Bro. McIntosh, of Boston, preached in the evening.

Thursday, 28th. This was a day of much interest. At 8 o'clock A. M. we met in front of the preachers' stand for a general prayer and conference meeting. It was a heavenly, heart-searching season. The Spirit of the Lord was in our midst. Many were quickened, and firmly resolved to live nearer to the Lord. Several decided to leave off the use of tobacco and cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and Spirit, and be ready to meet the Bridegroom. Many saw the importance of entire consecration, if they would be ready for the "marriage supper of the Lamb." We felt it truly a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. At 10 o'clock we listened to a very interesting and profitable discourse from Bro. H. F. Carpenter, pastor of the church in Poultney, Vt. It was truly meat in due season for the flock of God. In short, it was a real feast of fat things—one of those sermons that last a life-time. In the afternoon, Bro. J. V. Himes, of Boston, preached on the coming of Christ, showing that "the end of all things is at hand." He feels well assured that our Savior will make his second advent to our planet about 1867–8. He is awake on this great subject, and making earnest efforts to arouse the sleeping virgins, that they may be ready for the glorious event. It is evident that the mass of professing christians in the various churches are in a very sad state at the present time,—filled with the spirit of war instead of the spirit of Christ. It is time to cry aloud and spare not. Those who are not ready to meet the Lord have no time to lose if they intend to be prepared. We were pleased to see a solemn impression on the minds of the people, in view of what is coming on the earth. Men cannot avoid the impression that some great event is at hand. In times past, they have succeeded in throwing off these feelings, but now they follow them by night and day; and they are fast passing into the state described by our Savior as the last one before his coming, when men's hearts will be "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." It is a cheering feature among our brethren and sisters that they are more and more interested in the signs of the times, and talking more about the coming of the Savior, and less about minor points of difference,—more about practical duties, and less concerning speculating theories. We shall expect to see still greater improvement in this direction. Let every child of the Lord lend a helping hand, and expect a sweet blessing in return.

In the afternoon of Wednesday, we had a smart shower, which was very timely to lay the dust on the roads leading to the camp-ground. On account of the shower, we had preaching in several tents in the evening, by Brn. J. B. Cook, T. M. Preble, R. Wendell, L. P. Judson, and the writer. We heard favorable reports from the different meetings. Some special interest was manifested among the unconverted. Bro. Willard's son, from Hammonton, N. J., was converted in one of the Boston tent, causing great joy, not only among angels, but in the hearts of anxious parents, who had taken special pains to have their noble son present at this campmeeting. He was baptized on the Lord's day, in company with seventeen others.

During the day and night, we had other reasons to give thanks to the Lord, while at the same time we were taught the importance of being continually prepared to close up the affairs of this short and uncertain life. In the afternoon, a horse broke loose, and ran with great fury through the encampment, periling the lives of scores, and yet not an individual was harmed. After passing some distance, the buggy struck a tree, which tore it from the horse, leaving it a mass of fragments; but the horse rushed on around the public walk, till he had more than half completed the circle, when he was met by his owner, who jumped in front of him and seized him by the neck, risking his own life in a most hazardous manner, for the sake of others. The effort was fully successful, but it was the most daring feat of horsemanship we ever witnessed. He received the horse into his arms, as a mother would a child, when they run to meet each other, and she throws both arms around the child's neck, receiving it into her embrace. We expected to see the man dragged and trampled upon, but it was a perfect success. We afterwards learned that when he trained the colt, he had taught him to stop whenever he met him with such an embrace. It seemed he knew he had met his friend and master, and at once gave up. But for this timely meeting of the two, we might have been obliged to chronicle some sad events.

In the evening, between ten and eleven o'clock, when most had retired, and all was still, we heard a crash, and soon a call for "a light—a light." There was an immediate rush to the scene, when it was ascertained that a limb two feet and three inches in circumference at its lower end, and thirty-three feet long, had fallen about fifty feet upon the Danielsonville tent. It was supposed that those in the tent must of necessity be killed; but it was soon found that no one was fatally injured. Bro. Holt was bruised some, and two sisters were slightly injured, who were baptized the next day.

Friday, 29th. The weather was fine. At 8 o'clock we met again in front of the stand for a general prayer and conference meeting, and had a blessed season. Twelve requested prayers, and several were blessed. Many appeared to be under conviction. Every one seemed to enjoy the meeting, feeling glad they were in the hallowed, tented grove. Preaching at 10 A. M. by Bro. S. S. Brewer, of South Glastenbury, Ct. He endeavored to show from the prophetic Scriptures that the end of the present dispensation is near at hand. In the afternoon, Bro. Wm. Sheldon, from Merrimac, Sauk Co., Wis., entertained the people with further evidences that our Savior will soon appear. Bro. S. has been laboring very successfully in the west, and intends to return soon. He is a man for the times. Would that we had a multitude of such men.

In the evening we had an interesting and profitable discourse from Bro. Timothy Cole, of Haverhill, which was well calculated to arouse the church to action. It was very timely, and much good resulted. He is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, and he loves the work. We were much cheered by his presence and soul-stirring exhortations during the week. We were thankful that the Lord directed his steps thither.

During the day Bro. Baxter, who has lectured in Boston, and various other places in the States and Canadas, showing that the Lord will come about 1868, made a visit to the camp-ground, in company with his father, an able English barrister, who entertains the same view as to the time of Christ's coming. He gave a very interesting discourse on the subject, showing that he had devoted considerable time to the study of prophecy. He stated that on Sundays, some five hundred men preach in the open air in London, and that there is much interest on the subject of Christ's second advent. It is evident that the Lord is arousing the faithful in all lands to look for the speedy return of his Son from heaven.

Saturday, 30th. A very pleasant day. At 8 o'clock, we met again in front of the preacher's stand for a prayer and conference meeting, and had a heavenly season. Some fifteen came forward for prayers, and received rich blessings from the Lord. There is deep conviction on many minds, which has not yet resulted in corresponding action.

At 10 A. M., Bro. I. C. Wellcome, of Yarmouth, Me., preached, showing the necessity of holy living, if we expect to be saved when Jesus comes. In the afternoon, we had a valuable discourse from Bro. H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., showing that we are in "the time of the end," and that soon we shall be privileged to hail the coming of the King of kings, and assemble at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."

In the evening, Bro. H. Munger, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., preached a sermon well calculated to set people to work in the vineyard of the Lord, and it was not labor in vain. At the close of the sermon, Bro. T. Cole followed with appropriate remarks, when some forty came forward for prayers, and several found peace in believing. Thus closed the week.

Sabbath morning, Aug. 31st. We think we never witnessed a more lovely morning than this. It seemed as if we enjoyed the special blessing of our heavenly Father. We could easily imagine that we were not far removed from the bowers of paradise. At 8 o'clock, we met at the stand for our memorable love-feast, during which it is said one hundred and seventy spoke of their love for Jesus, in one hour and twenty minutes. It was a love-feast indeed. One could well afford to take a long journey at considerable expense for the sake of enjoying such a scene. It will be long remembered by those who were present.

At 10 o'clock, we had a stirring sermon from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, pastor of the church at Sandy Hill, N. Y. He showed very clearly from the Scriptures that the great day of the Lord is just at hand. The vast audience listened with deep attention, and their countenances showed that their judgments were convinced of the truthfulness of our position. In the afternoon, Bro. J. Couch, of Warner, N. H., delivered an able discourse on "the signs of the times," presenting overwhelming evidence that the present dispensation will soon close. It was a solemn hour, and we trust the truth took effect on many minds. This was the last public discourse. After the sermon we repaired to the water, when Bro. Hastings buried eighteen happy souls with Christ in baptism. This was another blessed occasion. Thirty were baptized during the meeting, and five were ordained to preach the gospel,—Bro. McCulloch, of Savoy, Mass., Bro. McCandis, of Boston, Mass., Bro. Sibley, Bro. A. M. Higgins, Palmer Depot, Mass., and Bro. Butler, of Wilbraham, Mass.

In the evening, four hundred and forty gathered around the table of the Lord to commemorate his dying love. This was the most heavenly season of all. This alone would pay for the whole expense and labor connected with the entire campmeeting. Thus closed the meeting, and we parted in hope of meeting soon at the marriage supper of the Lamb, in the glorious New Jerusalem.

Pithy.

We have received, what purports to be a "Review of the discussion at Weeks Mills, China, Me," between E. B. Fletcher and ourself. The "Review" is headed, Millerite—Materialistic—Annihilation." The following closes the "Review":—

A CHALLENGE FROM E. B. FLETCHER TO MR. MILES GRANT.

MR. GRANT:—Sir,—I propose to discuss with you the two propositions we had as a subject of debate at Weeks Mills, last June. The discussion to be held at the same place, or in that vicinity, unless some other place shall be agreed upon by the disputants. If you accept this invitation you will please inform me by a letter directed to E. B. Fletcher, Vassalboro, Me., Cross Hill.

PROPOSITIONS FOR DISCUSSION.

1. All men are immortal, in the sense of continued and unending being.

2. Man is not immortal, in the sense of continued and unending being.

RULES OF DEBATE.

1. Each disputant shall state the points upon which his opponent places reliance in proof of his proposition, and shall make an effort to show them unsound; and this shall be honorably done, at the time when the arguments are stated. When either disputant gives a text as argument, he shall show, if he can, how it supports the argument or point he is proving; and when required to do so, the disputants shall state in which of the different senses of a word he is using it.

2. The duty of the chairman shall be to keep the parties to the above rules; to decide questions of order, and to govern the meeting.

2. The debaters shall occupy twenty minutes alternately, and the debate shall continue three days, occupying six hours each day, unless otherwise agreed upon. The first proposition the first half of the time; the second, the other half.

My reasons, sir, for presenting to you this paper are, 1. Those which appear in the Review to which this is appended. These are a sufficient apology. But, 2. Your notice of the discussion at Weeks Mills, in "The World's Crisis" of July 2d. In this notice you say of your opponent: "If oft repeated assertions and misrepresentations, were argumentative proof, then he certainly established his points." And of yourself, you say: "We found an abundance of scripture to show "the entire man is mortal.' As these two statements are untrue, and you know it, and the notice itself is a low ungentlemanly attack upon your opponent, it is now demanded of you that you publicly make these two statements good, if you can, by a discussion under the regulations here given or acknowledge the two statements untrue, and admit the correctness of the Review, by declining to accept this challenge. As the course taken by you at the attempted discussion, and your mis-statements and your attack upon your opponent, in your paper, are public offences, they require a public remedy, and we have the means of obtaining it. If you decline this challenge, it will demonstrate the truth of our position, and prove that you know you cannot sustain your doctrine in a fair and manly debate. If you accept of this, I will prove the falsity of your two statements, which I have quoted from your notice. If you had reasons for the first discussion, you have far more for a second, if you have any faith in your doctrine! I believe you have no confidence in your own arguments; but that your whole reliance in support of your doctrine is upon sophistries. But you now are offered a chance to prove the contrary. No further attack which you may make upon your opponent, or statements made, will put you right in the public mind. Every one knows that, if you believe you can sustain yourself, you will make the trial.

E. B. FLETCHER.

Vassalboro', Me., Aug. 4, 1862.

[If Mr. Grant does not take up this challenge, I extend it to any one of his faith who will take it up.] E. B. F.

[Mr. Grant takes "up this challenge," and proposes to have the discussion at Augusta, Bangor or Portland.—ED.]

The Contrast.

It is said "circumstances alter cases." We will not presume to dispute the fact that circumstances alter men; or, perhaps more properly speaking, develop them. There are many dough-faces in the world, but they are not all among politicians. When reading the following from the Christian Watchman of 1840, we could not help contrasting it with articles published at the present time, and inquiring what has caused such a change? As principles do not alter, the change must be in the men. If they were right then, they must be wrong now. Please read what follows, and form your own conclusions:—

FIGHTING PREACHERS.

Our worthy friend, the editor of the Church Advocate, takes us very pleasantly to task in the following manner:

"A Baptist minister and a Methodist minister enlisted as soldiers, in the army which has been sent to Mexico, to fight a people who have done us no bodily, mental, or moral harm. These ministers were both shot down dead on the bloody field of battle. They had better been preaching the gospel of the Prince of peace.

The Christian Watchman, a short time since, published an account of the 'training' of twenty-five boys, armed and equipped, who belonged to an Episcopal Institute, under the care of an Episcopal clergyman; and appended to the paragraph a remark, that such was the religion of Episcopacy.

Now here is a minister who does not, indeed, indulge in the very foolish and childish business of dressing up children in uniform, for the purpose of parading them about for an idle show, but shoulders his musket, deserts his flock, and marches to Mexico, and tries his hand at the art of killing. Did the Christian Watchman espy him among the hosts on the field? How much easier it is to see a mote than a beam!"—Church Advocate.

We did "espy" a paragraph going the rounds, credited to some Western paper, to the effect that an individual who was, or had been, a Baptist preacher, had enlisted, gone to Mexico, and fell in the battle of Buena Vista. But as no confirmative notice of it appeared in any Baptist paper, we concluded that the statement was erroneous; such is our present impression. Our Western brethren can, perhaps, enlighten us on the point.

If it were true that a Baptist preacher had left his appropriate work as a minister of the Prince of peace, and had enlisted as a follower of Moloch, the fact would, in our estimation, be far less deplorable than the other fact above alluded to. It amounted simply to this: an unworthy minister left the ministry for the army, and it was doubtless good riddance, both for the church, the ministry, and the cause of religion, that he did so. Next, he left his country for his country's good, and went to Mexico, where, although he died as a fool dieth, yet he met that kind of death which he bargained for, and which he had reason to expect, by the terms of his enlistment. We mourn over his folly, we pity his infatuation, we lament the darkness of his exit, and there we leave him. He alone is responsible for his acts, and his misdeeds have perished with him.

Not so when a clergyman is engaged in teaching beardless boys to use the musket and the sword, to wear the cockade, the military coat and feather, and take delight in "the pomp and circumstance of war." He becomes a living fountain of corruption. He does not immolate himself to the demon of war, but, like the fabled heathen deities, seizes upon the beauty of youth, to prepare as an offering on the bloody altar, causing the "children to pass through the fire unto Moloch!" He teaches them to read the Prayer Book in the morning, and to take lessons with the weapons of death in the afternoon! And he continues to be a clergyman in good standing, uncensured in his church, thus making "the church" responsible for his acts. Surely, if the error of the Baptist preacher —if there be any truth in the report that one has fallen in Mexico—is a "beam," here is a whole frame-work of beams!

A NEW WORK.—It will be seen from his article in another column, that Bro. Brewer intends to publish soon a pamphlet on The Kingdom of God, and the Signs of the Times. We have no doubt it will be a valuable and timely work; and we bespeak for it the aid of brethren everywhere. He wants means to publish it, and asks your help; proposing to return to you the value of any offerings you may make for that purpose, in books when published. Read his "Appeal," and then open your hearts and hands with contributions and pledges after a godly sort. The signs are thickening, and the kingdom nearing; what is done, must be done quickly. W. B. H.

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT of the doings of the Advent Christian Association at its recent annual meeting at Wilbraham, will appear next week. W. B. H.

Retribution.

The second edition of this work is now ready for delivery. The price in paper covers is only 18 cts. It is also neatly bound in cloth with Pauline Theology, and Destiny of the Wicked, making a volume of nearly 300 pages, lettered on the back "Future Punishment." Price 50 cts.

I had intended to add largely to the matter of this edition of Retribution, that I might meet the various criticisms to which it has been exposed since its publication. The pressure of other engagements prevented me from doing this, and I have chosen rather to reserve what I had to say for a new book, which I hope soon to issue on the "Resurrection of the Dead." In that I intend to give the subject a still more thorough examination.

The alterations therefore made in this edition are few. As it was stereotyped in Philadelphia, and a large portion of it while I was at a distance from that city, many typographical errors occurred in its pages. These I have usually corrected. There were also a few inaccuracies in scripture quotations, and occasional slips of the pen, or errors of the compositor, which should have been corrected in the proofs; as, in one case, the word "Remission" was used instead of "Redemption." In one or two other cases the ideas and arguments expressed have been so misrepresented, and the language so perverted, that I thought it best to make such slight changes in the pages as would place my arguments so distinctly before the reader that it would not be easy to misrepresent them. I have therefore in two or three instances so guarded and qualified the language as to cut off the opportunity of those who seek occasion to find fault. One critic having objected to my spelling of a certain Hebrew word, which is, to my certain knowledge, spelled in three different ways by different Hebrew lexicographers, I have inserted the word itself in Hebrew letters, giving him leave to spell it to suit himself, if he can.

The statement quoted in the previous edition, that it would take more than ten thousand million years to judge the world, etc., having been disavowed by the man who made it as an error of his treacherous memory, I am of course very happy to withdraw what was said concerning it. And though the argument as then stated would seem to me a very contemptible one, yet I hope to be only held accountable for what I have said concerning it, and not for the accusations of those who have charged me with malice, and falsehood, and hypocrisy, and other such qualities.

The present edition is sent forth with the hope that it may do something towards enlightening the minds of men concerning the realities of future retribution. I continue my previous offer to send a copy of it free to every person who denies the resurrection of the ungodly, if they will agree to read it carefully. I sent this offer last February to the editor of a periodical which has been largely occupied for the last six months with reviews of "Retribution." Glad as its contributors are to have free discussion in other organs, I have not as yet been able to get my offer to give Retribution and Pauline Theology away, inserted in the columns of this organ. I would therefore ask the readers of the Crisis to take pains to make known this offer to those who are candidly inquiring concerning the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust. All such can have copies of "Retribution" free, as also can the poor, and preachers, upon condition that they will carefully read them. Persons who wish to send stamps for pre-paying the postage, can do so, otherwise it may be sent at my expense. Yours in Christ,

Boston, Mass. H. L. HASTINGS.

An Appeal.

Dearly beloved Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I have now nearly ready for the press a work on The Kingdom of God, and the Signs of the Times, written on Matt. 21:43;—"Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."

Dear Friends, will you assist me in getting this little work out on a missionary tour? It is very late in the day. The long projected rays of the gospel sun over the universe, proclaim with great certainty that the sun is just about to set, and a dark, dark night of eternal silence is about to overtake the impenitent. Will you do what you can to help diffuse light on the subject? You may say, "The times are very hard." They are; and no class of men, probably, experience that fact more sensibly than the Advent ministers. For some years past, I have labored in new fields most of the time; consequently, my income has been very small. I will pay you, in return, in books, as soon as it is published, if the Lord will. If you send me aid, and should I fail to receive sufficient means to accomplish the work, I will return it to you. Come, dear brethren or sisters, try now, and see what you can do in this matter. Deny yourself a little, and send along a few dollars. Act soon. No time to delay. The reward will soon be given. If you have nothing to give yourself, ask some one that has. Will you do it? Try! My address is South Glastenbury, Conn.

A New Work.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the Crisis, I have been desired by some of the brethren and friends to get my work published, "On the existence of holy angels; their origin, attributes, ranks, titles; their ministry and various offices in the great work of human redemption, and the peculiar work assigned them in the approaching judgment, and in the general administration and government of God." This I propose to do (the Lord willing), as soon as sufficient pledges are received to warrant me to go on with it. It will make a work of about seventy-two pages. Shall be able to furnish of the first edition about eight copies for $1.00.

This is a subject which should be deeply interesting and ought to be dear to the church,—one which is calculated, I verily believe, by the blessing of God, to afford much comfort and joy to the household of faith. It has been long neglected, and should especially in these latter days command our most serious and prayerful attention.

Who of the brethren or sisters will pledge to assist me in this work? Who will pledge one, two, or three, or more dollars towards getting it out? There is money enough yet among us as a people to accomplish a great amount of good, in the way of publishing these glorious truths of the latter days. O! let us then as faithful stewards do what we can. Soon property and money will be of little worth, and those who have trusted in it will perish with it. Then let us, brethren, do what we can now, while there is time and opportunity offered us for this purpose; that our memorial may be like that of the devoted Mary's of Bethany—"SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD."

All who have the means and feel like co-operating with me in this matter will please write me at once stating what they will do. My address is "Eld. William Shepherd, Newark, N. J." Let me hear from you at once. The work will be published in the course of three weeks, as it is now quite ready for the press.

The Christian Lyre.

This is evidently one of the most useful and popular books that has been published among us from the beginning. It was designed originally to accompany the Harp, as a music book, and also for conference meetings. But things took a course so as to defeat in some measure this plan. But the book has been adopted, and is used by Adventists, and by many of other denominations, who speak of it in terms of high commendation.

It was difficult to classify the hymns, and at the same time classify the meters, so that, in this respect, it is imperfect. There is also the lack of hymns on baptism, the Lord's Supper, and other choice hymns, originally intended for the work; but which were omitted. One other thing of importance to some, may be named in this connexion. It is a well known fact, that many persons do not read or have use for the music; and wish the hymns only. I had arranged to meet these defects in the Lyre, in the following way:

First, To add, in a supplement, all the hymns needed; which could be supplied cheaply to all who now have the book.

Second, To get out a neat pocket edition of the hymns of the Lyre, classified and arranged, for those who do not wish the music.

While this thing was in progress, the Board of the Christian Publication Society appointed a committee to wait on me in reference to these matters, not knowing of my designs. I will be glad to co-operate with them in these improvements of the Lyre, if judged best, or anything by which we can best serve the cause of the Advent in this department of our service.

Maine State Mission.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—I am called upon to bid you farewell in the State, and relinquish my mission. I closed my labors the middle of August; as the evenings were short, and the farmers were so busy with their summer work, it was difficult to hold evening meetings in towns. The season, too, had become so hot that it was tedious to ride in an open carriage under a burning sun; and besides, I needed a little rest from labor, before taking the pastoral charge of the church in Boston. My heart is sad to leave you. I love the brethren and sisters in Maine, and enjoyed my mission well. I found everywhere kind hearts and hands ready to aid me, and administer to my comfort, while I found some adversaries. Though I labored hard and constantly, Jesus abundantly blessed me; and you so cheered me in my work, that I was enabled to keep up good courage, faith and hope; and my health was most excellent.

I am grieved to leave you, and were it not that my family requires my presence more at home (my companion being so feeble in health, and thinking that she cannot endure the climate of Maine), I should not have felt justified in closing my labors in the State;—though the church in Boston had so urgently demanded my return among them. I do not wish to complain at the mysterious providence that has called me from so large a field of usefulness, and confined my labors to a single church and city; yet, I must confess, I feel somewhat like a bird caught on wing and confined in a beautiful cage, to make music for a single family, when it might have made the forests vocal with its melody, and comforted many a household, and charmed many an ear. God my Savior overrules all, and knows what is best for you and me. He so orders for wise purposes, no doubt, and we submit. I only hope that you will fill my place in the mission field of Maine with a more efficient and faithful brother, and one who will do honor to the cause in that department of our work.

Farewell! dear brethren and sisters of Maine. Many of you I shall see no more till the trump of God shall sound and we meet in the kingdom of God. When I bade you adieu at your homes, I thought we might meet again in this world, but now it may not be. Let us remember each other, and strive through grace to attain the reward of the just and faithful in the heavenly world, where grief, parting, distance and death shall be unknown and divide us no more. O. R. FASSETT.

Articles found on the Camp Ground.

One mantilla, a cotton sacque, two parasols, two silk handkerchiefs, two keys tied together, a Testament, a hymn book, a "Christian Lyre," a hand towel, a little axe, and two umbrellas. The above are what were gathered up and brought off when I came. It fell to my lot, as usual, to be the last lonesome human mortal soul that left the ground. It looked barren enough after our little city was destroyed, and all the inhabitants had fled, never to return again. Such reflections will have a place in the mind of a person who is left hours alone on a camp-ground, after the saints have left. How much more lonesome shall we be, if we should be left at last on the earth with the wicked, when the bride ascends. Let us endure a little longer. The signs thicken, and the evidences strengthen. Wicked kingdoms are reeling, politicians are wondering. Let us be watching and expecting the promises of God to be fulfilled on the righteous.

"Signs of the Times."

This new production contains much interesting matter—much that is both interesting and instructive. The best way to form a correct opinion of the work is to send for a copy. W. SHELDON.

New Volume.

This is the first number of a new volume. Now is a good time to get new subscribers. We have received eighty-eight since Aug. 26th. People are now anxious to read on the great truths connected with the coming of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead. If each reader of the Crisis would make a little effort, the number of our subscribers might be doubled, and many more be led to prepare to meet the Savior at his appearing. Brethren, has not the time come to be in earnest? Is there any time left for delay? Shall we be less active than men of the world? If we are as faithful in our efforts to get recruits for the army of the Lord, as men are to obtain them to fight our national battles, we shall see glorious results. Now is the time. Let every one do all he can to rescue men from perdition. We shall endeavor to spare no pains to make the Crisis just such a paper as every one should read,—one that no christian will be ashamed to lend his neighbor,—one calculated to comfort saints, and alarm sinners. Once more we say, let all its friends make one grand effort to double its circulation.—ED.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Concord, N. H., July 19th, 1862, my beloved father, ANDREW CROCKETT, aged seventy-seven years and six months.

Thus death, that cruel tyrant, has again entered our family circle, and taken our only remaining parent. His disease was dropsy of the heart. His health began to fail last autumn. He was confined to the house about two months. His sufferings were very great, yet he bore them all with christian patience, perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord. He had no fears of death, although he felt it to be an enemy.

He was one of the first in this place to embrace the coming of Christ in 1843-4. Although disappointed, his faith was never shaken, or his hope lost, but he took hold of the promises of God with a firmer grasp than ever, and rejoiced exceedingly in the light received from searching the Scriptures. By giving heed to the sure word of prophecy, he saw a beauty and harmony in the plan of salvation and redemption he never saw before, although a Bible student many years. He dwelt with especial interest on Christ, the great sacrifice to save, the resurrection from the dead necessary to future life; also the coming of the Lord to awake the sleeping, and give immortality to the faithful. He received so much comfort from these promises, he wanted everybody to enjoy the same blessing. He lived the life of the righteous, and his last end was like theirs. Although he suffered greatly, he was never heard to complain, but would often praise God for his goodness to him.

We deeply mourn his loss, but not as those who have no hope; for we believe the time is at hand when Christ will come and redeem his saints from the grave; destroy death and him that had the power of it. "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" We believe he has "fought a good fight," finished his course, and "kept the faith;" and like a shock of corn fully ripe, he was gathered to his fathers, to wait the final call; then with the Psalmist to awake and be satisfied.

Bro. Couch attended the funeral, and comforted our hearts with a discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 18. My prayer is that God may sanctify this affliction to our good, and bring us eventually an unbroken family into the kingdom of his dear Son.

"We followed him to the silent tomb,
And gently laid him down;
But soon he'll rise in immortal bloom,
With glory robed and crowned."

OLIVE BENNETT.

Died in Gloucester, R. I., Aug. 9th, Bro. AUGUSTUS RANDALL, in the 70th year of his age.

He was a close student of the Bible, and saw the light as it shined from the Sacred Word. He died expressing joy in the blessed hope. At his funeral were gathered many friends and relatives. The word and promises of God were presented for their instruction and comfort. May they all meet in a land where there will be no dying.

FOREIGN NEWS.

[Advices of the 29th ult.]

Italian affairs remain unchanged.

A slight conflict had occurred near Reggio between the Garibaldians and the Royal troops.

Important military movements by France are predicted.

Napoleon has called a Council of Ministers.

The details of Garibaldi's capture say that he was wounded in the thigh and foot by a bayonet. His retreat was cut off, and unconditional surrender became inevitable, but his resistance, nevertheless, was desperate. He has arrived at Spezzia.

It is reported that Garibaldi's wounds are not serious, and that they are progressing favorably. It is presumed that he will be tried and sentenced, but pardoned on account of his past services.

One rumor says that the Government intends sending Garibaldi to America.

There have been popular demonstrations in favor of Garibaldi at several places, but they were put down. The newspapers generally think the event must hasten the solution of the Roman question, and cause the French to withdraw from Rome.

The blockade of Sicily has been raised, and the state of siege removed.

The London Peace Society has issued an address urging Americans to peace.

ONE DAY LATER FROM EUROPE.

The official Turin Gazette says Garibaldi has been removed to Varignano, in the Gulf of Spezzia. His wounds appear to be slight. The government has ordered two distinguished men to attend him.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press writes as follows:

Gen. McClellan has signalized his assumption of the command of the army by rearranging the whole in what promises to be an effective and substantial organization. The new corps will be commanded by Heintzelman, Burnside, Hooker, Banks, Sigel, and Sumner, all of whom have proved themselves equal to great emergencies heretofore, and have the confidence of the people for the future.

Although there is great excitement evinced by the populace, there seems to be little anxiety expressed concerning the safety of the National capital. In official circles we notice the greatest confidence in Gen. McClellan and the army, and it is believed that the rebels who have entered Maryland can never evade capture.

By the order of the Navy Department, several of our gunboats have assembled off Aquia Creek, and are now at anchor there. Another fleet of gunboats arrived below this morning. Where they came from, or what they are going to do, is not for me to say.

In every department of the army there is the greatest activity, both on this and the other side of the river."

We take the subjoined from the correspondence of the N. Y. Express.

"We are yet but crudely advised of the irruption into Maryland by the rebels, or their object. I consider it a foolhardy attempt induced by the flush of recent operations, which has made them over confident, and thinking also that we are proportionably disorganized; but they will find that they will have to meet our new troops, and under the immediate command of McClellan, who leaves at noon to-day to join the troops he has massed in Maryland—Sumner's, Franklin's, Banks' and Burnside's divisions are all there, or will be in the course of the day, besides other corps.

The line of the road, from Washington to Havre de Grace, is thoroughly guarded by troops at the bridges, culverts, and elsewhere. There are enough to stop all local insurrections.

It is stated that from 20,000 to 30,000 men marched through Washington in two columns, Saturday night.

The Baltimore Clipper of yesterday says: "We learn from Col. Piper of our army, who passed through the pickets of the rebel army, that Gen. Burnside's army was on their trail. Gen Burnside had 40,000 troops in his command. Gen. McClellan is in the field with another large force, also en route after the rebel army."

Major Gen. Banks is understood to have command of the troops on the Maryland side of the Potomac, while Gen. Heintzelman has been placed in command of the "Army of Virginia," with his headquarters at Alexandria. He has Generals Porter and Sigel with him, and a large number of the newly arrived troops are now on the sacred soil.

Washington, Sept. 7. The intelligence received here last night of the occupation of Frederick City, Md., by the rebel forces naturally excited much indignation and alarm.

Frederick is about sixty miles from Baltimore by the railroad line, and forty over land from Washington by way of Rockville, Darnestown and Poolesville.

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 12. Reliable information has been received that Stonewall Jackson, with his advance, is now in Hagerstown, preparing to move with his whole army upon Pennsylvania.

The most active measures are being put in force to assemble a large army to resist the rebel invasion, and if possible, save our capital from devastation and outrage.

All along the Northern Central, and the York and Gettysburg railroads, the wildest excitement prevails. There is not a little village hamlet, of ever so humble pretensions, that does not boast its band of patriots, who are drilling and othewise making preparations for resistance to State invasion and protection of the general government.

The rebels are playing a desperate game in the invasion of our State, for a more determined people never existed than are now aroused to repel them.

Mayor Henry issues the following address:

Citizens of Philadelphia—At a late hour to-night the Governor of Pennsylvania has addressed to me the following dispatch: "We have reliable information this evening that the rebel generals have moved their entire army from Frederick to Cumberland Valley, and their destination is now Harrisburg and Philadelphia. We need every available man immediately. Stir up your population to-night, form them into companies and send us 20,000 men to-morrow.

No time can be lost in massing a force in the Susquehanna to defend the State and your city. Arouse every man possible and send them here.

Let the response to this urgent call be prompt and effective. I hereby request that all able bodied citizens shall assemble at 10 o'clock on Friday morning, at the precinct houses of their respective election districts, in readiness to obey the summons to immediate service."

The army of Lee is reported 75,000 strong. Gen. Jackson's 150,000. The whole force in Marylayd is 150,000 strong, including 16,080 cavalry and 180 pieces of artillery.

On the Virginia side, there is a force of 50,000. At Camreville and on the Gum Spring road there are fully 100,000. At Manassas Junction 50,000. Thus the rebels have on the Potomac, near Washington, over 300,000 combatants.

A special dispatch to the N. Y. Post says there is but little anxiety for the security of Washington. Gen. Halleck says it is entirely out of the power of the rebels to take the city, no matter how great the numbers brought against it. The fortifications are believed to be impregnable.

Parson Brownlow made a speech at a loyal gathering in Harrisburg, Pa., last Friday evening, which is thus sketched in one of the city papers:

"He expressed himself gratified with the spectacle before him, and accepted this testimony of a people assembling in force as the evidence of the strength of the loyal men of Pennsylvania. He assured the people that all their strength was necessary to crush the rebellion. He assured them that the rebels were dreadfully in earnest either to succeed in building up a bogus government, or in pulling down all the States of the Union to a common fate of degredation and ruin. He had the evidence to convince him that it was the purpose of the rebels to hurl their full force against the free and loyal States, and if possible, transfer the war to the North. The capital of Pennsylvania was as much in danger as the capital of the Union. Philadelphia and New York were equally menaced with Washington, as it was part of the great plan of the rebel leaders to invade the North, sack our towns, ravage the country, hold the commercial cities, and levy tribute on the people. Now was the time to prepare to meet them."

Washington. We learn that the greatest military preparations are making in the Cumberland Valley and at Harrisburg to meet and check the advance of the enemy.

Governor Curtin will make a fierce defence of the Suquehanna if the rebels should really approach that river with the design of crossing.

Whatever damage the enemy may do to the railroads on this side of the Susquehanna, the whole chain of railroads on the other side will be left intact for the concentration of troops at any point that may be desired.

The occupation of Sugar Loaf Mountain, in Maryland, by our forces, is announced by telegraph. The rebels had established an observatory on this mountain, from which they had an unobstructed view of the country for miles in every direction.

It was of great importance to them as a look-out, being located near the Monocacy river, where they are reported to be intrenched. The capture shows that our forces have made a very considerable advance, and are getting within fighting distance of the enemy.

New York, Sept. 11. A special dispatch to the Herald, from Cincinnati, says there has been no battle yet, although it is hourly expected. Reinforcements are constantly arriving, and Cincinnati is safe.

New York, Sept. 10. The Times' Port Royal correspondent says Gen. Hunter's policy with regard to the negroes has been adopted by the President; that five negro regiments are to be raised, armed and uniformed for the service of the United States, and that 50,000 in addition are to be enrolled, to be employed in the Quartermaster's Department, nominally his laborers, but organized into companies and uniformed. The exact time of commencing the work of enlisting colored regiments is not stated, but it is expected to be soon. Gen Saxton's visit to Washington is for consultation on the subject.

The Chicago Times reports on the best authority that Gen. Grant's army is being rapidly concentrated upon an important line for active operations.

Cairo, Ill., Sept. 9. News received at headquarters last night states that Clarksville has fallen into the hands of our troops.

Cincinnati, Sept. 15. All business was resumed to-day, except the sales of liquor.

At 4 P. M. the various military organizations will assemble and drill.

The rebels have fallen back only four miles south of Florence. This is stated to be owing to the scarcity of water, but it is supposed they are awaiting reinforcements. The rebels have left Maysville and gone to Paris.

Headquarters of the Army of the Potomac.
To H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief.

After a severe engagement the corps of Gen. Hooker and Gen. Reno have carried the hight commanding the Hagerstown road by storm. The troops behaved magnificently. They never fought better.

Bolivar, Sept. 15. Information received to-day confirms the route and demoralization of the rebel army.

Gen. Lee is reported wounded and Garland killed.

Gen. Hooker alone has over a thousand or more prisoners, 700 having been sent to Frederick.

It is stated that Lee gives his loss as 15,000.

We are following as rapidly as the men can move. (Signed) GEO. B. McCLELLAN, Major General Commanding.

New York, Sept. 15. A Frederick correspondent of a morning paper states that there are a large number of negroes in Longstreet's rebel division who are almost as filthy as their whiter comrades.

A special dispatch states that 500 rebels were taken prisoners, and have been sent to Frederick. Nearly all the Marylanders who enlisted with the rebels at Frederick have been captured.

Charleston has been practically evacuated, many of its citizens having taken up their quarters in huts beyond the city limits, and out of the range of our gunboats.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8. A dispatch says that the fort at Winchester, containing twelve tons of gunpowder, had been blown up. It literally shook the earth for miles around. Nearly every window in the town was broken by the concussion. The plaster on the ceilings fell down. The enemy obtained no supplies. Our people burned the railroad depot at Winchester, with all the commissary stores.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10. The action yesterday of the 8th Illinois Cavalry, under Col. Farnsworth, was with eight hundred of Col. Ashby's old cavalry. It took place between Poolesville and Darnestown. The rebels had fifteen killed and wounded, including one captain. We took six prisoners. Our loss was one killed and seven wounded.

This forenoon Col Farnsworth again met a portion of them at Clarksburg and took thirty of them prisoners. They have already arrived at headquarters. Some of them were barefoot and bareheaded, and all of them in rags. One of them wore nothing but his underclothes.

FORTRESS MONROE, Sept. 10. By the arrival of the steamer Guide, from Newbern, we learn that the rebels, 1200 strong, attacked Washington, N. C., on the morning of the 6th inst. After a desperate fight of two hours the rebels were repulsed and pursued seven miles. The gunboat Louisiana rendered essential service in shelling the rebels out of the strong position they had seized.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 15. A special dispatch to the Bulletin from Harrisburg says the rebels have fallen back two miles. Gen. Longstreet's division has been sent to reinforce them. The battles will probably be renewed to-day.

Stonewall Jackson has been whipped in three battles.

Col. Miles held his position at Harper's Ferry, but the rebels were planting guns on the Maryland heights commanding the position of Miles. It is feared he will have to surrender.

MORE INDIAN DIFFICULTIES.—Omaha, Sept. 8th.—Messengers from the Yankton Agency arrived at Sioux City on the 6th, bringing information that that tribe is on the eve of rising against the whites. Some settlers of Dakotah have already been attacked. Women and children, all along the Missouri river to Fort Randolph, are fleeing to Sioux City for protection. Help is asked for.

☞ Western papers charge the recent Indian outbreak in Minnesota upon rebel agents. At a recent council of one of the tribes, it was said that all the Indians on the border were going to join the South.

Earth's Career.

Six thousand years have nearly passed
Since Time his rapid march began;
The earth, like us, grows old at last,
And soon will consummate her span.
Six thousand years of human life!
What painful scenes the view betrays;
What deeds of blood and scenes of strife!
How few pass well their fleeting days!

Dread sorrow marks her course throughout
In scenes of sickness, want and care;
In toil, and pain, and death, no doubt,
Each heart has mourned and borne a share.

I'm glad this scene has nearly closed—
This "night of weeping," toil and pain;
And when once end all human woes,
I'm glad they'll ne'er return again.

The earthquake shocks, so frequent now,
Teach us the "shaking" day's at hand;
While pestilential breezes blow
On man and beast, and fruit and land.

I'm glad my lot is cast just here,
Where I can the transition view,—
Behold this old earth disappear,
And see all things created new.

We'll pray, "Lord Jesus, quickly come!
Bid night depart, and morn appear";—
Lo! morning dawns! we'll soon get home,
And join in one glad round of cheer.

Correspondence.

From Bro. R. Phinney.

BRO. GRANT:—I do feel to thank God that there are a few religious papers (the Crisis and Harbinger) who do not enter into the cry,—"to arms," "to arms," and defend the corruption of a nation that God wishes to humble for their sins. I thank him that he has reserved some who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Some of the brethren say they will rot in prison. My soul says amen. It is high time there was a line drawn between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. See Mal. 3d, 4th chap. Let it be made now in all things. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world," but to love as brethren.

There has ever been a falling away always before any change in the dispensation. The next change to take place, as I read, is, the coming of the Lord to judge the world. The system established by Jesus Christ is perfect, and will, says Paul to the Hebrews, make the comers thereunto perfect. So if we obey it all as we come to it, we shall become perfect christians, and fit to associate with Jesus and the sanctified. "Sanctify them through thy truth"—the truth God has given; so when we obey it we become sanctified, for each truth or each doctrine (not truths or doctrines, for there are no such words in the book) has but one meaning, and one way to obey it, and if we do the work in faith, then we become so much the more perfect in love and before God.

We need not err in our duty to God or man. Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc., and thy neighbor as thyself. Read the first general Epistle of John 5, and we shall see just where we are at all times—whether we are children of God or of the devil—whether we are christians or murderers. The fruit of the Spirit is "love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, meekness, patience; against such there is no law." If these things be in us, we shall not be barren or unfruitful.

To those who fear God and will not fight, my prayers are with you and for you. Stand fast in the faith. God will be with you if you remain humble and fear not. You can praise God, and perchance do more good in being persecuted for your love to Jesus than otherwise. Thank God for this holy system of salvation which does not allow us to follow our vile and malicious passions. Praise him, all ye saints. Glorify him, all ye redeemed.

I want to visit the children of God the coming fall and winter in Ingham, Jackson, Calhoun, Clinton, Barny, Eaton, Allegan and Van Buren. If the brethren will write me so I can arrange appointments, I will preach to them. They are so scattered with hobbies that there are but few large churches, but the poor must have the gospel preached to them also.

Yours in hope of immortality.

Cambria Mills, Mich., Aug.

From H. J. Baldwin.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I am satisfied that time is short. I am glad, but not that there is a great multitude that will be destroyed; but our Savior taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come"; and if it is right for us to pray for it, it is right for us to look, yea, long for an answer to our prayers. But, say my brethren in the church, that no doubt has reference to his spiritual coming, or the conversion of the world. In answer, if we believe that Christ has come as a Savior according to promise, we must also believe that he will come again; and if he comes again he must "come in like manner" (bodily, Acts: 11), and if he comes again he comes when the world is filled with good and bad; for Christ tells us that the wheat and tares must grow together till the harvest. See Matt. 13: 30; 37-39. Now we must either turn Jew and say the Messiah has not come, or else we must be like the evil servant and say, "My Lord delayeth his coming"; or, as we have it at the present day, "the millennium must first come and last a thousand years," and thus put off his coming, or else we must come out like honest men and say, "The Lord cometh."

The word of God declares it, and we should let go every thing else, even though we become of no reputation. I know that they that "live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." It is a promise just as much as any other in the Scriptures, and it will surely come. O that the Lord would help us to endure persecution like good soldiers!

And now if we "love" his appearing, we shall be "looking" for it, and be anxious to have it come. We shall not be very likely to say "nobody knows," for we read, "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Blessed be God! he has not surrounded his word with as much fog and mystery as we have been taught to believe, for if we may know of that day so that it shall not overtake us as a thief, and do not know it, but are caught as a thief, then it is our own fault; it is because we are willful and will not "watch." May the Lord help us to "watch unto prayer," so that when he shall come into his kingdom we may be ready to say, "This is our God, we have waited for him." And may we ever pray, "Thy kingdom come." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Amen.

New Preston, Ct.

From C. N. Buzzell.

BRN. AND SRS. IN THE LORD:—I came here (Nulhegan Mills, Vt.) to labor in the mill six days, and the Sabbath to preach the word, with the help of the Lord, wherever a door opened. I have had several meetings here with some opposition. Have an appointment next Sunday, by request, to go to North Stratford, five miles from here. There is a time coming when all shall know the Lord. God help me to be faithful and lead some poor soul to Jesus.

This place is on the G. T. R. Road, ten miles from Island Pond. I hear there are some brethren there; if so, I would like to have them write, or come and see me here. If a door opens I may hold a few meetings there.

How often I think of the dear brethren with whom I have traveled; especially Brn. Howard and Weatherbee, from whom I have received sweet counsel and encouragement. Fight the good fight of faith, dear pilgrims; warn the people in time of peril, when we are liable to be dragged away—to be compelled to shoot down our fellow men—when God says, "Do good to them that hate you," and commands us to pray for our enemies. Which shall we obey, God, or man? "He that takes the sword shall perish with the sword."

Brethren, let us be faithful a little time, and this groaning earth will be exchanged for the saints' eternal home. Shall we faint now when the trial of our faith is come? No, no! Let us stand firm upon the word of God, and be ready to lay down our lives, if need be, for the sake of Jesus, that we may obtain an entrance into the ever blessed abode of the New Jerusalem. Do not give up, but start anew; for the prize is just ahead.

Cheer up, ye fainting ones. Let us trust in our Captain. He alone is able to save "to the uttermost"; and all that will come he will "in no wise cast out." May God bless you all.

Aug. 9th, 1862.

From Sr. H. Morrill.

BRO. GRANT:—I love the "blessed hope" and the "glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. This has been my support through the many trying scenes I have been called to pass. Friends have been torn from my embrace and laid away in the silent grave, and for many years I have been an invalid; but this "hope" bears me up. I believe I shall soon see Jesus, and be made like him. I then shall be freed from infirmities, both of body and mind; no more wearisome days and sleepless nights then; no more heart achings; no more be separated from those we love; but we shall meet the whole redeemed host of God, to part no more.

O! when will the consummation of our hope come? I love to hear the evidences of the soon coming of my blessed Lord. It touches a chord that vibrates on my soul. Nothing is so cheering to God's weary, way-worn children, as to know they are most home, for "here we have no certain abiding place." As our fathers were, so are we, pilgrims and strangers, journeying to a "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." I long to be there!

Evidences in the moral, political and religious world, together with the word of God, say that the King of glory will soon be here; and my whole heart says, Amen. "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!"

East Kingston, N. H.

RICHES NOT HAPPINESS.—The late Mr. Girard, of Philadelphia, when surrounded by immense wealth, and supposed to be taking supreme delight in its accumulation, wrote thus to a friend: "As to myself, I live like a galley-slave, constantly occupied, and often passing the night without sleeping. I am wrapt in a labyrinth of affairs and worn out with care. I do not value fortune. The love of labor is my highest emotion. When I rise in the morning, my only effort is to labor so hard during the day, that when night comes, I may be enabled to sleep soundly."

Brief Journal.—No. 3.

Left Chateaugay, N. Y., on the 20th of Aug., to attend Bro. Himes' campmeeting at Perry's Mills, N. Y. There I found friends of former years, and formed new ones. Staid through the meeting, and heard some good preaching from Bro. Himes. Some souls were converted. I am happy to state that Bro. Himes is about to visit the west, and will probably attend our Wisconsin conference.

Preached at the Wilbraham campmeeting on the 26th of Aug., where I greeted many old friends. Found the ground well covered with tents and people. There were eighty-four preachers, and ninety-five tents on the encampment. Several souls were converted, and thirty-one were baptized. Five were ordained to the work of the ministry.

While on the ground, several unknown friends put a dollar into my hands, saying the Lord wanted them to aid me on my journey. God bless them for timely aid, for after a deduction of about $65.00 from my little purse, I could not very strongly object to having it replenished. Elder H. L. Hastings put $10.00 into my hands, which I attempted to refuse, but he informed me that it "came out of the Lord's treasury," so I took it. Now I hope that some good Bro. will make the discovery that his pocket is one department of the Lord's treasury, and refund this money to Bro. Hastings. Several important books were also presented to me by Bro. Hastings, to replenish my library, including that old history,—Herodotus. Two generous Boston sisters presented me "THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA," a book costing about $10.00, containing the original Greek, with six translations of the N. T.; viz: by Wiclif, A. D. 1380; Tyndale, 1534; Cramner, 1539; Geneva, 1557; Rheims, 1582; Authorized, 1611. Poverty had hitherto denied me the ownership of this desirable work. Many thanks to the donors.

On Sunday evening, between four and five hundred sat down to the Lord's table. Thus closed the great campmeeting. During the meeting an effort was made to find some "harvest hands" for the western fields, of the right kind, but no arrangements have yet been perfected, though some encouragment is given. Went from the campmeeting to Sturbridge, Mass., to see my wife's relatives. W. SHELDON.

Not room enough.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—When Bro. Reed was preaching at Greenwood, McHenry Co., in this State, on the resurrection of the dead, a Methodist minister arose and objected, by saying that, if all the dead should stand again upon the earth with corporeal bodies, they would form a compact mass of flesh and blood sixteen feet deep over the entire surface of the earth. To correct this erroneous idea, the following proposition is submitted:—

We will suppose one born every other second, which is thirty every minute; one thousand eight hundred every hour; forty-three thousand, two hundred every day, fifteen millions, seven hundred and seventy-eight thousand, eight hundred born in one year. Multiplying this number by six thousand, it will give ninety-four billions, six hundred and seventy-two millions, eight hundred thousand, who have been born during the six thousand years!

The State of Illinois contains fifty-six thousand square miles. One mile square contains twenty-seven millions, eight hundred and seventy-eight thousand, four hundred square feet. Multiplied by fifty-six thousand, gives us one trillion, five hundred and sixty-one billions, one hundred and ninety millions, four hundred thousand square feet. Divide the above by nine, and we have left seventy-eight billions, seven hundred and ninety-three millions, nine hundred and eleven thousand, one hundred and eleven square yards unoccupied!! So much, then, for the infidel objection to the resurrection of all the dead!

A Parody.—The Better Land.

We sigh for the better land!
Dear Savior, lead us thither!
Clouds in the evening sky more darkly gather,
And shattered wrecks lie thicker on the strand.
Aye, gently lead us by thy hand,
Thither, oh! thither,
Into the better land.

Sweet land! sweet land!
For all the broken-hearted,
Potent to heal the ills to man allotted,
Upon its genial soil we long to stand.
Kind Savior! lead us by thy hand,
Where we may meet the dear departed,
Into the better land!

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps you may deem the following extract from the Portland Transcript worthy a place in the Crisis. I fully adopt the sentiment expressed.

Canada East. M. MATHEWS.

MUSIC IN CHURCHES.—In regard to no part of public worship have more erroneous opinions prevailed than in relation to the singing in praise of God. Many persons have come to regard the singing as a sort of musical entertainment, and listen to it with about as much devotion as they do to the music at an ordinary concert! In fact there has been a rivalry among churches to obtain the best singers in order to outdo each other in the musical performances of the Sabbath. How utterly subversive this system is of all true devotional feeling every reflecting mind must see. Congregational singing is doing much to correct this evil, and should be encouraged for this reason, if for no other. The following remarks by the Musical Review so aptly express the truth upon this subject that we cannot refrain from copying them:

A gentleman who was traveling in Germany made the inquiry in an important place in which he happened to be on the Sabbath, in which church he would be likely to hear the best music. The answer was: "We do not have any music in church. Somewhat surprised, he asked if no hymns were sung. The person inquired of responded in the affirmative, but seemed to have no idea that this was music; it was a religious exercise into which music came incidentally, without doubt, but in such a subordinate place as to be hardly regarded for its own sake. This is the proper idea in Congregational singing. Music is not the object, but devotion. The exercise must not be regarded as musical, but religious. The most rhetorically elegant prayers are not necessarily the best by any means; but, on the contrary, the rhetoric may become a positive hindrance. So with the singing of hymns, that manner which most effectually engages the hearts of the congregation is best, though it may lack musical elegance.

Bad grammar is doubtless a defect in a hymn publicly sung, but as the best prayers are often those which are clothed in the most simple yet earnest and heart-felt language, so the best singing of hymns is that which is the exercise of the truest religious feeling, though it may employ but little musical art.

"War in Earnest."

It seems so to us, truly, although you, Bro. Grant, with many others, no doubt, think we here in Minnesota are out of the sound of the booming of cannon, and of such bloody scenes as are witnessed East and South. But on the contrary we have been within hearing of the guns of Fort Ridgeley, since eight o'clock this morning until half-past eleven in the forenoon. The Sioux Indians have broken out on the inhabitants of the country and the Agencies above us on the Minnesota River, and have attacked the Fort once, but were driven back. They have murdered men, women and children, and cut them to pieces in a most brutal manner. It is said they have killed about three hundred of the inhabitants above New Ulm. There were three wagon loads of dead bodies picked up around New Ulm. It is impossible to tell how many have been killed; some report seven or eight hundred. It is bad enough at best. The people are very much frightened, and have flocked into the towns for safety. The troops from Fort Snelling and volunteers from the country around have gone up to assist them. They commenced their butchery last Monday, the 18th. They took all the Government stores at the Agency, over a thousand kegs of powder, with lead and caps, and have left us in a bad fix for ammunition.

These are perilous times, truly, and I often ask myself, What shall we look for next? I do believe we are coming into that state of things that is to try all men; and shall I be able to stand the test? Shall I be accounted worthy to obtain that world where such scenes as we now witness will never disturb the inhabitants? For this I am striving; for this I pray.

Many thanks to Bro. Grant for sending us the Crisis. It is all the preaching we have. Yours looking for deliverance when Christ shall come. LYDIA MEEKER.

Paying an Old Debt.

A merchant very extensively engaged in commerce, located upon Long Wharf, Boston, died intestate Feb. 18, 1805, at the age of seventy-five. After his death a package of considerable size was found tied up and labeled thus:

"Notes, due bills and accounts against sundry persons along shore. Some of them may be got by suit and severe dunning. But the people are poor; most of them having had the fisherman's luck. My children may do as they think best. Perhaps they may think with me, that it is best to burn the bundle entire."

About a month after he died, the sons met together, when the elder brother, the administrator, produced the packet, read the superscription and asked what course should be taken in regard to it. Another brother, a few years younger than the eldest, a man of impulsive temperament, unable at the moment to express his feelings by words, while he brushed the tears from his eyes with one hand, by a spasmodic jerk of the other towards the fireplace, indicated his wish to have the packet put in the flames. It was suggested by another brother, that it might be well first to make a list of the debtors' names, and of the dates and amounts, that they might be enabled, as the intended discharge was for all such as might offer payment, to say that their debts were forgiven. On the following day they again assembled, and the list had been prepared, and all the notes, due-bills and accounts, the amount of which, including interest, amounted to thirty thousand dollars, were committed to the flames.

It was about four months after our father's death, continued my informant, in the month of June, that as I was sitting in my eldest brother's counting room, waiting for an opportunity to speak with him, there came in a hard favored, little old man, who looked as if time and rough weather had been to windward of him for seventy years. He asked if my brother was not the executor. My brother replied that he was administrator, as my father died intestate.

"Well, said the stranger, "I have come up from the Cape to pay a debt I owed the old gentleman."

My brother requested him to take a seat, being at the desk. The old man sat down and putting on his glasses, drew out a very ancient leather pocket book, and began to count over his money. When he had finished, as he sat waiting his turn, slowly twirling his thumbs, with his old gray, meditative eyes upon the floor, he sighed, and I knew the money, as the phrase runs, came hard, and secretly wished the old man's name might be on the forgiven list. My brother was soon at leisure, and asked him the usual questions, his name, residence, &c. The original debt was four hundred and forty dollars. It had stood a long time, and with the interest, amouted to between seven and eight hundred dollars. My brother went to his desk, and after examining the forgiven list attentively, a sudden smile lit up his countenance, and told me the truth at a single glance. The old man's name was there! My brother quietly took a chair by his side, and a conversation occurred between them which I never shall forget.

"Your note is outlawed," said he; it was dated twelve years ago, payable in two years; there is no witness, and no interest has ever been paid; you are not bound to pay this note, we can never recover this amount."

"Sir," said the old man, "I wish to pay it. It is the only heavy debt that I have in the world. It may be outlawed here, but I have no child, and my old woman and I hope we have made our peace with God, and wish to do so with man. I should like to pay it," and he laid his bank notes before my brother, requesting him to count them over.

"I cannot take the money," said my brother.

The old man became alarmed. "I have cast simple interest for twelve years, and counted it all over, said he. "I will pay you compound interest if you require it. The debt ought to have been paid long ago; but your father was very indulgent—he knew I'd been unlucky, and told me not to worry about it."

My brother then properly set the matter before him, and taking the bank bills returned them to the old man's pocket book, telling him although our father left no formal will, he had recommended to his children to destroy certain notes, due bills, and other evidences of debt, and release those who might be legally bound to pay them.

For a moment the worthy old man appeared to be stupefied. After he had collected himself and wiped the tears from his eyes, he said: "From the time I heard of your father's death I have raked and scraped and pinched and spared, to get money together for the payment of the debt. About ten days ago I made up the sum within twenty-five dollars. My wife knew how much the payment of this debt lay on my spirits, and advised me to sell a cow and make up the difference, and get the heavy burden off my mind. I did so; and now what will my old woman say? I must get back to the Cape and tell her this good news. She'll probably repeat the very words she used when she put her hands on my shoulders as we parted, "I have never seen the righteous forsaken, or his seed begging bread."

Giving each of us a hearty shake of the hand, and a blessing upon our old father's memory, he went on his way rejoicing.

After a short silence, taking his pencil and making a cast—"There," said my brother, "your part of the amount would be so much. Contrive a plan to convey me your share of the pleasure derived from this operation, and the money is at your service."

Such is the simple tale, which I have told as it was told to me. To add the evident moral would be an insult to the reader.—Christian Register.

RENT? WHAT?—What will you rent? Rent your house, your store, your field, your grove, for purposes unhallowed—riot, drunkenness, dissipation, or Sabbath desecration? Dare you do it, friend, for silver or gold, oceans on oceans? God will frown on this iniquity, sure as life, and hold you responsible for all the evil, all the misrule, all the mischief, all the outbreaks, all the rowdyism, all the blasphemies, all the souls lost through your instrumentality.

You have no right whatever to rent, lease, or dispose of a house, hall, lot, hotel, field, grove, or property of any kind, for licentious, intemperate, gambling, or sabbath-breaking purposes. Every farthing gained thus unrighteously, will, by-and-bye, be as fire in your bones! Gold and silver gotten thus is cankered already, and the rust on them "shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire!" Beware, friend, beware how you abuse God's mercies, or suffer others to do do so. Your stewardship will soon be called for. "Be ye not partakeas of other men's sins."

It's money, money! money first, money midst, money last, money always—and "the love of money is the root of all evil."

"Gold banished honor from the mind,
And only left the name behind!
Gold sowed the world with every ill—
Gold taught the murderer's sword to kill!

'Twas gold instructed coward hearts
In treachery's more pernicious arts.
Who can recount the mischiefs o'er?
Virtue resides on earth no more!" N.

KINDNESS TO HORSES.—Almost every wrong act the horse commits is from mismanagement, fear or excitement, says Mr. Rarey; one harsh word will so excite a nervous horse as to increase his pulse ten beats in a minute. When we remember that we are dealing with dumb brutes, and reflect how difficult it must be for them to understand us, or wonder at our doing things wrong. With all our intellect, if we were placed in the horse's situation, it would be difficult for us to understand the driving of some foreigner, of foreign ways and foreign language. We should always recollect that our ways and language are just as foreign and unknown to the horse as any language in the world is to us, and should try to practice what we should understand were we a horse, endeavoring by more simple means to work on his understanding rather than on the different parts of his body.

Pledge OF THE TRY COMPANY.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, HEREBY PLEDGE OURSELVES TO ABSTAIN FROM TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, AND ALL INTOXICATING DRINKS AS A BEVERAGE.

Names to Pledge.

Francis E. Merriam, Nettie L. Piper, Ashburnham, Mass.

Chas. A. Higgins, Frank E. Higgins, Willie E. Higgins, Frederick O. Higgins, Etha E. Higgins, Worcester, Mass.

Alice Williams, Russell, Mass.

☞ Questions and Enigmas have been correctly answered by Francis E. Merriam, E. B., M. A. Nute.

Names to the Pledge from Canada.

DEAR TRY COMPANY:—I am glad to be able to introduce some of my little friends to you. Two of them wish to sign your pledge; the others join you in trying to be good. Two of them have handed me letters to forward to Bro. Grant. Henry says:—

ELD. GRANT:—I would like to join the Try Company. I use neither tea, coffee, or any thing that your pledge prohibits. I am ten years old. I will answer a question I saw in the Crisis. Why is a blackberry red when it is green? Because it is green (unripe) when it is red, and when ripe it is black. HENRY T. FARRELL.

Danville, C. E.

Henry is quite a student; has read many of my books. He visited me last week, and took home my "Josephus' History of the Jews," quite a deep study for a boy only ten years old. I hope he will try and remember all he reads.

Little Eva writes, or prints, the following:—

ELD. GRANT:—I'M LIVING WITH MARIA MATHEWS. I'M EIGHT YEARS OLD. I WON'T DRINK TEA. I WILL TRY TO BE GOOD. MY FATHER IS DEAD.

EVA LEE.

Eva is a fatherless child. Tries to be good. Can read your names, and wants to join your company.

Children, I will tell you how she lost her father. They used to live in a neat white cottage, twelve miles from here, and were happy. But her father never signed a pledge, nor belonged to the Try Company; so he drank intoxicating liquors till his property was gone. At last he fell from a barn, being drunk, broke his neck and died instantly. Eva remembers it all. Now, dear children, I hope you will take her in among you, and give her a good share of your sympathy. My little nephew says:—

"Aunty, I want you to send my name to Eld. Grant, and tell him I want to join the Try Company, for I try to be good. Tell him I am only six years old. When I learn to write I can tell him more."

His name is Kingsey Matthews. Of course it doesn't belong to his "auntie" to praise him in the papers; but he is a good boy, and goes to school. I think he will do credit to your company.

AUNT MARIA.

Angry Words.

Poison-drops of care and sorrow,
Bitter poison-drops are they,
Weaving for the coming morrow
Sad memorials of to-day.

Angry words! O, let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip;
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them ere they soil the lip.

Try and Can't.

Try and Can't, they were young long ago,
Indeed, it was ere I was born;
Together they started to school, being twins,
And their parents hoped they might learn.

Now Try learned to read, to spell and to write,
And stood at the head of his class;
But Can't, he was found at the foot morn and night,
And never seemed happy, alas!

One day the kind teacher grew weary of Can't,
And ordered him out of her school,
But Try long remained, and a wise man become,
While Can't is almost a fool.

Now Can't watches boys as they go to their schools,
And whispers "Don't try" every day;
But, children, I hope you will imitate Try,
And frighten the dunce, Can't, away.

Canada East. MARIA.

Innocence.

What is innocence? It is freedom from any quality that can injure; harmlessness. In a moral sense, freedom from crime, sin, or guilt; untainted purity of heart or life. Who then is innocent? Can you say, my young reader, that you are innocent? Are you harmless? Are you free from guilt? We ought to be innocent in this respect. Do you say that you are innocent? that you do no harm? Think again.

Do you not sometimes do things that you know your father and mother do not want you to do? If so, you are not innocent. But do you say you never do such things when they see you? or when you think they will find it out? Then you deceive your parents; they think you are innocent when you are not. Moreover, when you do things that you know are contrary to their will, thinking they will not find it out, you feel guilty, and often suffer in mind, fearing they will learn that you have committed this crime.

The most beautiful flower that ever bloomed on earth is an innocent child. Every body loves such a little boy or girl; the angels love them. Then try to be innocent: that is, try to do right always, and never do wrong; then you will be innocent.

My Happy Vision.

BY S. S. BREWER.

I had a dream, a happy dream;
I dreamed the Lord had come,
And in that city, bright and fair,
He gave to me a home.
Mine eyes were ravished with the sight—
'Twas glorious to behold—
Of happy millions, clothed in white,
Upon those streets of gold.

Within those walls surpassing bright,
The sun did never shine;
The Lord himself did give them light,
'Twas heavenly and divine.
And, O! the sounds, when they did raise
Their anthem to their King;
It was perfection's sweetest praise,
Which saints ere long shall sing.

I walked amid fair Eden's bowers,
What beauties did appear!
There bloomed undying fragrant flowers;
The birds sang sweetly there.
I strayed beside life's crystal stream,
And viewed life's healing tree,
And all was heavenly and serene,
I hope there soon to be.

I trod upon fair Zion's height,
New beauties did arise;
Magnificent, with glory bright,
Were the new earth and skies.
O, when that happy day shall come
That brings God's saints to see,
And gives them that eternal home,
An heir, Lord, let me be!

Watchman, what of the Night?

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Eighteen hundred years ago our Lord when on earth prophesied that among other notable events which should occur as harbingers of his second coming, "the sun should be darkened." Has this sign taken place, or not? We still think it has, and here present the following facts in regard to it:

1. It had not occurred in A. D. 600.

The period from A. D. 533 to 606 was marked by the rise of the Papacy. The most astonishing events took place in heaven and earth. The East was filled with terror and blood, the West with anarchy and confusion. In 527 the notorious Justinian became emperor, and his reign of thirty-eight years was an awful era. He reigned over 64 provinces and 935 cities. He defended the Papal power with the sword. "Never," says Dupin, "did prince meddle so much with what concerns the affairs of the church." He issued an edict commanding but one faith in all the world. He pronounced the Pope the "First of all the Priesthood." In 533 he styled Pope John "the Head of all the holy churches," and "Head of all Bishops." He put into the papal hands the entire ecclesiastical destiny, so that Vigillius was in 538, says Bowers, "owned as lawful Pope by the Fifth General Council and the whole Christian world." In 540, says Gosselyn, he enacted "that all governors shall take oath that they are in communion with the Catholic Church and that they will never do anything against her." All heretics and schismatics were to be killed. Thus the dragon gave the beast "his seat and power and great authority." Rev. 13: 2. The "saints were given into his hand" for more than a millennium of sorrow and bondage. God's indignation begloomed the heavens and shook the earth! In 521 a fierce comet was seen for twenty days, and as an omen of dark times ahead "during a whole year the sun gave a glowering light like the moon and appeared as if eclipsed." In 539 a terrible famine raged in all Italy. Another comet was seen covering the heavens for forty days. "The nations who gazed with astonishment," says Gibbon, "expected wars and calamities from their baleful influence, and these expectations were abundantly fulfilled." Bede says the sun in 538 was "eclipsed from early morning till 9 in the morning." Earthquakes shook the Roman ground "every year." "This fever of the earth," says Gibbon, "raged with uncommon violence during the reign of Justinian." Till the year 565 his reign was thus signalized. Constantinople was shaken forty days, and the shock, corresponding with the dire moral change on its surface, "shook the whole globe." Antioch perished, with 250,000 or 300,000 souls. The earth sighed and shuddered while the whole world was being delivered up to the great antichrist. To crown the fearful catastrophe of the century, a deadly pestilence broke forth in 542 which lasted fifty-two years and swept away one hundred millions of the human race! Fit accompaniments to the great apostasy—fit prelude to the "midnight of the world" that was to follow—fit omens of "the great tribulation" for more than a thousand years. Luke 21: 11 was fulfilled to the letter, and there were "great earthquakes in divers places, and famines, and pestilences, and fearful sights, and great signs from heaven," so that all men, even Popes, said the end was coming.

Pope Gregory, in 590–604, said the last judgment was at the door—the world within a finger's breadth of its ruin—and sent letters of warning into all the world. Enumerating the signs already passing, he speaks of "pestilences without cessation," "fiery armies battling in the sky," "sudden whirlwinds," "changes of the air, terrific appearances in the sky, unseasonable tempests, wars, famines, earthquakes, debilitating fevers," etc., the world, he says, being "in its old age," and "antichrist and the last day at hand"! How strikingly does he record the fulfillment of our Lord's words! Five hundred years had passed since they were foretold, the most alarming and strange phenomena had been witnessed. But does he record the darkened sun, moon, and falling stars? Nay, but writes these remarkable words, after quoting Luke 21 at length—"Signs, indeed, in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, we have not yet beheld"!

So testified, about the year 600, the greatest of the Popes, who, judging from his general intelligence and commanding position, must have known if the sun had been darkened or that any such universal belief then prevailed.

2. It had not been darkened in A. D 1517–46.

The ages of darkness were passing. Martin Luther now lived, and his strong and heaven-helped hand was pushing aside the Papal shadows. "The true church now knew," says Ebenezer Eliot, "where she stood in the world's history." The great Reformers studied the prophecies and noted the transit of all predicted events. John Fox said Christ would come at the seventh trumpet's sounding. Latimer and Melancthon said he would come when the 6000 years were ended. Luther's final thought was, that only three centuries of toil and sorrow intervened. So they all said it was coming—but not just yet. We are still in the great tribulation, was the sentiment of the whole body of Continental and Anglican reformers when they looked out upon Pope and Turk. Martin Luther from Luke 21: 25 preached and printed "A sermon of consolation on the coming of Christ and the signs that shall precede the last day." In it he says, "Christ plainly tells of the particular signs which shall be in that latter time." He says, "If I shall see the sun and moon to be darkened, etc., I will say, Glory be to God"! He calls Christ's day "golden times," and these celestial signs that would herald it the "war-engines of God," at which the wicked would quake and tremble, but the good rejoice. "Let then the sun and the moon and all creatures wear an awful aspect, and threaten terror;—their sight shall be terrible to the world, but not to us. Upon us shall they sweetly smile." "For as to myself," he exclaims, "unless that day should at last come, I should wish I had never been born." So he writes, but not once does he hint that these signs were in the past or had occurred in his day, but still locates them in the future—not very distant. No dark day had been experienced calling the marked attention of the great reformers, for the great tribulation was not yet ended. Matt. 24: 29.

George Benson, of England, less than 200 years later, in a sermon on Hosea 7: 7–12, referred to many who had vainly fixed upon years between 1688 and 1700 for Christ's coming, and while he too wrote—"You see many of the forerunners of the end have already run their race," he also affirmed that "when the sun will be darkened, and the moon turned to blood, we cannot tell,"—all proving the darkened sun yet in the future. It was at hand; for in or about the year 1700, the general persecutions of the church by the Papal power had ceased, and the solar sign was to come "immediately after" it.

3. It had been darkened by the year 1790.

Dr. Noah Webster mentions a most extraordinary darkness at noon January 12th, 1678; a darkness in America October 21st, 1716, so great that people used lighted candles in the daytime; a remarkable dark day August 9th, 1732; a strange and unaccountable darkness at Detroit October 19th, 1762, for a whole day; an uncommon darkness in Canada October 9th, 1785; a great darkness all over Kentucky October 29th, 1789. And the "Universal History" describes another gloomy darkness that spread over all of Persia at some time during the 18th century, so great for ten days that king and people were frightened; but it was reserved for May, 1780, to exhibit one of the most singular and as yet unaccountable dark days in New England that is on record. It was the dark day pre-eminent above all others, and had there been fifty others during the "great tribulation, it would not have destroyed this one which occurred after it from being the sign. Before me is an old almanac for 1787, and opposite May 19th are the words our fathers recorded for more than half a century till the scoffers came—"Remarkable dark day, 1780." Under my hand are about forty printed testimonies, of which more than half that number were eye-witnesses, who saw and recorded that wonderful darkness. They call it "a very terrific dark day"—"darkness overshadowed the earth"—"profoundest darkness"—"unusual and extraordinary"—"singular darkness"—"uncommon and terrifying"—"strange appearance"—"palpably thick gloom," etc., etc., and the night that followed is by them described as being perfectly awful in the intensity of its bewildering darkness. The Newport (R. I.) Herald said, "It is not recollected from history that a darkness of equal intenseness and duration has ever happened in any part of the world except the miraculous eclipse at the crucifixion of our blessed Savior." Such was the testimony of all who saw it, as the world knows.

4. What Christians then thought about it.

In the town where that holy man Edward Lee lived, all thought the last day had come or was approaching. The Legislature of Connecticut in session at Hartford was also similarly impressed. Mrs. Abigail Bayley says it was so believed in Newburyport. A writer in the Massachusetts Spy, 1780, stated to Isaiah Thomas that it was by many regarded as fulfilling Matt. 24: 29. The Independent Chronicle of Boston hoped the wicked would take warning and "prepare for that solemn day." S. Stearns, the philosopher, said it was God's doings and a token of his approaching wrath. Rev. Elam Potter, of Enfield, Ct., affirmed it was "one of the prodigies foretold in Matt. 24: 29," a sign of the Lord's advent. Rev. A. Farmer thought it was "the Lord's doings and marvelous in our eyes." Hon Wheeler Martin says the christian gentleman at whose house he was stopping solemnly read Joel 2: 28–32 to his assembled family by candle light, thinking it then strikingly accomplished. So testify the old poems made on that memorable occasion. All christian men whose testimony we have seen and heard agreed in thinking it the fulfillment of our Lord's great prophecy, "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light," and consequently a sign of the near advent of Jesus Christ. Five years afterward the Rev. Dr. Tenney affirmed of the strange darkness, "No satisfactory solution has yet appeared." Nor has any been given up to the time I write, save that it was the fulfillment of a "thus saith the Lord,"—a sign of Jesus' coming.

5. What christians believed afterwards.

Long years after that dark day there was still the solemn and abiding impression on the mind of the Christian church in New England, that May 19th, 1780, fulfilled the predicted darkening of the sun and moon. Said Rev. Joshua Spalding, in lectures in Salem, Mass., in 1798: "Can it be doubted that the signs in nature—in the heavens and in the earth—have for some time been appearing? We have seen the appearance in the heavens of 'blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke.' Joel 2. We have seen wonderful and alarming phenomena of darkness in the sun and moon." And he proceeds to mention all the other celestial signs save the falling stars. This sign was yet future. Twelve years later, in the year 1808, in a sermon on the signs, published in the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Sept. 15, after showing that the signs in the sun and moon were fulfilled in 1780, as Adventists now generally believe, the author says on the signs in the stars: "Whether there have been any particular signs in the stars, I am not able to determine; but while there are so many other signs, we may expect them soon." Unnoticed or perhaps unknown to this servant of God, a great shower of stars had fallen Nov. 12th, 1799, over thousands of miles of the earth's surface, the first of the two greatest showers ever seen by mortal eyes. I need not stop to speak at length of the meteoric shower of Nov. 13th, 1833, observed by thousands now living, and pronounced by Professor Olmstead of Yale College the "grandest display of fiery meteors recorded in the pages of history"—"the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been seen since the creation of the world." The event is now history, and I do not believe that a quarter of a million of people will ever spend another sleepless night to see the stars fall as a sign of Christ's coming. As for the other signs my readers have all felt, seen, and heard them. Do you "discern the signs of the times"?

6. And what then?

Coming down from sun, moon and stars, I read that the last signs are witnessed among the nations. "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, prepare war." Joel 3: 9. "There shall be a time of trouble" among the nations. Dan. 12: 1. "Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity." Lu. 21: 25. "And the nations were angry." Rev. 11: 18. Great national perplexities, national wars and preparations for war, national anger, and national trouble are among the latest harbingers of His coming. Have we seen these? Do we still witness them? Is there any sign unaccomplished? Seven hundred ministers in America proclaim the Lord at hand. Are they right in doing so? Is he coming? Do you believe it? Can it be true that the judgment is so near? Am I ready? Are we any of us more than half awake?

"A Cup of Cold Water."

MATT. 10: 42.

We deem this a trifling benefaction, because it is usually given without labor, at the cost of no self-sacrifice. It is one of our common blessings—free as the air we breathe; yet all of us have at times appreciated the luxury of "cold water to a thirsty soul." Some may, by long deprivation, have experienced its priceless value. Christ would teach us in this connection that it is the motive, not the gift, that meets his approval. A cup of cold water bestowed by the most despised of Christ's followers from love to him, will be considered by the "Searcher of hearts" as though done to himself, and placed in his category with the "widow's mite."

Let us try and enumerate some of the ways in which we may give an equivalent in our every day life; countless opportunities are around us; alas! how often do we neglect them. A humble lot, a narrow sphere, need not exclude us from this means of doing good. A smile, a word of encouragement, a book lent, a tract or paper given, even an "unspoken prayer," may prove as refreshing as a "cup of cold water." The heart of the christian naturally turns in love and sympathy to all who are looking for that blessed hope, "the speedy coming of Christ's kingdom." Ofttimes are the hearts of this "little flock" mutually refreshed by communion with those who bear this image, yet He who came to seek and save the lost, teaches by example and precept that we are not to confine our deeds of love to the "household of faith." "A cup of cold water" may be the means of arresting the downward course of the outcast and the erring, and adding another to the number of those over whom angels rejoice.

A cup of cold water a child may bestow,
Then seek we while time lasts this blessing to know,
In no wise, says our Savior, they lose a reward
Who do "what they can in the name of the Lord."

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

This second death, the delivery up to the everlasting fire, is not as much a positive punishment, as it is the final accomplishment of that wages of sin, death. As sin frustrates the design of mankind, so death is the opposite of that state into which mankind was to be placed; namely, of a happy life in communion with God. The second death is the end, the last step in the great process of death; the full and entire negation of life in mankind, in consequence of which the same can no longer be either nature, or personal revelation of God. Here two different ideas present themselves to us, both of which have a right to be taken into consideration. The one sees in the death of the soul, as she has nothing left in heaven or on earth to which she can cling, her annihilation, the entire ceasing of her existence; the other thinks that the soul in this state suffers through all eternity with consciousness the pain of a never ending destruction. The latter is undoubtedly the doctrine of the church and the general opinion of the christian community, but at the same time that at which many have become opposers to the church of Christ. (So writes F. Oberthuer, Bibl. Anthrop. I, 205.: "So that I remember to have read the confession of a certain Dietrich Camphus, that he had been on the point to give up all religion, when at once he met with books which denied the eternity of hell torment.")

This, (eternal torment) as we have seen that the spiritual soul is not indestructible, not immortal, could only be accomplished by God (in order to increase the punishment) in his holy wrath, preserving the soul forever with the purpose that she might feel in this state the pain forever and ever. But this we must contradict. Positive punishment cannot come into any account here. To man was given the end and the free will to frustrate that end. Where he did this, then he was forfeited to death, and this as the consequence and wages of sin would on the field of but human operation, without divine grace, work itself out to a total frustration, not only of the design of mankind, but of mankind itself, as a complete failure cannot be thought eternal. As every thing can only exist as a life-revelation of God, as every creature ceases to be where it is no more life-revelation of God, where it is no more an organ for the breath of God, it is an inconceivable thought to see a continuance there, where all possibility to be an organ for God is entirely cut off. But where God is all in all, where sin and death are no more, but themselves destroyed forever, there is no place for beings that have no connection with God, and can nowhere find any thing to which they might possibly cling, else there would somewhere be a place in existence where God was not; for the thought he revealed himself there as the pure negation, the consuming holy fire, includes already the other, that he produced an entire negation of life. But without life there is a conscious, individual existence impossible, as each is originated only by imparting of life. . . .

That man was created free, was the will of God, and so of their consequences. God cannot create free beings, and at the same time make it impossible for them, by frustrating their design, to live themselves out. At least, those to whom the doctrine of the eternal existence of ungodly beings in a state of torment may not appear to contradict the wisdom of God and the perfection of the world, have certainly no right to see in the annihilation of the wicked such a contradiction.

Long Prayers, Long Sermons, and Long Articles.

1st. Long prayers around the family altar soon awaken, in the minds of children, a disrelish for family worship, and gradually they relax into the practice of finding some excuse to absent themselves at the hour of devotion, to get rid of hearing the "long lurry." Long prayers in the prayer meeting inspire a spirit of aversion to having Bro. A. or Bro. B. begin to pray, for it is known that "he is in for a long pull," and a unanimous mental "wish he knew when to stop," pervaded the meeting, and tends to paralyze the interest. Long prayers prior to preaching are tedious, nay, almost wicked, as they unfit the mind to appreciate the sermon, having been already overtaxed by listening to that "long Pharisaical yarn." I know of but one place for long prayers, that is in the closet! There they are seldom too frequent, or too long.

2nd. Long sermons are generally uncalled for, and unprofitable after the first forty minutes. To listen afterwards is like continuing to eat after the stomach is overloaded. Deal out a proper amount of good mental and moral food, and then let people have time to digest it; not stuff them till they suffer with theological colic, and get "cloyed." It is better in a mental or physical point, to leave of eating before appetite becomes totally extinct. Long sermons are not only detrimental to the cause which they should advance, but they are suicidal to the preacher, both in a spiritual and physical view. They sap the energy of the preacher, and perhaps his next sermon will be dry as the East wind, minus of zeal, and cold as an autumn evening; whereas, if the first sermon had been short, the second would have been spirited. I speak from experience. Besides, the preacher is soon laid upon the shelf, and not able to preach at all. Long sermons are more exempt from censure when we go into new fields; but even then it is far better, generally, to preach less than an hour.

3d. Long articles. What are they written for? To be read? Well, seeing they are not read, as a general thing, why not write shorter? Give us the milk, without the water, even if it does come in a smaller dish. We want the genuine article, undiluted. Enough has already been said upon this point, and I wish only to refresh your minds with the fact that usually short articles are eagerly read, while the very sight of a long one gives rise to a feeling of regret. Publish books in book form, not through the Crisis, unless given in pieces,—not long, but short ones.

Look Over.

Dear child of my heavenly Father; what is thy situation to-day? Are you in prosperity? Have you plenty of this world's goods? Do friends surround thee, cheering thy heart with pleasant words and kind deeds? and are you living in the enjoyment of health and strength? If so, depend upon it, God requires much from you. But what can you do? Ah! my friend, there is plenty for you to do. God expects you to reach out the helping hand to those in adversity—to be a friend to the poor, and a messenger of consolation to the sorrowing, the sick, the suffering and dying. Go forth then to thy labor, for you have but a short time to work.

Are you drinking the waters of affliction? Have friends been laid away to sleep till Jesus comes? are you sick and sorrowful, and is your name cast out as evil? Do friends forsake and foes deride? are you accused unjustly, and do you receive hard words and cruel taunts, from those who should be your best friends? Then for you, dear friend, I have a word of cheer to-day. Come, lay aside your cares, and receive a message from one who can sympathize with you in all these sorrows, and who knows full well how the heart can throb with anguish, and the whole soul quiver in the agony of intense grief.

A friend said to me not long since, "you don't have any thing to trouble you at all, do you? I made this reply:—The only way for me to live in this world, is to look over on the other side.

That is the way, dear afflicted friend, look over; continually look over on the other side, into the sweet fields of Eden. There is glory there which will soon make you forget the dark clouds that surround you, and cause you to rejoice in God your Savior. Do you say it is too far, that your eyesight is dim, that darkness surrounds you, and you cannot see so great a distance? Ah! my friend, you are mistaken. Pray for an increase of faith,—take the Bible for your telescope—look earnestly, and you will soon see that it is near; the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Lo! thy King cometh in majesty and beauty, to wipe away thy tears, and to give thee an inheritance that is incorruptible, and that fadeth not away. Where did the prophets of old look, while they were suffering hatred, persecution, imprisonment, and bonds? and what did they see that caused them to strike their harps to such lofty strains? Some tell us it was Christ's first advent. True, they saw that,—wrote of it; but was it that which awoke their loudest songs of triumph? No, no! They wrote and sung of the first mission of the Savior to earth; but there was a note of sadness in the strain, as well as of gratitude and humility. Isaiah says chap. 53d, "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief:" "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." "He was taken from prison and from judgment;" "he was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgression of my people was he stricken." But the prophet turned from this sad picture of the sufferings and death of the Savior, and looked onward, to learn what should be the end of this great panorama, thus spread out before him. The apostles, their labors and sufferings,—the trials of the church, her persecutions and her martyrs—the perils of these last days, and the falling away of the church, all passed in review; and still he looked! Soon to his far-seeing, steadfast gaze, there appeared a scene so sublime, so glorious, that he broke forth into a song of holy triumph, that was to resound throughout the world, and cheer christians on their way ages after the prophet should have slumbered in the dust. But what was it that he saw? Why he saw that same Jesus who was reviled "and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief;" he saw Him coming; not as a sacrifice for the sins of the world; but as a Conqueror, a King, arrayed in all the glory of the Father, to take possession of his kingdom, to subdue his enemies, and to bring forth from their dusty beds all his sleeping ones. No wonder the prophets rejoiced when they caught a view of that day. They knew that when Christ come the first time, they should be sleeping in their graves. But when he should come the second time, they knew that they should stand in their lot and place. And Job, in the very furnace of affliction could exclaim, "Though . . . . worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God. Whom I shall see for myself, . . . and not another." Even Enoch from beyond the flood, caught sight of that day and exclaimed, "The Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints."

Then, my friend, if those prophets could look over thousands of years and rejoice in that day, can you not forget your troubles, and look over the few remaining days, and rejoice that your redemption draweth nigh? Wake up! examine the Bible; look at the signs of the times, and lift up your head and rejoice, for "the great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly." Soon our friends will cease to be called upon to enter the battle field, the cannon will cease to roar, and the peaceful kingdom of our Lord will be established throughout the whole earth. Lord, help us to be prepared to enter into that blessed kingdom, to go no more out forever.

Norway, Me. B. P. FRENCH.

Proverbs.

1. Begin nothing of which you have not well considered the end. Never stand considering and let the time for action pass.
2. Do nothing to-day that may well be put off till the morrow. Put not off till the morrow what ought to be done to-day.
3. Honesty is the best policy. Be honest to self, family, and to all others.
4. Charity begins at home: yes, quite too often.
5. Never speak evil of one behind his back: it would be impudent to do so to his face.
6. Be courteous to all: flatter none. He is wise that minds his own business.
7. There is reason in all things. But many things are very unreasonable.
8. If you want a thing done, send: if you intend to have it done, go yourself. If you are not capable of doing your own business, employ some one who is.
9. The covetousness of the miser, and the prodigality of the spendthrift, are both alike contemptible.
10. Industy, Economy, and Charity are sisters by whom the mother never suffers loss.
11. Improvements are great things: but beware of misimprovements.
12. Owe no man anything: let no man owe you anything. "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away."
13. Keep out of bad company. And see that you never are bad company.
14. Speak nothing but the truth: but the truth is not to be spoken at all times.
15. Money is very convenient: but "the love of money is the root of all evil." Too much money leads to trouble and temptation: too little, to dependence.
16. When you bargain, make a whole bargain.
17. "Get wisdom, and with all thy getting get understanding." Cunning is a poor low counterfeit of wisdom: a base coin.
18. The Lord said, Do unto others as you would have others do to you. The Devil said, Do unto others as others do to you.
19. That which is done in a hurry is illy done. ALWAY BUSY, NEVER IN A HURRY. Let your moderation be known unto all men.
20. As a butchered pig, so mis-spent pennies are—dead. But money well spent is like corn hid in the earth, which bringeth forth fruit an hundred fold.
21. Some steal for a living, and die for stealing.
22. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you."
23. The good will of a dog is better than his ill will: but never sacrifice principle to the will of any.

A short method with an Infidel.

The Christian Index gives an incident which illustrates the value of christian consistency in particular on all occasions. The writer of the anecdote was one of several gentlemen—among them, a lawyer and an editor of some note—who was quartered for a night in the same room at a country tavern. Before retiring to rest the editor introduced a dispute on the subject of religion, by avowing his disbelief in and contempt for its doctrines. He indulged in a lengthened display of his bitterness and folly, but with an occasional reply from the lawyer, until the latter commenced preparations for rest, by withdrawing quietly to his bed-side and kneeling in prayer. An instant hush fell on the scene. An audible rebuke from heaven could scarcely, it seemed, have interrupted the current of blasphemy with more surprise and awe. Little was said further; but the retiring of that company of travelers was a season long to be remembered by every one of them.

☞ Three things principally determine the quality of a man—the leading object which he proposes to himself in life, the manner in which he sets about accomplishing it, and the effect which success or failure has upon him.

Corinna Campmeeting.

Tuesday evening, Sept. 9th, we left Boston on the Steamer Eastern Queen, for Augusta, Me. A horse fell overboard about the time the boat was to start, which produced some excitement and delay, but he was finally rescued, and we took our departure, on a calm sea, in a beautiful moonlight evening, arriving off Casco Bay, when the sun was just rising out of the deep, sending forth its rays to cheer with its morning light. We soon entered the Kennebec, and had a delightful time sailing up this noble river to Augusta, passing en route the pleasant villages of Bath, Gardiner, Richmond and Hallowell. When at Gardiner, we saw a company on the opposite bank, assembled, as we learned, for the purpose of drafting for the army. It seems hard to have men dragged away from their homes and families and compelled to go and kill their fellow men, when they believe it to be forbidden by the teachings of Christ.

We arrived at Augusta about noon, where we met Bro. Wight, with whom we had a pleasant interview. At four P. M. we left A. for Newport, which was about six miles from the camp-ground. At N. we were met by Bro. Smith who took us to Corrinna, where we found a true pilgrims home at Bro. Benjamin Moore's. Here we met Bro. and Sr. I. Damman and other dear Brn. and Srs., with whom we had a very pleasant interview. We learned that the campmeeting was progressing favorably, and that there was a large gathering of the saints of the Lord.

Thursday, Sept. 11th, we went to the camp-ground, a distance of about two miles from Bro. Moore's, where we found fourteen tents well filled with living christians, who love the appearing of Jesus. Four tents were erected afterward. Their tents were the most convenient I ever saw. The brethren showed that they had had considerable experience in campmeeting life. When we arrived upon the ground, we found the people engaged in a general prayer meeting in front of the stand. It was cheering to hear the soul-stirring exhortations and prayers. It was soon apparent that those engaged in the meeting were not of the class who are satisfied with mere surface work. We have rarely seen a body of more earnest, devoted, and self-sacrificing christians than we found at the Corinna campmeeting. It reminded one of the glorious seasons enjoyed some nineteen years ago. Many of our readers will understand this remark. They appeared just as we should think all true christians would—dead to this world, willing to do any thing that would please Jesus. On this account, it might be truly said by a careful observer, "See how they love one another." They acted like men who had counted the cost, and were willing to pay the price, however much it might be, even to the sacrifice of life. So far as we could learn, every one was opposed to the use of carnal weapons, determined to die before they would kill their fellow men.

We found many of them possessed of strong faith and deep experience. In time past they had been through many sore trials, in which they had learned to trust wholly in the Lord, and not in the opinions of changeable, and fallible men. Like all other christians, they are ardent lovers of truth, ever ready to buy it, but never ready to sell. Their religion is a reality, exhibiting itself in all their intercourse with their fellow men. It is the common subject in all their social intercourse,—first in the morning, and last at night. They talk about it, because they love the theme. We found them very joyful in the Lord, and in the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus. They are without doubts that the Savior is soon coming. With them this is no speculative theory. Every beholder must have been satisfied that they longed for the day to come.

Thursday forenoon, Bro. Wm. Ingham, of Nova Scotia, preached a good sermon on practical religion. In the afternoon, Bro. Geo. W. Brown made some excellent remarks on the subject of war, showing that the entire New Testament is opposed to the doctrine that it is right for christians to fight. He also endeavored to show that none but the righteous will rise from the dead. In the evening, Bro. R. R. York, of Yarmouth, Me, entertained us with an excellent sermon on the "good fight," in which the children of the Lord are engaged, contrasting it with the bloody battles of these last days, making the point very clear that no christian is justified in using carnal weapons. Bro. A. Ross followed with interesting remarks, sustaining the position of Bro. Y.

Friday, A. M. Bro. Ross gave us an able exposition of the tenth chapter of Revelation, throwing much light on that interesting prophecy, and showing that the last part of it is now being fulfilled. In the afternoon, preaching by the editor, on practical religion. In the evening, by Bro. [illegible] ordained for the work of the ministry. He bids fair to be a useful man. We would urge our Brn. to encourage the young preachers; for they have plenty of discouragements, without receiving any from the churches. Help them in every possible way. They need your kindest sympathies.

Saturday, A. M. Bro. J. G. Smith preached in the morning, on "the faith once delivered to the saints," showing how the Lord answered their prayers in raising the sick to health, casting out demons, and in various other ways; arguing from the past, that the church is not living up to its privileges. The subject was one of interest, and well handled. Bro. Ross preached a stirring and solemn discourse in the afternoon, showing that "the end of all things is at hand." The truth presented rested with weight on many minds, causing them to seek the Lord. Preaching in the evening by Bro. G. W. Brown, on experimental religion. The prayer meetings were very interesting, and quite a number have been converted, and several backsliders reclaimed. Truly the Spirit of the Lord was in our midst. Much good has been accomplished.

Sunday, 14th. The weather is pleasant. At 8 o'clock Bro. J. Billings baptized eight happy souls, who received rich blessings from the Lord. At the hour for preaching a very large audience was assembled, estimated at five thousand. Preaching in the morning, on the resurrection of the dead, by the editor, and in the afternoon, on the signs of the times. The large concourse of people was distinguished for excellent attention and behavior. We have rarely seen as good. The people appeared to be convinced that our belief is in harmony with the Bible. Ministers from other denominations were present; one of whom came to us and expressed his satisfaction relative to our position. It is not common to see a congregation so anxious to know the truth. We find an increasing interest in every direction to hear on the truths which are considered peculiar to us as a people. Men are satisfied that some great event is at hand. The time appears to have come when men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth. They look and feel sober about the matter. An awful foreboding is upon their minds. Let no opportunity be lost for giving them all the light we can possibly bestow; and in order to be successful, we must live right before them.

In the evening, we had an interesting discourse from Bro. J. G. Smith, on the standing up of Michael. He gave clear evidence that earth's closing drama is just at hand. After the sermon, several were blessed and resolved to serve the Lord. It was thought about thirty were converted during the meeting. We heard it frequently remarked, that it was the best campmeeting that has been held in Maine for several years.

We are glad we had the privilege of attending this meeting, and becoming acquainted with so many dear saints, whom we soon expect to meet in the coming kingdom. There is no friendship so dear as that among christians; and no love so strong as that which is felt by the disciples of Jesus. We long for the time to arrive when we shall meet them all in the paradise of God. We parted in hope of meeting soon in our happy Eden home.

Perils Multiply.

Almost every day brings news of greater perils at hand; as Paul said it would be "in the last days," so it is,—"evil men and seducers wax worse and worse" The progress is now so rapid, it is apparent to all, and but few are so blind as to deny the fact. It is becoming a solemn and serious question with many worldly men, "What do these things mean?" A New York correspondent of the Boston Journal, Sept. 2d., when speaking of the state of things in that city says:—

"Our immediate danger here is a divided people and civil war. Any moment here a breach of the peace could have been created. The attack on Gen. McClellan in the Tribune inflamed both friends and foes. Angry men met and discussed the war news, and only a spark was needed to bring out a general conflagration. Men are taking sides as they have not since the war, and it will take but little to bring them in collision and make our streets run with blood."

The following is from the Herald of Gospel Liberty:—

"Through what a fiery ordeal our country is now passing! And, perchance, we have not yet felt its fiercest, most scathing heat, for no mortal can foresee the end. Clouds and thick darkness shut out the future alike from human ken and angels' penetrating glance. We walk fearfully, gropingly; uncertain that the next step will not plunge us into the yawning abyss. Careworn faces crowd our thoroughfares. Men seize the daily papers with trembling hands, and glance them over in nervous haste. A change has come over our national temper and spirit. A few months have done the work of an ordinary century. It has been well said, 'There is no Young America now.' In place thereof is seen age with its whitened locks, its wrinkles, its bowed form. Sorrow has flung her dark pall over our whole land. Mirth and festivity are now unseemly and ill-timed. Song, laugh and jest grate harshly upon the ear of him who is 'heavy of heart.'" ☞ Bro. and Sr. Mansfield's appointment for Warren Co., Ill., is withdrawn till further notice.

Now, or Never.

Twenty-four men are wanted immediately to fill up the Zion's Herald Company. The company now consists of twenty-seven men most of them church members, and a large majority Methodists. Six are ministers of the gospel; viz., Rev. E. B. Hinckley, of Hingham; Rev. J. N. Collier, of Scituate; Rev. A. N. Fields, of Bernardston; Rev. J. Emery, Capt., of Auburndale; Rev. Otis E. Thayer, of Mendon, and Rev. W. D. Wheedon, of Braintree. The two latter are local preachers, and the other four have resigned their pastoral charges to join the ranks. All who desire to go to war for nine months with such associations should send in their names without a moment's delay.—Zion's Herald.

The above is from Zion's Herald, of Sept. 10th. It needs no comments. We prefer Jesus for our Captain, who commands us to return good for evil, blessing for cursing, and kindness to all our enemies, that we "may be the children of" our "Father which is in heaven."

THIRD ANNUAL MEETING
Of the Advent Christian Association.

Wilbraham Grove, August 26th, 1862.

4 o'clock, P. M. The Association met in accordance with the call of the Board. The meeting was called to order by the President, D. T. Taylor, and opened with prayer by Eld. S. S. Brewer.

Brn. S. Hovey, H. K. Flagg and I. C. Wellcome were appointed a committee on credentials to receive the names of those entitled to membership in this Association.

Voted, That those who preach only occasionally, yet co-operate with this Society, be considered members.

While the committee on credentials were preparing their report, some inquiries were made concerning the relation sustained by this Association to the C. P. ## Report of the President of the C. P. S.

Delivered at the meeting of the A. C. A., Wilbraham, Mass., Aug. 27th, 1862.

I have no written report to make; but, as President of the Society, I can give a glance at the state of affairs, and refer you to the Report of our Secretary for an account of all our proceedings, and to the Report of the Treasurer for an account of the financial condition of the Society. I am happy to speak of the past portion of a year as being a period of considerable prosperity, notwithstanding the discouragements and financial difficulties throughout the country. The conduct of the World's Crisis I need not say much about, further than to say that, financially, it was never so prosperous, since it was a subscription paper, as during the present year; and probably your Treasurer's Report will indicate that fact satisfactorily.

As it regards the publication of books and tracts, something has been done. I feel, as I have felt from the beginning, a decided objection to holding the position I hold as President of the Society, while at the same time engaged as a Publishing Society myself (my hope to be relieved from the labor by the action of the Society not having been realized as yet); for I have had to do my work, and that which belonged to the Publication Society also; but still something has been done.

The Society has purchased or issued, within the past year, some 50,000 distinct tracts or books of various sizes. It has collected by voluntary subscriptions some $500, and has perhaps $100 more pledged, which can be paid on demand. A quantity of books and tracts have been distributed in various quarters, according to the discretion of the Board of Directors, or of the Publication Committee,—Agent, Treasurer and President; and the general gladness with which these issues have been hailed by those who have received them, encourages those interested in the matter to press forward in the same direction. Calls for these publications come in constantly, and many more doubtless would come in, if more attention was called to the matter in the columns of the Crisis. For my own part, want of time has hindered me from saying much about it. On the whole, I am glad to give so satisfactory an account; but yet I think we are far behind doing what we may.

I may say one thing in behalf of the Society. Our meetings have been uniformly of a very pleasing character; our intercourse has been such that no unpleasant impressions, so far as I know, have been left upon the mind of any member of the Society. We have labored in peace, and all our movements, with hardly an exception, have been united. We have had union in our work.

The minutes of the Society, which will be presented to you, will show you what has been done; and you will find there a clear and full exhibition of the business of the Society in a shape where it can be referred to at any time.

All this I respectfully submit, and refer you to the Secretary and Treasurer for details. H. L. Hastings, President.

At the request of the meeting, the Secretary of the C. P. S., Bro. J. D. Brown, proceeded to read the minutes of that Society for the past year, as follows:—

Report of the Secretary of the C. P. S.

Minutes of Meetings of the C. P. S.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 22d, 1861. Met at the Crisis office at 11.25 o'clock A. M. Meeting was opened with prayer by H. L. Hastings. No quorum present. Spent the time in a desultory conversation till 12 1-4 o'clock, when the following members of the Board were present:—H. L. Hastings, President; Jos. D. Brown, Secretary; Geo. T. Adams, Treasurer; I. C. Wellcome, Solomon Hovey, and J. G. Hamblin, Directors—forming a quorum. Business was then transacted as follows:—

I. Resolved, That the thanks of this Society are due to the retiring officers of the Society and to their Business Agent, for their earnest and successful endeavors to reduce the business of the Office of Publication to a more systematic condition, thus obviating the necessity for various complaints in that department, and leaving an example of order and correctness, which it is to be hoped succeeding managers will be able fully to imitate. Passed.

II. The question of choice of Editor was proposed. Some thought Article 3 in the Constitution of the C. P. Society would require them to have choice of Editor. The following resolution was presented:

Resolved, That for the ensuing year, Miles Grant be Editor-in-Chief of the "World's Crisis," and that P. B. Morgan be the Associate, and that he confer with the Editor-in Chief, and conform to his arrangements in the conduct of the "World's Crisis." Passed.

III. On how funds shall be handled or disbursed, the following resolution was offered:—

Resolved, That all monies be received by the Editor, or Associate Editor, and that they transfer the same daily to the Treasurer, unless circumstances prevent; and that all bills be audited and approved by the Editor or Associate Editor, and paid by the Treasurer. Passed.

IV. Resolved, That the sum of eighteen dollars ($18.00) be appropriated for the salaries of the Editor, or Associate Editor, and Clerk, each week that the paper is issued; or, if the paper be necessarily suspended a week, one half the above amount shall be appropriated for that purpose. Passed.

V. On the matter of the duties of Editor and Associate Editor, the following resolution was offered:—

Resolved, That the Editor-in-Chief, or in his absence his Associate, shall fulfill the duties of Business Agent of the C. P. Society; and, with the advice of the Treasurer, they shall make contracts, and attend to the general business of the C. P. Society. Passed.

VI. The matter of stopping the papers of those subscribers who have always paid, but now write they cannot pay at present, etc., was discussed. It was concluded not to change the policy that has been pursued in the past in this matter.

VII. The matter of publishing articles on the question, commonly known as the "Non-resurrection of the Wicked," was called out by the fact that such articles continue to appear frequently in the Crisis. On that subject the following resolution was offered:—

Resolved, That since the 1st Article of the Constitution of the C. P. Society declares that "the objects of this Society shall be to put in circulation such tracts, books, and periodicals as shall best subserve the interests of the church looking for the coming and kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, and meet the demands of the times; and all its funds shall be devoted to these religious purposes, and no other;" therefore, we judge that since enough has been published in the columns of the Crisis in denial of the doctrine of the resurrection of the unjust to answer all reasonable demands of christian liberty and courtesy, a further advocacy of that notion in this paper would be unconstitutional, inexpedient, and improper for the present. Passed.

VIII. The subject of publishing books and tracts (as contemplated in Articles 1, 7 and 8, of the Constitution of the C. P. Society), was discussed, and the following resolutions were offered on the point:—

Resolved, That this Society raise five hundred dollars ($500.00) for the purpose of publishing books and tracts adapted to the demands of the times in which we live. Passed.

Resolved, That the C. P. Society offer a premium of ten dollars ($10.00) in tracts or cash, for the best tract upon the "Signs of the Times";—said tract to consist of not more than 24 pp. 12 mo., and to be approved by the Editorial Committee, and be owned and published by the C. P. Society. Passed.

IX. Moved, That the necessary expenses of members in coming to this meeting be paid by the Treasurer. Carried.

X. Moved, That the above vote of thanks to retiring Officers be published in the "World's Crisis." Carried.

XI. Moved, That we adjourn sine die. Carried.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Cornville, Aug. 21st, Bro. Joseph McLure, aged thirty-seven.

The subject of this notice suffered many months with consumption. A few months before his death, he became deeply interested in relation to his salvation. Though he had been a believer in the christian religion for many years, yet he had not confessed with his mouth. But when the trying time came, and he felt life and death were set before him, we trust he made the good choice, gave his heart to God and felt the sealing of the Holy Spirit of promise; giving evidence of his acceptance with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

In his last days of sickness, he gave evidence to those who conversed with him, that he possessed the meekness, patience and spirit of a christian. He is laid away with his father, mother, brothers and sisters, to await the trumpet's sound, that will bring them to life eternal. In hope of this, he died, saying it would be but a little while before he should wake to sing and live forever. May his dear companion rest on this hope and promise of God, trusting in him, doing his will, having his grace to sustain her in the midst of trials and conflicts of this life, and at last gain the victory over death, through Christ. Funeral services by the writer. Text Eccl. 1 : 10.

Cornville, Me. Eld. Chas Stratton.

Died in Hermon, May 13, 1862, Nancy Bracket, wife of John Bracket, aged fifty-two years and eight months.

The subject of this notice was one of that number that believe in the speedy coming of Christ. For twenty years she has been a mother in Israel, one of the best of wives, the most affectionate and tender-hearted mother in her family, beloved by all of her friends and neighbors; and as for enemies, I know not that she had any. I have been acquainted with Sister Bracket for more than twenty years, and seen many converted in her family. Bro. and Sr. Bracket have for many years in the past opened their doors for meetings, and spread their tables to feed the saints and sinners; and in their house I have always found a good home day or night.

But alas! how changed is the scene! There is no mother there, no wife to comfort the dear mourning husband and weeping children. Mary, Libbie, and little Frank have lost their dearest friend on earth. May God bless the counsel of their dear mother, and hasten the day when Messiah shall come to bring back the loved ones to shine for ever and ever. Amen. Sermon by the writer, from Luke 11 : 35,—"Jesus wept." I. Damman.

Fell asleep in Jesus at Champlain, N. Y., Sept. 10th, of diphtheria, Laura, daughter of Thomas and Celina Durham, aged seven years and seventeen days.

She was the youngest of two children, and was much loved by all who knew her; but the enemy has triumphed. He has cut short this present life, but the life that is to come is beyond his power. She is now laid low; her sweet musical voice is hushed; her curly locks have been brushed back from her forehead for the last time; we have bidden her adieu, and laid her away in the cold ground; there quietly to rest until, in the morn of the resurrection, when Jesus comes, we expect she will come forth an immortal being, to live forever with Jesus. May God grant that this severe affliction may prove a blessing to her parents and sister; also to all her friends and relatives. D. H. Squier.

Died in Springville, Wis., July 11th, of diphtheria, Commentna A., daughter of Seth and Catherine Hamilton, aged six years.

Commentna was our only child. She was an unusually good and affectionate child. She was beautiful in her looks and ways, which caused her to be loved by all that knew her. She used often to ask questions about Jesus' coming to raise the dead. She suffered very much in her sickness, but now sweetly rests from all pain and suffering. We feel sad and lonely without her, but "sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." O hasten the glorious day!

"When death-divided friends at last
Shall meet to part no more."

C. Hamilton.

Died at Bancroft, Me., Sister Betsy Bracket, wife of Bro. Pascal Bracket, aged fifty.

Sister Bracket was widely known, and those that knew her best loved her most. Her funeral was attended on Sunday, Aug. 31st, and a sermon preached by the writer in the Congregational meeting house at Middlefield, Mass., from these words: "What is our hope?"—1 Thess. 2 : 19. May this affliction be sanctified to all the friends.

George L. Teeple.

Died at Elinwood's Corner, Maine, John Usher, son of Bro. John and Sr. Elizabeth Piper, aged one year, one month, and eight days.

A discourse was preached by the writer to a large assembly, from Jeremiah 31 : 17. Bro. and Sr. P. have a hope that their little John will soon be delivered from the grasp of the enemy, and live in the land that God promised to the meek. N. F. Nason.

Died in Palmyra, Me., July 5th, of diphtheria, Nathaniel Nason, son of James H. and Emily A. McLure, aged ten years.

Nathaniel was a good boy, and his death is lamented.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Boonsboro, Md., Sept. 15. The battle of South Mountain was fought yesterday, resulting in a complete victory to the Army of the Potomac. The battle-field was located in a gorge of the mountain on the turnpike road between Middletown and Boonesboro.

Harrisburg, Sept. 16. A dispatch received at headquarters says that Jackson recrossed the Potomac, and Gen. McClellan has engaged him with a tremendous force this side of Sharpsburg.

Sept. 17. Gen. McClellan has achieved a glorious victory. Gen. Mansfield is killed and Gen. Hooker is wounded in the foot.

New York, Sept. 18. By the Ocean Express we learn that Sibley's Texan expedition had been broken up, defeated, routed and scattered near Fort Fillmore. About half the force were taken prisoners, together with all their arms, equipments, horses, cannon and stores.

New York, Sept. 18. The Herald's Washington dispatch states that at 3 o'clock this afternoon, intelligence was received that the fiercest and most sanguinary battle of the whole war was in progress.

There is reason to suppose that the losses on each side have been very great as the requisition for medical stores are larger than have been before made at any time.

Reports from Hagerstown state that the rebels were retreating in great disorder.

Six batteries of artillery were captured and 15,000 prisoners.

The battle lasted from five o'clock in the morning until seven at night without a moment's cessation.

The conduct of all the troops was all that any General could wish. Several regiments of new troops who were in action for the first time behaved admirably.

Hundreds of Marylanders were present to witness the battle, which could be seen from the surrounding hills. The sharp rattle of 50,000 muskets, and the thunder of 100 pieces of artillery, is not often witnessed.

It is impossible to form any correct idea of our loss or that of the enemy. Ours will probably reach in killed and wounded 10,000. The enemy's dead, which nearly all fell into our hands, were thickly strewn over the field, in many places lying in heaps.

We took 1500 prisoners during the day.

One piece of woods after being desperately fought for four hours was at last gained by our troops. It contains at least 1500 of both sides and presents a most terrible spectacle.

The victory is complete. The rebels are in full flight, and Gen. McClellan is now in pursuit of them.

Sept. 19. It is asserted that Gen. McClellan succeeded in attacking the enemy's rear, capturing an immense number of prisoners and artillery, and killing and wounding an equally large number.

Sept. 20. We have lost in killed and wounded not less than 10,000. The enemy acknowledge a loss of 15,000, killed and wounded. We have nearly 7000 prisoners. Our captures in munitions of war and stores are very heavy. Gen. Lee, Longstreet and Hill were wounded.

There has been no fighting since Wednesday. The officers we have taken say that their defeat has been most terrible, and they curse the hour they ever entered Maryland. They regard their defeat on Sunday as most overwhelming and declare that our victory is the most brilliant of the war.

All of our generals regard Sunday's fight as the best planned and best fought battle of the war. Though the enemy's advantage was very great in the position held on the mountains.

It is reported that Gen. Miles re-enacted his Bull Run scene at Harper's Ferry, which was surrendered in a shameful manner.

Gen. Burnside has retaken the position of Harper's Ferry.

Inka, Miss., Sept. 20. General Rosencrans, with Stanley's and Moulton's divisions and Mezerve's cavalry, attacked Price south of this village about two hours before dark yesterday, and had a sharp fight until night closed in, resulting in the defeat of eighteen thousand rebels.

The loss on either side in killed and wounded is from four to five hundred. The rebel loss in arms, tents, &c., will be large. We took about 250 prisoners.

Washington despatches to the Times say a cavalry reconnoissance made from Gen. Heintzelman's headquarters yesterday morning, accomplished one of the most rapid and brilliant achievements of the campaign. They went within three miles of Thoroughfare Gap, performing a distance of 80 miles in less than twenty hours. Near Thoroughfare Gap they discovered a rebel force acting as a body-guard to Gen. Ewell, who was in an ambulance, very badly wounded, and being escorted to Richmond. Three of his body guard were captured, with 30 more prisoners, several of them were officers, and some surgeons.

Louisville, Ky. Gen. Bragg's forces have escaped from those of Gen. Buell and are marching rapidly on Louisville. Gen. Nelson is making preparations to defend the city to the last. He has just issued the following order:

"The women and children of this city will prepare to leave without delay."

An attack is expected within forty-eight hours.

New York, Sept 20. A special dispatch to the Post says Gen. Pope telegraphs from the west that the Indian difficulties in Minnesota are more formidable than he had anticipated. He asks for authority to have two regiments of volunteers mounted to pursue the Indians.

Salt Lake, Sept. 22. A party bound for the States were attacked by the Snake Indians at the city of Rocks, 150 miles north. They fought the Indians for 20 miles, losing six killed, and two wounded, and all their outfits.

Reports of Indian depredations northward are coming in daily, and much trouble is expected to emigrants.

Gov. Ramsay of Minnesota estimates the number killed by the Indians to be five hundred. The detail of horrors is fearful. The amount of property destroyed is estimated by millions of dollars. To cover this loss the Gov. suggests that the United States Government be petitioned to appropriate the annuities due the Minnesota Indians, amounting to $2,000,000 for the benefit of the losers. Respecting the manner of treating the Indians, Gov Ramsay thinks they must be exterminated or driven beyond the State borders, and he asks the legislature to memorialize the general government for the necessary powers to carry out this policy.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Post, who has often made predictions relative to an emancipation proclamation by the President, says in his last letter:

"But little is said of the long interviews held by Mr. Lincoln with leading Northern statesmen, to whom he submits his well developed ideas for a proclamation which, when issued, will end the war and its cause. When success shall have again crowned our arms, this important document may be confidently expected; although desperate efforts have been made, are now making, and will be made to stifle it with the wet blanket of border State conservatism."

Railroad Disaster.

Newburyport, Mass., Sept. 17. The 6.20 train from Boston and an excursion train (Perham's) returning to Boston from Portsmouth over the Eastern Railroad, came into collision about a mile east of Wenham, about 7 1-2 o'clock this evening. Both trains were going at a high rate of speed, and the shock was terrible, as, owing to a curve in the road, the approaching trains could not be seen until they were close together.

The two locomotives, tenders and baggage cars were jammed together into a space not fifty feet in length. The two forward cars of the excursion train were tipped on their side, and an iron car which followed was crowded two-thirds its length into the car preceding, bruising and cutting the passengers badly, but it is not known how seriously. One passenger (E. A. Batchelder of Boston) had his leg broken and was bruised on the head. Dudley Weeks, engineer, and Augustus Weeks, the fireman of the down train, and the fireman of the up train, were instantly killed. James Littlefield, engineer of the up train, was very badly scalded.

The engines, tenders, baggage cars, and two or three of the passenger cars, are a complete wreck.

Mr. Prescott, the Superintendent of the Railroad, is at the scene of the accident, and doing all in his power to provide for the comfort of the wounded.

Pittsburg, Pa. Sept. 17. A frightful explosion occurred at the U. S. Arsenal this afternoon at 2 o'clock. It occurred in the frame building, known as the laboratory. One hundred and seventy-six boys and girls were employed in the building at the time of the disaster, of whom seventy-five or eighty were killed. One explosion followed another until the entire building was destroyed, and those who could not escape in time were burned up.

The scene was most appalling, the dead bodies lying in heaps, as they had fallen. In some places, where the heat was most intense, whitened bones could be seen through the smoke and flame. In other places large masses of blackened flesh were visible.

Up to the present time sixty-three bodies have been taken from the ruins.

The cause of the explosion is not known, but it is admitted by all to have been accidental.

The U. S. Sanitary Commission received a telegram from San Francisco, 20th, giving information of forwarding per steamer drafts for $100,000, contributed by citizens of San Francisco for the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers and seamen of the army and navy. A portion thereof is to be distributed by branches of the commission at St. Louis and Cincinnati.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Cornville, Aug. 21st, Bro. Joseph McLean, aged thirty-seven.

The subject of this notice suffered many months with consumption. A few months before his death, he became deeply interested in relation to his salvation. Though he had been a believer in the christian religion for many years, yet he had not confessed with his mouth. But when the trying time came, and he felt life and death were set before him, we trust he made the good choice, gave his heart to God and felt the sealing of the Holy Spirit of promise; giving evidence of his acceptance with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

In his last days of sickness, he gave evidence to those who conversed with him, that he possessed the meekness, patience and spirit of a christian. He is laid away with his father, mother, brothers and sisters, to await the trumpet's sound, that will bring them to life eternal. In hope of this, he died, saying it would be but a little while before he should wake to sing and live forever. May his dear companion rest on this hope and promise of God, trusting in him, doing his will, having his grace to sustain her in the midst of trials and conflicts of this life, and at last gain the victory over death, through Christ. Funeral services by the writer. Text Eccl. 1: 10.

Cornville, Me. Eld. Chas Stratton.

Died in Hermon, May 13, 1862, Nancy Bracket, wife of John Bracket, aged fifty-two years and eight months.

The subject of this notice was one of that number that believe in the speedy coming of Christ. For twenty years she has been a mother in Israel, one of the best of wives, the most affectionate and tender-hearted mother in her family, beloved by all of her friends and neighbors; and as for enemies, I know not that she had any. I have been acquainted with Sister Bracket for more than twenty years, and seen many converted in her family. Bro. and Sr. Bracket have for many years in the past opened their doors for meetings, and spread their tables to feed the saints and sinners; and in their house I have always found a good home day or night.

But alas! how changed is the scene! There is no mother there, no wife to comfort the dear mourning husband and weeping children. Mary, Libbie, and little Frank have lost their dearest friend on earth. May God bless the counsel of their dear mother, and hasten the day when Messiah shall come to bring back the loved ones to shine for ever and ever. Amen. Sermon by the writer, from Luke 11: 35,—"Jesus wept." I. Damman.

Fell asleep in Jesus at Champlain, N. Y., Sept. 10th, of diphtheria, Laura, daughter of Thomas and Celina Durham, aged seven years and seventeen days.

She was the youngest of two children, and was much loved by all who knew her; but the enemy has triumphed. He has cut short this present life, but the life that is to come is beyond his power. She is now laid low; her sweet musical voice is hushed; her curly locks have been brushed back from her forehead for the last time; we have bidden her adieu, and laid her away in the cold ground; there quietly to rest until, in the morn of the resurrection, when Jesus comes, we expect she will come forth an immortal being, to live forever with Jesus. May God grant that this severe affliction may prove a blessing to her parents and sister; also to all her friends and relatives. D. H. Squier.

Died in Springville, Wis., July 11th, of diphtheria, Commentna A., daughter of Seth and Catherine Hamilton, aged six years.

Commentna was our only child. She was an unusually good and affectionate child. She was beautiful in her looks and ways, which caused her to be loved by all that knew her. She used often to ask questions about Jesus' coming to raise the dead. She suffered very much in her sickness, but now sweetly rests from all pain and suffering. We feel sad and lonely without her, but "sorrow not even as others which have no hope." For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." O hasten the glorious day!

"When death-divided friends at last
Shall meet to part no more."

C. Hamilton.

Died at Bancroft, Me., Sister Betsy Bracket, wife of Bro. Pascal Bracket, aged fifty.

Sister Bracket was widely known, and those that knew her best loved her most. Her funeral was attended on Sunday, Aug 31st, and a sermon preached by the writer in the Congregational meeting house at Middlefield, Mass., from these words: "What is our hope?"—1 Thess 2: 19. May this affliction be sanctified to all the friends.

George L. Teeple.

Died at Elinwood's Corner, Maine, John Usher, son of Bro. John and Sr. Elizabeth Piper, aged one year, one month, and eight days.

A discourse was preached by the writer to a large assembly, from Jeremiah 31: 17. Bro. and Sr. P. have a hope that their little John will soon be delivered from the grasp of the enemy, and live in the land that God promised to the meek. N. F. Nason.

Died in Palmyra, Me., July 5th, of diphtheria, Nathaniel Nason, son of James H. and Emily A. McLure, aged ten years.

Nathaniel was a good boy, and his death is lamented.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Boonesboro, Md., Sept. 15. The battle of South Mountain was fought yesterday, resulting in a complete victory to the Army of the Potomac. The battle-field was located in a gorge of the mountain on the turnpike road between Middletown and Boonesboro.

Harrisburg, Sept. 16. A dispatch received at headquarters says that Jackson recrossed the Potomac, and Gen. McClellan has engaged him with a tremendous force this side of Sharpsburg.

Sept. 17. Gen. McClellan has achieved a glorious victory. Gen. Mansfield is killed and Gen. Hooker is wounded in the foot.

New York, Sept. 18. By the Ocean Express we learn that Sibley's Texan expedition had been broken up, defeated, routed and scattered near Fort Fillmore. About half the force were taken prisoners, together with all their arms, equipments, horses, cannon and stores.

New York, Sept. 18. The Herald's Washington dispatch states that at 3 o'clock this afternoon, intelligence was received that the fiercest and most sanguinary battle of the whole war was in progress.

There is reason to suppose that the losses on each side have been very great as the requisition for medical stores are larger than have been before made at any time.

Reports from Hagerstown state that the rebels were retreating in great disorder.

Six batteries of artillery were captured and 15,000 prisoners.

The battle lasted from five o'clock in the morning until seven at night without a moment's cessation.

The conduct of all the troops was all that any General could wish. Several regiments of new troops who were in action for the first time behaved admirably.

Hundreds of Marylanders were present to witness the battle, which could be seen from the surrounding hills. The sharp rattle of 50,000 muskets, and the thunder of 100 pieces of artillery, is not often witnessed.

It is impossible to form any correct idea of our loss or that of the enemy. Ours will probably reach in killed and wounded 10,000. The enemy's dead, which nearly all fell into our hands, were thickly strewn over the field, in many places lying in heaps.

We took 1500 prisoners during the day.

One piece of woods after being desperately fought for four hours was at last gained by our troops. It contains at least 1500 of both sides and presents a most terrible spectacle.

The victory is complete. The rebels are in full flight, and Gen. McClellan is now in pursuit of them.

Sept. 19. It is asserted that Gen. McClellan succeeded in attacking the enemy's rear, capturing an immense number of prisoners and artillery, and killing and wounding an equally large number.

Sept. 20. We have lost in killed and wounded not less than 10,000. The enemy acknowledge a loss of 15,000, killed and wounded. We have nearly 7000 prisoners. Our captures in munitions of war and stores are very heavy. Gen. Lee, Longstreet and Hill were wounded.

There has been no fighting since Wednesday. The officers we have taken say that their defeat has been most terrible, and they curse the hour they ever entered Maryland. They regard their defeat on Sunday as most overwhelming and declare that our victory is the most brilliant of the war.

All of our generals regard Sunday's fight as the best planned and best fought battle of the war. Though the enemy's advantage was very great in the position held on the mountains.

It is reported that Gen. Miles re-enacted his Bull Run scene at Harper's Ferry, which was surrendered in a shameful manner.

Gen. Burnside has retaken the position of Harper's Ferry.

Iuka, Miss., Sept. 20. General Rosencrans, with Stanley's and Moulton's divisions and Meserve's cavalry, attacked Price south of this village about two hours before dark yesterday, and had a sharp fight until night closed in, resulting in the defeat of eighteen thousand rebels.

The loss on either side in killed and wounded is from four to five hundred. The rebel loss in arms, tents, &c., will be large. We took about 250 prisoners.

Washington despatches to the Times say a cavalry reconnoissance made from Gen. Heintzelman's headquarters yesterday morning, accomplished one of the most rapid and brilliant achievements of the campaign. They went within three miles of Thoroughfare Gap, performing a distance of 80 miles in less than twenty hours. Near Thoroughfare Gap they discovered a rebel force acting as a body-guard to Gen. Ewell, who was in an ambulance, very badly wounded, and being escorted to Richmond. Three of his body guard were captured, with 30 more prisoners, several of them were officers, and some surgeons.

Louisville, Ky. Gen. Bragg's forces have escaped from those of Gen. Buell and are marching rapidly on Louisville. Gen. Nelson is making preparations to defend the city to the last. He has just issued the following order.

"The women and children of this city will prepare to leave without delay."

An attack is expected within forty-eight hours.

New York, Sept 20. A special dispatch to the Post says Gen. Pope telegraphs from the west that the Indian difficulties in Minnesota are more formidable than he had anticipated. He asks for authority to have two regiments of volunteers mounted to pursue the Indians.

Salt Lake, Sept. 22. A party bound for the States were attacked by the Snake Indians at the city of Rocks, 150 miles north. They fought the Indians for 20 miles, losing six killed, and two wounded, and all their outfits.

Reports of Indian depredations northward are coming in daily, and much trouble is expected to emigrants.

Gov. Ramsay of Minnesota estimates the number killed by the Indians to be five hundred. The detail of horrors is fearful. The amount of property destroyed is estimated by millions of dollars. To cover this loss the Gov. suggests that the United States Government be petitioned to appropriate the annuities due the Minnesota Indians, amounting to $2,000,000 for the benefit of the losers. Respecting the manner of treating the Indians, Gov Ramsay thinks they must be exterminated or driven beyond the State borders, and he asks the legislature to memorialize the general government for the necessary powers to carry out this policy.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Post, who has often made predictions relative to an emancipation proclamation by the President, says in his last letter:

"But little is said of the long interviews held by Mr. Lincoln with leading Northern statesman, to whom he submits his well developed ideas for a proclamation which, when issued, will end the war and its cause. When success shall have again crowned our arms, this important document may be confidently expected; although desperate efforts have been made, are now making, and will be made to stifle it with the wet blanket of border State conservatism."

Railroad Disaster.

Newburyport, Mass., Sept. 17. The 6.20 train from Boston and an excursion train (Perham's) returning to Boston from Portsmouth over the Eastern Railroad, came into collision about a mile east of Wenham, about 7 1-2 o'clock this evening. Both trains were going at a high rate of speed, and the shock was terrible, as, owing to a curve in the road, the approaching trains could not be seen until they were close together.

The two locomotives, tenders and baggage cars were jammed together into a space not fifty feet in length. The two forward cars of the excursion train were tipped on their side, and an iron car which followed was crowded two-thirds its length into the car preceding, bruising and cutting the passengers badly, but it is not known how seriously. One passenger (E. A. Batchelder of Boston) had his leg broken and was bruised on the head. Dudley Weeks, engineer, and Augustus Weeks, the fireman of the down train, and the fireman of the up train, were instantly killed. James Littlefield, engineer of the up train, was very badly scalded.

The engines, tenders, baggage cars, and two or three of the passenger cars, are a complete wreck.

Mr. Prescott, the Superintendent of the Railroad, is at the scene of the accident, and doing all in his power to provide for the comfort of the wounded.

Pittsburg, Pa. Sept. 17. A frightful explosion occurred at the U. S. Arsenal this afternoon at 2 o'clock. It occurred in the frame building, known as the laboratory. One hundred and seventy-six boys and girls were employed in the building at the time of the disaster, of whom seventy-five or eighty were killed. One explosion followed another until the entire building was destroyed, and those who could not escape in time were burned up.

The scene was most appalling, the dead bodies lying in heaps, as they had fallen. In some places, where the heat was most intense, whitened bones could be seen through the smoke and flame. In other places large masses of blackened flesh were visible.

Up to the present time sixty-three bodies have been taken from the ruins.

The cause of the explosion is not known, but it is admitted by all to have been accidental.

The U. S. Sanitary Commission received a telegram from San Francisco, 20th, giving information of forwarding per steamer drafts for $100,000, contributed by citizens of San Francisco for the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers and seamen of the army and navy. A portion thereof is to be distributed by branches of the commission at St. Louis and Cincinnati.

For Thy Sake.

"Cursed is the ground for thy sake."—Gen. 3:17.

Traveler through this vale of sorrow,
Do you of life's ills partake?
Do dark clouds brood o'er the morrow?
Listen! this is "for thy sake."

Are your joys with sorrow mingled?
Does grief cause your heart to ache?
Do you find earth's hopes like bubbles?
Listen! this is "for thy sake."

"For thy sake," lest thou should'st love it—
Love this world, its hopes and toys;
Lest you find no heart to covet
When you're offered purer joys.

Then give thanks that you've a Father;
Kiss the rod that made you ache;
Ask him thus to bless you ever
As he sees 'tis "for thy sake."

Christian! does your way seem thorny?
Do you meet with trials strange?
Listen! have you not a Father?
Does he not your ways arrange?

Do the world despise and leave you?
Do dear friends with them partake?
Do near kindred scoffing grieve you?
Christian! this is "for thy sake."

If the world should dearly love you,
You would with them friendship make;
Then, if from this snare he saves you,
Give him praise—'tis "for thy sake."

"For thy sake" he kindly chastens—
Chastens, yet 'tis done in love,
Lest in finding other lovers,
We from his embrace should rove.

Then be glad and praise him ever,
Though the world should all forsake;
He'll make all things work together
For thy good, as "for thy sake."

I. K. LOMBARD.

From B. G. Gotchell.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel every day that my heart inditeth good matter, and my tongue is the pen of a ready writer. When I meet my fellow men now, the first salutation is, "Well, have you enlisted?" I tell them, "Yes, I enlisted some years ago; not to fight with carnal weapons, but with spiritual, to the pulling down of the strong holds of Satan—spiritual wickedness in high places. "Well, but wont you fight?" "No." "But, suppose you are drafted?" "That will make no difference." "Then they might put you in prison?" "Well, I would sing praises to God, knowing that deliverance is nigh at hand." "But are you not a voter and a citizen here?" "No." "Who and what are you?" "Well, friend, I am one chosen out of the world. My citizenship is not of this world. I am looking for one to come, and for a King to reign in righteousness. I belong to that sect 'everywhere spoken against.' Let Cæsar do his own business. Let the potsherds of the earth strive with the potsherds of the earth. I will obey Cæsar's laws while I stay here, till they come across my duty in the word of God as a disciple of Jesus; then I must disobey them. Friend, did you know the hour of temptation is upon all the world to try them? I made up my mind twenty-two years ago on this point; and now do you think I should turn from it, after twenty-two years reading my Bible and praying for light? I have told hundreds of my fellow men that these things were coming on the earth, and as soon as a nation gets ripe God gives them up to the sword, and he says he will give all the wicked to the sword. Is not that just what he is doing? You vote for Cæsar; you fight for him; you have a charter from him to sustain you, therefore he has a right to call on you, because you belong to him. You will be caught in the snare.

"Twenty-two years ago I saw these things coming as plainly as I see them to-day, and from that time to this I have been gaining strength for the emergency, while you have been growing weaker and weaker, till you have no power to will or resist the temptation. God sends one thing after another to try his people, and those that receive the truth in the love of it when offered to them will be likely to stand the trial. The nation has got ripe, and he sends the sword, as he always has done, to see how many will stand the trial. But behold a hypocritical nation, having no faith in the God of heaven, but trusting in one another, and in the arm of the nation. They forget the same God lives who shut the lions' mouths when Daniel was cast in the den, and who the fourth was in the fiery furnace. But that same God lives to-day and will be with them that believe and trust in him. Glory to God!"

My brethren, we have not believed in vain. If we have kept the word of his patience in the tarrying time, he will keep us in this hour of temptation which has come upon us, that we may keep our garments unspotted from the world, and not be left so dark and without hope as to take the sword with the wicked and shed our fellow man's blood, and so be found with them at last and perish. You know, Bro. Grant, when we first believed these precious truths, twenty years ago, there was hardly an Adventist to be found who believed in fighting at all with carnal weapons. But since that time there have some risen up who say they can fight their enemies and still be christians. I confess plainly I do not understand such christianity as that. Neither do I believe it came from Christ. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." Can a man watch and keep his garments, and wait for God's Son from heaven, and at the same time take the sword and shed his fellow man's blood? I do not so understand my Bible.

Bro. Grant, the heathen are raging, and the people imagine vain things; but let us be still and know our God. He is about to take to himself his great power and reign.

Chelsea, Mass.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been trying to scatter the light of Bible truth here. The good Lord has given me access to many minds, and I have distributed tracts almost over this Island, and visited most of the families. I have been received kindly and heard attentively. Have given twelve lectures. I think the door is pretty well opened for more. I have to work very cautiously at first, and give them milk, for they are not able to bear strong meat. I do not learn that they have ever had the Advent doctrine preached here. I hear nothing said about Adventism or Millerism, and I don't think they know what it is. I have sowed the seeds of Bible truth, and I have faith to believe they will spring up and bear fruit. The little leaven of truth contained in these tracts will leaven at least part of the lump. I have not heard of a single Advent tract, except in one family, nor seen or heard of any Advent books, except one of Dr. Cumming's works, on the Island. There are but two Advent papers taken here. These are the Advent Herald. It seems a little strange that so near Boston, the headquarters of Advent papers and preachers, that this Island should have been so long neglected.

I spent last Sabbath at Guy Head, among the Indians, where Mr. Hatch is stationed as their missionary, paid from a fund from abroad. I asked for the privilege of giving them one lecture in the evening on the resurrection. He said he did not allow any lectures on any subject on Sabbath days; and when I told him it was a Bible subject, he said he had given me the forenoon to address the Sabbath school, and he felt it his duty to occupy the time. He said I might have a few minutes after his sermon, just as the brethren did. I told him I would accept any amount of time he was disposed to give. I attended his service, and gave an exhortation in the evening, and felt free.

I have introduced the subject of the restitution of all things in a good many families, and in quite a number of instances they have been waked up on the subject. I now present the tract, "The New Heavens and Earth," or, "The Three World's; Past, Present and the Future," or, "The Inheritance of the Saints." These are just the thing; and I have scattered about all I have, and shall want a large amount more. If any feel interested to provide me with tracts, let them send their offering to the "Crisis" office. I shall be at the office soon.

My health is first rate, my spirits never were better. I feel strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. I have a strong arm to lean upon; his strength is made perfect in my weakness. I can trust in him and not be afraid. Pray for me, all you who can pray. I need wisdom from above.

Your brother, B. SPAULDING.
Martha's Vineyard, Mass., Sept. 2d.

From Sr. E. Somes.

BRO. GRANT:—I have at last got a little money for your paper. I do not know how to do without it in these times of peril. It seems to tell us where we are in the world's history; and then the brothers' and sisters' letters are so cheering and encouraging, I should feel quite lonely without it. The world looks sad and gloomy. I never expect it to be any better till Jesus comes; then I expect to meet all Father's family, to part no more forever. How blessed that will be! Glory to God and the Lamb forever!

Who can describe the blessedness of that man or that family who have made the God of Jacob their refuge when the mandate goes forth—"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." I realize that we are living in a time when we need strong and living faith to overcome the world, and believe the precious promises of God as they are left on record. My earnest prayer to God has been that I might embrace the truth and nothing but the truth.

I feel that I shall live to see the King in his beauty coming in the clouds. The more I think of that glorious day, the nearer it seems. Time is short.

I generally read your paper once through, and some pieces twice, and then send them to my friends and neighbors. I sent two to a Baptist sister. She sent them right back, saying she would not keep them in her house over night. I would to God that light might break into her heart, that she might see light in God's light. Pray for her, brethren and sisters, and for all others that are so opposed to the truth. They say they love Jesus, yet they cannot bear to hear of his coming the second time in the clouds. If I never am saved, I love the sound of the coming of my Savior. When I hear any one speak of it, it delights my heart.

May God help all those that are called to declare his truths, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, EMELINE SOMES.
Jefferson, Me., Sept. 15th, '62.

From Bro. E. P. Woodward.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—From Wilbraham, Bro. Henry Pratt and myself took our way over the hills to New Preston, Ct. About noon we found a christian, one whose aim seemed to be considerably higher than the almighty dollar. Spent an hour with him very pleasantly. He, too, sighed over the abominations and desolations in the land, and his hope of a soon-coming millennium had received some terrible blows of late. "O how men have changed in thirty years!" said he. While speaking of the millennium, he related an incident quite suggestive. Some time ago he was drawing cotton for a woolen manufacturer—a professing christian—to be mixed with the wool, and sold as a pure article. "You believe in a millennium?" said he to the man. "Yes." "Well, I guess it wont come till you stop putting cotton into your woolen goods."

Found the brethren in N. Preston busy on the camp-ground, in spite of the wind. Seven tents on the encampment. Brn. Goodrich and Bellows present, and preached several times. Bro. Hastings arrived on Thursday. Preaching well attended, and prayer meetings full of life. Perhaps a thousand present Sunday afternoon. Eight persons were baptized. There was a strong feeling of opposition in the place, but nothing was done beyond a few hints respecting tar and feathers, and Fort Lafayette. Bro. Hastings preached in the place two evenings after the camp broke up, and the audience seemed deeply interested. Indeed, I know of quite a number who are convinced of the truth, but for various reasons do not obey. One man because he must leave his business if he does: he cannot deal honestly and live, he thinks. Some others stumble in the matter of baptism, for the "one baptism" finds few friends here. Can it be that men and women in their right mind will set such paltry considerations over against ETERNAL LIFE? O, "why will ye die?" Yet, much good has been done. The gospel of the kingdom has been published here only recently. And already the Devil is terribly mad; which speaks well for the faithfulness of God's servants.

Last evening we had a meeting near by, preaching and conference. Heard something respecting the "lively hope" unto which the apostles were "begotten again by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

Some of the brethren in this section have been drafted. I asked one of them what he should do about it. "Stand up for Jesus," was the reply. He says it is the first time he ever had a call to preach; he did 'nt expect one quite so soon. May God give him words of power when he shall make his defense. There are many sad hearts here, for on the hill yonder are the white tents that tell of coming strife. And things grow no better,—men's hearts begin to fail them for fear. But God will "make an end" "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Yours in the hope of a resurrection at His coming.

Condensed Report

OF THE EASTERN N. Y. AND WESTERN MASS. AND CONN. SECOND ADV. CONFERENCE.

Met at Otis, Mass., Tuesday eve, Sept. 2nd. Preaching by Bro. St. John, from John 21: 22. Wednesday P. M., had a good prayer and exhortation meeting. In the evening Bro. Munn preached from Deut. 5: 29. Thursday morning, met for business. Brn. Fox, Babcock and Fenn were appointed a committee to examine those that might present themselves for ordination or joining the conference.

The Report of the preachers showed that they had been endeavoring to know what the will of God was, and do it cheerfully. The cause in some places looked encouraging, while other fields were not so good. On the whole, I think that the prospect for the future is brightening, and I hope that God will be glorified. In the afternoon met for worship and spent the time in prayer and exhortation. In the evening Bro. Fenn preached from Heb. 11: 24–26, and some interest was manifested. Friday morning met for business, and the following Resolution was presented and passed unanimously:

Resolved, that we request the churches within the limits of the Conference to take notice of the gifts of those women who feel called of God to labor in the gospel, and, if they see that they are qualified, recommend them to this Conference as preachers, teachers, or exhorters, as the case may be, that they may be recognized by us accordingly.

Friday P. M., met for worship, and Bro. Teeple preached from Matt. 24: 13. In the evening Bro. Gardner preached from 2 Pet. 3: 11, 12. Saturday morning met for business. The committee on Ordination reported favorably in the case of Bro. Chas. Gardner, having been recommended to the Conference by the church with which he had labored and lived. It was voted that Bro. Gardner be ordained Sunday P. M. Voted to adjourn to Nov. 4th, in the evening, at the place that the following committee might specify, to wit: Brn. Fenn, Fox, and Teeple.

Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. Munn, from 2 Pet. 1: 16. In the evening Bro. Fox preached from Rom. 8: 3. Sunday morning met to receive testimonies, when quite a number gave in testimony for the Lord. At half past ten Bro. Teeple preached from Matt. 28: 19, 20. At the close of the sermon Bro. Charles Gardner was set apart for the work of the ministry by the laying on of hands. In the evening Bro. Babcock preached from 1 Thess. 4: 16–18. Brn. Munn, Gardner and Fox staid Monday evening. I trust that the Conference will prove a blessing.

GEO. L. TEEPLE, Secretary.

Life is Short.

Life is short, and time is fleeting,
Swift the moments pass away,
And the time is onward hasting
When will end probation's day;—

When to rocks and mountains fleeing,
Hopeless sinners vainly cry,—
Cry that they may fall and hide them
From the Lamb's all-searching eye.

But the saints, with heads uplifted,
Hail with joy redemption's dawn;
As they sing in words of triumph,
All their pains are fled and gone.

While on earth they toiled and suffered,
Almost fainting by the way,
And while they toiled were ever watching
For the breaking of the day.

Oft they bowed their heads in sorrow
As they wandered pilgrims here,
Oft they felt that they were strangers,
But their God was ever near.

Oft their foes were round them pressing,
Heaping on them countless wrongs,
Still their onward course pursuing,
They rejoicing sang their songs.

Now amid the countless numbers
They the song of triumph swell,
Waving high the palm of vict'ry
As they bid old earth farewell.

Grant, O Lord! that at thy coming
We among the host may stand,
Who, with robes and garments spotless,
Shall possess the glorious land.

EXPERIENCE OF A RETURNED VOLUNTEER.

BRO. GRANT.—Enclosed you will find $5.00; * * * $4.00 of it to be credited to me, and the other dollar for a new subscriber whom I picked up down South, where I have been soldiering for the past three months. * * * Perhaps you would like to know how I liked a soldier's life. I will tell you in a few words. I have no desire to try it again. I have learned from my own experience, that there is no such thing as harmony between a warring with spiritual and carnal weapons together. They don't work peaceably with each other. Place them in any position you choose, and you can't make them agree. I have tried it to my satisfaction, and have given up the job as an impossibility. Thus I was driven to choose between the two. I must either lay aside my carnal weapons, and hold on to the spiritual; or else let go the spiritual, and cling to the carnal. And, when brought to this point, I was not long in deciding which course to pursue. Lucky for me, my term of service was for only three months; and when it expired, my military career expired with it. On the 25th day of August I packed my knapsack, bade adieu to camp life, and left my rifle at the Washington Arsenal without the least reluctance on my part. Yet I felt sad to think that it was so soon to go into other hands, where it would prove an instrument of death to some poor sinner; in an instant of time sealing his eternal doom, and placing him beyond the reach of pardon and salvation, to rise up in the judgment a witness against his murderer, both receiving their final sentence together: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Thus, through the mercies of God, I have been delivered from this whirlpool of destruction, which is now drawing in and swallowing down its thousands of victims almost daily, and am safe at home among relatives and friends, where I can enjoy the companionship of christian brethren, and where again I am looking with them for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Your brother in Christ,

Lessons learned at Jesus' Feet.

THE SINGLE EYE.

We read that, in the time of our Savior, "among the chief rulers also many believed on Him, but because of the Pharisees, they did not confess Him, lest they should be put out of the Synagogue. For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." It needs no deep knowledge of human nature, perhaps not the special enlightening of the Holy Spirit, to perceive that this is the case with men generally. Well said the poet,

"O, Popular Applause! what heart of man
Is proof against thy sweet, seducing charms?"

Not men in public life alone, are the victims of this enchantress. "The praise of men"—who desires it not? Who toils and strives not for it? The statesman, the author, the man of wealth, the lady of fashion, the would-be-fashionable, how large a class, and reaching how low;—for what else do they live? Even the poet—how often is God's beautiful gift to him prostituted to Fame!

And we, brethren beloved, we who have sworn allegiance to our Master in heaven, have we wholly escaped this snare? Do we not many things, every day, from a motive akin to theirs? Whence that thrill of pleasure, when one of earth's great ones condescended to notice us in presence of others? Whence the keen mortification, when they coolly passed us by on the other side? Why shrank we, on one occasion, from uttering the needed reproof, and, on another, from avowing our faith, in the hearing of scoffers? Why bend we in so many ways to the current, seeking to glide smoothly along, and to have all men speak well of us? Forget we that our Master said, "How can ye believe, who receive honor from one another, and seek not the honor which cometh from God only?" How few are they who seek this honor only; how few dare to do so! How few seem to recognize it as their duty, rather than their high privilege. How few feel with Paul, that "It is a small thing to be judged of man's judgment." How many say, even openly, and yet more in their hearts, some perhaps unconsciously,—"yes; to please and honor God and be honored by him should be our supreme desire, but then it is impossible to carry this motive into everything. We are in and out of the world, and must do many things with reference to our fellow-men only." What saith our Master? "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Could language be plainer? In what may we not glorify God, if we may do it even in the gratification of our appetites? "But," says one, "it will not do, to be entirely indifferent to the good opinion of others. It would render us morose and unamiable." Ah! how little such understand the nature and operation of "the single eye." Most true is it, that the very lowest attainments in vice and crime are usually accompanied by a reckless indifference to the opinion of others. Those who are "led captive by Satan at his will," seem to aim to please him only. But if we aim to please God only, shall we not cultivate a spirit of love and good-will toward our fellow men? Shall we not, "as we have opportunity, do good to all men, especially to them that are of the household of faith?" Shall we not, "if it be possible,—live peaceably with all men?" Shall we not "abstain from all appearance of evil?" Yea, verily, for these are parts of His will.

O, it is safer, happier—yes, and far easier too—to obey our Father fully—to serve him with an undivided heart—to have a single eye. Well may it be easier, for then, and then only, is Omnipotence fully on our side. Then indeed do we take hold on Almighty strength. Then may we say, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Once establishing for ourselves the single, glorious aim—to please God—we shall find that all subordinate duties and claims delightfully adjust themselves—or rather we shall lovingly recognize our Father's hand, adjusting them for us. Then indeed shall we begin to live. Then we shall breathe the very atmosphere of heaven—an atmosphere pure, calm, serene—far above all the clouds and storms which disturb those who are content to occupy lower ground. When like David we can say, "I have set the Lord always before me," like him, we may add, "because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved." Then indeed shall our "peace be as a river, and our righteousness as the waves of the sea."—Watchman and Reflector.

Who is Michael?

"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people, and there shall be a time of trouble, such as was not since there was a nation even to that same time and at that time shall thy people be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."—DAN. 12: 1.

The answer to this question we find in the epistle of Jude, who calls Michael "the archangel," which means literally, the chief angel. And the manner in which he refers to him, shows that he is that angel so called in Scripture, "The angel of the Lord." See Jude 9. Zech. 3: 1, 2. This angel appeared to Moses, surrounded by the flaming glory of God, in the burning bush. Ex. 3: 2. He also appeared to the shepherds of Bethlehem, and announced the birth of our Savior. Luke 2: 9–11. And at the resurrection of our Lord, he said to those women who came to the sepulchre, "I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here, for he is risen as he said," Matt. 28: 2–6. That he is a celestial being, and not our Lord Jesus Christ, is therefore clear.

That he was the celestial chief of the Israelites as their defender, is clear from a number of passages. Thus in Exodus 23: 20–23, God says of him, "Behold I send an angel before thee to keep thee in the way and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice, for he will not pardon your transgressions, for my name is in him." This proves that he was neither a mediator nor God, because he did not possess the pardoning power. But it is further said of him, "mine angel shall go before thee and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites and the Jebusites." Now this identifies the angel that appeared to Joshua, (chap. 5: 13, 15,) as the angel of the Lord, whom God promised to send before them. And as he is there called "captain of the Lord's host," (that is the hosts of Israel) it further identifies him as the one Gabriel spoke of to Daniel as, "Michael your prince." Dan. 10: 21.

Whatever signification the word "prince" may have in English, the original of this word in Dan. 10: 13, 21; chap. 12: 1, signifies a chief or ruler; and does not signify of itself, one who is only an heir to a throne or future rule. It is translated archon, in the Septuagint, it being one of the forms of arche, a word extensively used as a prefix to denote chiefs of different grades. When prefixed to the word angel, it forms the name "archangel." Hence, all things considered, it is reasonable to conclude that Michael is the chief angel, or "angel of the Lord," whom God sent as the celestial chief of the Israelites, to deliver them from their enemies, and to punish them when they transgress.

Wesley and his Preachers.

He prescribed the minutest rules of life for them, even such as concerned their physical habits. He found that some became "nervous" more probably by too much work than by too little, though he thought otherwise. He gave them advice on the subject. "Touch no drink, tobacco, or snuff. Eat very light, if any, supper. Breakfast on nettle or orange-peel tea. Lie down before ten; rise before five. Every day use as much exercise as you can bear; or murder yourself by inches." "These rules," he adds, "are as necessary for the people as the preachers." . . . He interrogated them closely in his printed Minutes about their habits. "Do you," he asked, "deny yourselves every useless pleasure of sense, imagination, honor? Are you temperate in all things?—to take one for instance, in food? Do you use only that kind, and that degree, which is best both for the body and soul? Do you see the necessity of this? Do you eat no flesh suppers? no late suppers? These naturally tend to destroy bodily health. Do you eat only three meals a day? . . . Do you take no more food than is necessary at each meal? You may know, if you do, by a load at your stomach, by drowsiness or heaviness, and, in a while, by weak or bad nerves. Do you use only that kind and that degree of drink which is best both for your body and soul? Do you drink water? Why not? Did you ever? Why did you leave it it off, if not for health? When will you begin again? To-day?"—Dr. Stephen's "History of Methodism."

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

Hygiene.

Two thirds of the diseases that human flesh is heir to, may be traced to a morbid state of the blood, and a lack of general circulation. What then is our remedy; to drug the patient, and force the blood into motion? No. There is a wise provision of nature to remedy the evil, if we will but allow it. Every breath we take in is decomposed by the lungs; the oxygen retained to renew the blood, in its passage through the lungs to the heart, and the noxious portions exhaled. Hence the importance of pure air. Fire feeds on the same principle that we do—the oxygen. So also growing vegetables. Consequently house plants should not be in sleeping or sitting apartments: and where fires are, there should be ventilation. Therefore, fire-places are better than stoves.

About the year '43 I had much practice in New York in the disease called black tongue, or erysipelas; not the cutaneous, but a high grade of much inflammation. In all these cases, not one occurred in a house using fire-places exclusive of stoves, except children who had sat by stoves at school. Under the head of pure air, will also be seen the necessity of unobstructed breath; hence, never dress tight.

Diet also is an important item in purifying blood. I will not object to flesh altogether, but say, be sparing. And beef, by many condemned altogether, I would recommend as most wholesome. The great mistake is in the cooking, or rather half cooking. Steak, fried or half fried, is the order of the day. No wonder beef is unwholesome. Boil your beef thoroughly, to make it tender. Then eat warm, or cold, or fry if you choose. True, salt is good, but much salt meat is not good. Finally, all animal food, being already animalized, goes on sooner to putrefaction, more especially such animals as feed on flesh. Therefore, let your main diet be vegetable, wherein are the elements for making pure blood.

People are not generally aware of the rapid change the system undergoes; throwing off daily many pounds of worn out matter by insensible perspiration, which must be supplied by air or food. Consequently, if nature so rapidly throws off superfluous and morbid matter, and we have good air and diet to supply the blood, we might expect soon to be rid of most diseases.

But hold! The man who undertook to drink the sea dry, enjoined that all rivers should be stopped. Nature is very motherly, and she will indeed remove most diseases if the cause be removed. In short, if you use tea, and more especially coffee, and above all, tobacco, know, O man! that these are some of the rivers that fill the ocean of disease. Let your bread be two days old, diet cool; and as for drink, God made cold water.

Some fanciful author has presented us with the novel theory that potatoes are a fit diet for the laboring class, who dig in the earth; while grain is the more appropriate staff of life for the masses; that fruit which grows a little higher, is an appropriate diet for the intellectual, and that lofty and flighty imaginations may be obtained by a diet of nuts. Probably on the principle that we should "get our victuals where we do our work," or that we should work where we get our victuals.

Dyspepsia.

Dyspepsia is the inability of the stomach to prepare from the food eaten the nourishment requisite to sustain the body, and to supply it with pure blood, which, in its impure, unnatural condition, is sent to every fiber of the system; hence there is not a square-inch of the body which is not liable to be affected with uneasiness or actual pain, and that portion will suffer most which has been previously weakened, or diseased, or injured in any way. Hence among a dozen dyspeptics, no two will have the same predominant symptoms, either in nature or locality; and as these persons differ further in age, sex, temperament, constitution, occupation, and habits of mind and body, it is the height of absurdity to treat any two dyspeptics precisely alike; hence the failure to cure in many curable cases.

Dyspeptics of high mental power and of a bilious temperament, are subject to sick-headache; those who are fat and plegmatic, have constipation and cold feet; while the thin and nervous have horrible neuralgias, which make of life a continued martyrdom, or they are abandoned to forebodings so gloomy, and even fearful sometimes, as to eat out all the joy of life, and make death a longed-for event. Some dyspeptics are wonderfully forgetful; others have such an irritability of temper as to render companionship with them, even for a few hours, painful, while there is such a remarkable incapacity of mental concentration, of fixedness of purpose, that it is impossible to secure any connected effort for recovery.

There are some general principles of cure applicable to all, and which will seldom fail of high advantages.

1. The entire body should be washed once a week with soap, hot water, and a stiff brush.
2. Wear woolen next the skin the year round, during the daytime only.
3. By means of ripe fruits and berries, coarse bread, and other coarse food, keep the bowels acting freely once in every twenty-four hours.
4. Under all circumstances, keep the feet always clean, dry, and warm.
5. It is most indispensable to have the fullest plenty of sound, regular, connected, and refreshing sleep in a clean, light, well-aired chamber, with windows facing the sun.
6. Spend two or three hours of every forenoon, and one or two of every afternoon, rain or shine, in the open air, in some form of interesting, exhilarating, and unwearying exercise—walking with a cheering and entertaining companion is the very best.
7. Eat at regular times, and always slowly.
8. That food is best for each which is most relished, and is followed by the least discomfort. What may have benefited or injured one, is no rule for another. This eighth item is of universal application.
9. Take but a teacupful of any kind of drink at one meal, and let that be warm.
10. Confine yourself to coarse bread of corn, rye, or wheat,—to ripe, fresh, perfect fruits and berries, in their natural state—and to fresh lean meats, broiled or roasted, as meat is easier of digestion than vegetables. Milk, gravies, pastries, heavy hot bread, farinas, starches, and greasy food in general, aggravate dyspepsia by their constipating tendencies. . . .
11. Constantly aim to divert the mind from the bodily condition, in pleasant ways; this is half the cure in many cases.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A Drunkard's Brains.

The startling doctrines taught in "Youmans' Basis of Prohibition," are fully corroborated by the following passage from the Boston Medical Journal:

"Hyrti, by far the greatest anatomist of the age, used to say that he could distinguish in the darkest room, by one stroke of the scalpel, the brain of the inebriate from that of the person who had lived soberly. Now and then he would congratulate his class upon the possession of a drunkard's brain, admirably fitted, for its hardness and more complete preservation, for the purposes of demonstration. When the anatomist wishes to preserve a human brain for any length of time, he effects his object by keeping that organ in a vessel of alcohol. From a soft pulpy substance, it then becomes comparatively hard; but the inebriate, anticipating the anatomist, begins the indurating process before death—begins it while the brain remains the consecrated temple of the soul—while its delicate and gossamer tissues still throb with the pulses of heaven-born life. Strange infatuation, thus to desecrate the God-like! Terrible enchantment, that dries up all the fountain of generous feelings, petrifies all the tender humanities and sweet charities of life, leaving only a brain of lead and a heart of stone!"—Prohibitionist.

THE BEST MEDICINE.—Take the open air—the more you take the better; follow Nature's laws to the very letter. Let the doctors go to the Bay of Biscay; let alone the gin, the brandy and whiskey. Freely exercise—keep the spirits cheerful; let no dread of sickness make you ever fearful. Eat the simplest food, drink the pure cold water; then you will be well, or at least you ought-er.

☞ Drinking largely at meals, even of cold water of simple teas, is a mere habit, and is always hurtful. No one should drink at any one meal more than a quarter of a pint of any liquid, even of cold water, for it always retards, impairs, and interferes with a healthful digestion.

☞ A kind of glimmer before the eyes, making reading or sewing an effort, will be followed by headache or other discomfort, for there is too much blood, or it is impure, exercise it off in the open air, and omit a meal or two.

☞ It is folly to eat without an appetite, merely to gratify the taste.

Invocation.

"Why tarry the wheels of thy chariot," Lord?
The signs of thine advent are here;
Thy word has assured us "that scoffers abound"
When the latter-day glory is near.
In the memory of man was there ever a time
When so many did run "to and fro"?
Much "knowledge increases"—no limit is known
Of inventions for weal and for woe.
Thy promise to Israel is hastening on,
To the land of their fathers they turn;
A highway shall be made for thy people of old,
And a remnant thy faithfulness learn.
The "perilous times" have already begun,
Men's hearts are now falling with fear;
The horrors of war are abroad in our land—
May the great "Prince of Peace" soon appear.
O! let us unitedly plead in His name
That "Thy kingdom" may speedily come,
The power of Satan forever o'erthrown,
And the will of the Conqueror done.
How happy if we like "wise virgins" be found,
When "at midnight" the Bridegroom is near;—
With "oil in our lamps," replenished and bright,
We would wait thy blest summons to hear.
Though storms are around us, we'll "lift up our heads,"
With Christ, "our redemption" in view,
We'll hide till these dangers be all overpast,
And our God has made "all things new."

Words of Jesus.—John 15: 14.

The words of our Savior are ever precious to every child of God. They love to read and re-read those words that express thoughts once in his mind, and given to them by his lips.

In this chapter our Savior uses metaphorical language, to teach his disciples the relation they sustain to him. He thus discourses:—

"I am the true vine." It is supposed by many of our Bible scholars, that Jesus when he uttered this language was in the temple, and there, while his disciples were pointing out to him its grandeur, his eye rested upon the golden vine that encircled the spacious inner temple, which we are informed was so placed by individuals who in their religious enthusiasm had seen fit from time to time to lay there—a golden leaf or vine, or cluster; until as a monument of their generosity and devotion to the ceremonies of the temple, the golden vine encircled the whole room.

As I before said, it is the opinion of many that the eyes of our Savior rested upon this golden vine when he used this language,—"I am the true vine." Here you see a vine that is of no value save to gratify your visionary sense—but in me, behold the "true vine, and my Father is the husbandman." "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." This explains to us why those persons whom Christ claims as his friends, or in other words are branches of him, ofttimes seem to suffer deep afflictions: they pass through deep waters that they cannot fathom, and at times feel like distrusting their heavenly Father, forgetting that He purgeth every branch that beareth fruit, "that it may bring forth more fruit"; and again, that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Let us strive to keep the teachings of our Savior ever before us, so that when we feel that God is trimming us too much, when we feel the knife, and a beautiful twig is severed here and there, or possibly half of the branch, we may know that wisdom holds the knife, goodness and mercy strike the blow, and these afflictions will cause the remaining branches to put forth new buds, and the fruit will come to far greater perfection; or, in other words, as in the language of our beloved brother Paul, "These light afflictions . . will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." And let us, as the poet sings—

"Now thank the eternal powers, convinced
That heaven but tries our virtue by affliction;
That oft the cloud which wraps the present hour,
Serves but to brighten all our future days."

And then let us catch the idea in another's song—

"Like a ball that bounds
According to the force with which 'twas thrown;
So in affliction's violence, he that's wise,
The more he's cast down, will the higher rise."

Again—"Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing." In this passage we have presented the necessity of abiding in Christ, that we may bring forth much fruit. As the natural, literal branch is dependent upon the vine for its fruitfulness, so we, the metaphorical branches of Christ, must receive through him that strength or grace which will enable us to bring forth fruit. How necessary then that we endeavor by every means to seek new supplies of grace. Let us be prayerful. And when we obtain this grace, let us not seek to appropriate it to our own selfishness, but use it for the glory of the Husbandman; not hide the talent given in a napkin, but improve every grace, every power, every talent to his glory.

Our Savior then continues to show that all those who do not abide in him will be treated in the same manner as a dead or dry branch—cut off,—men, or angels, will in the great day of the Lord gather them and cast them into the unquenchable fire, and there they shall be burned,—not as many would have it, eternally in torments; but, as is stated elsewhere, they shall be burned up "root and branch"; after which God will have a clean universe; wickedness will have come to an end, and all nations will have learned to serve and obey Him whose right it is to reign. God will have become all and in all, and then that vision of John's will be brought to a reality—"Every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

Who can picture the glory of such a state? Sin and wickedness have come to a perpetual end. Sickness and death—that cruel enemy, whom some strive to translate into an angel of mercy sent to call us to the arms of Jesus—will have passed away, every tear wiped from the face of God's saints, sighing ceased, sorrow gone, groaning creation silent, God's glory filling the earth, his knowledge spread from sea to sea, mortality swallowed up of life! O! that some artist possessed the gift of portraying to our eye a vision of that glorious land when the curse shall be removed from the footstool of God, and nature once more left free to follow nature's laws, without coming in contact with the baneful influence of the curse that now sets its seal upon every plant and flower. But, no! Could his imagination be expanded until

"'Mid earthly scenes, forgotten and unknown,
He'd live in ideal worlds, and wander there alone;"

and his artistic skill so trained that he could dip his pencil in the glory of the sun-light, and paint on heavenly canvas; still the glory of that future world would far outshine his best productions, and he be left there in solitude, alone, to mourn his want of skill, and we left without the view. But a vision of that glorious state is still in store for those who through "patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality." Not the glory that comes from mortality, but that glory which comes from immortal beings, those who seek to gain glory to God's name, to those who continue to abide in Christ, and thereby bring forth fruit and glorify our heavenly Father.

But to continue the discourse of our Savior. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." What love do we see displayed in this! These words of our Savior ought to send a thrill of joy through the breast of every true disciple, and paint a blush of shame on every hypocritical cheek,—that they should set aside his love as worthless, when we remember that for us he died. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Let us for a moment pause and consider this solemn thought—how that love for this uncharitable world, this cold, selfish people, was the motive power that worked in the breast of no less a personage than the Son of God—the Son of that Being from whom this world had gone astray—to bring him here to suffer, bleed and die, that we might become reconciled to God, whose arms of mercy still are pleadingly extended to receive his wayward children.

Reader, are you one of the numerous class who feel that they are far from their Father's house? who feel that they are wanderers in the cold cheerlessness of the desert of forgetfulness, having spent their life's best days without remembering this perfect love? Let me here entreat you to pause. Let this solemn thought find lodgment in your mind—"I am a wanderer—a wanderer from what should be my home; and all who are to dwell there must possess a character of loveliness. Shall I return to my Father's house?" Let God's love and mercy call forth a firm decision—"I will." And should these lines meet the eyes of one whose ears are now open to my pleadings,—who is wandering on the mountains of sin,—O! listen to me while I beseech you, as an ambassador of Christ, to "be reconciled to God." He is ready, he is willing, he is able, doubt no more; and let this firm resolve be fixed in your mind also—"I will arise and go to my Father"; and having once set out to find your Father, do not allow the glitter of the world to draw your attention from the object of your pursuit. Do not let the by-ways lead you astray; but keep your eyes on the mark of your high calling in Christ Jesus, until you shall see before you the pearly gates, and they lift and you are ushered into those golden streets, no more to be suffered to wander in sin or forgetfulness, but to dwell in those mansions that Christ is now preparing for all those who desire to find a home in the kingdom. There we shall see Jesus! O, what a transporting thought!

"If ye love me, keep my commandments." The requirement is just. It is the only way of saving ourselves from the stigma of falsehood. For is it not written, "He that saith I know him and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar"? and how can we love him if we know him not? He has given the greatest evidence of love for us. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." He has given his life for us, he has done all, and more than we could ask or expect. Then brother, sister, let us love him, and loving him, let us not forget those he associated with himself in the near relation of the vine and its branches, but let us love one another "with a pure heart, fervently," so that the prediction of one writer (Dan. 2: 43) will not be fulfilled in us when he in speaking of the last days says, "They shall not cleave one to another."

The Restitution.

A restitution implies the bringing of a thing to its former state, while it admits of a higher elevation, or the obtaining of an intended state of perfection which it had never reached; as for instance, a man can "restore four-fold," and a "withered hand," which had never reached its perfect state, could be "restored whole, like as the other."

1. Earth's restitution will not bring the earth back merely to its former state,—if it should, it would bring back the tree of "knowledge of good and evil,"—but to the position that it would have occupied at the end of man's trial, if he had not fallen.

2. It includes the "holy city," which Adam never saw. Man's restitution will not bring us back merely to the state from which Adam fell,—if it should, we should still be a "little lower than the angels," and on trial,—but to the state which man would have attained unto if Adam had stood the trial; "live forever," being "equal to the angels," undying. Adam's destined state was an immortal one, if he had stood the trial; and his destined home would have been fully adapted to that state, as there is always a fitness of things in the Divine arrangement: and the restitution will carry us forward to that perfect state, not merely to its former step-stone.

3. The restoring of the kingdom to Israel will not bring that kingdom back to its imperfect state, which was only its incipient stage,—if it should, it would be under a mortal king,—but to its perfect state, under the great "Seed" of David, an immortal King, the "King of saints;" and as there is an advance in the state of the King in this restitution, so there will be in the state of the subjects, as there must be an adaptation of things,—thus the immortal "King of Israel" will reign over the immortal "children of Israel," together with the engrafted Gentiles, who will also be immortal; "and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

The "second Adam" has already had his trial, and has obtained an "endless life," and we are now on trial for eternal life; hence, when the restitution under the "second Adam" takes place, we are at once placed forward to the perfect state which would have succeeded Adam's trial, if he had not fallen. Doubtless all the propagation of the human species which God designed to have taken place, was to have preceded the close of Adam's trial, as at the close of his trial he would have been in a condition to "live forever," and the Savior in describing that deathless state, says, "They neither marry, nor are given in marriage." If such is the case in our deathless state, such would have been the case in Adam's deathless state, at the close of his trial; hence, the restitution will place us where there will be no more propagation of the species. How long Adam's trial would have lasted, before reaching the deathless state, we know not; doubtless it was arranged by God, and not left at hap-hazard. Adam was permitted to eat of the tree of life at some time,—not necessarily at any time.

Christ's Commandments.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15 7.

It is necessary that we should abide in Christ, and that his words should abide in us, if we would claim the promises; for "heaven and earth shall pass away," but my words shall not pass away." We have the assurance that he will hear and answer the prayer of the faithful. Abraham went out not knowing whither he went; but God went with him. His faith was tried when he was commanded to offer up his son for a burnt-offering: but he said, "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt-offering." His prayer was heard; and he beheld a ram caught in a thicket by his horns; and he offered him up in the stead of his son.

If we keep his commandments we have the promise of eternal life, but "the soul that sinneth it shall die." When any are in doubt and temptation, if they keep the commands of God, let them ask him to make the way clear and plain, and it will be done if they are in faith believing. Why is it, when the commands of Christ are so plainly set forth in his Word, that men will go directly against them? "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do, and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5: 19.

But men say we must make exceptions. When Christ says, "Love your enemies," where does he make any exceptions? Nowhere. How utterly inconsistent it is to say we should love our enemies, and at the same time engage in the work of killing them. No murderer hath eternal life. How much better than a murderer is he who goes to kill his fellow men? If a man kills another, he is hung, or put in prison for life, but the more he kills in war the greater hero is he. Nevertheless, it is all the same.

Let us keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and not follow after the traditions of men, but look to Christ for our perfect example. He has promised to be a present help in every time of need. Men make promises, but they do not keep them. Christ's promises never fail. Men say the age of miracles is passed. It is because men do not have the faith which was once delivered to the saints. Faith without works is dead. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

What is Honesty?

To put into a man' pocket more than we take out,—to give ounce for ounce, pound for pound, dollar for dollar,—in fine, to deal justly in this present life with persons and things, is a species of benevolent honesty that largely ingratiates mankind into a close relationship with divine favor; but not so close as to preclude a probable rejection of these observances as actual means of an eternal salvation.

In religion, a christian principle always anticipates temporal justice, in the sense of a revealed law being not an actual law when not comporting favorably with the spirit of Christ and the temper of his commands. Blackstone, that pre-eminent English jurist, says:—"An enactment is not a law when it conflicts with a law of God."

Now taking this christian expose of justice as a basis for honesty, it follows that, while men's opinions may be honest, it is no argument for justification except as they bear the reflex of a higher divine law. What kind of honesty is that which panders to the whims and caprices of a local statute, or has such an exalted idea of justice, mercy and faith as to handle deceitfully the chart of light which has hung out from God's heaven for eighteen hundred years to lure a lost world home? There is no excuse for saying our mental perceptions are so organized that the comprehension of divine things is a speciality.

Evangelists are clamorous to universally concede the fact of Christ's birth; the practicability of his life; and the necessity of his death. But at this juncture, every man departs for his own place. Then commences the war of dogmas. It is just here—at this very point—that Jesus is "wounded in the house of his friends." It is just here where christianity should develop itself in a consolidation of all human proclivities and passions, and converge into one harmonious struggle for everlasting life through the revealed plan of the Savior of this world. But, instead, it is here that fiery faction and sectional strife bellow loudest, and inveterate enmity and animosity erect an impregnable barrier between the people who profess to love Christ better than all the world besides. "He that did eat bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me."

No doubt Jesus prayed with undying solicitude that they (his disciples) might be one, even as he and his Father were one; but I never can believe God will work a miracle that men may consume it upon their lusts. No matter whether such belong to my peculiar faith or not, I believe they are a long way from the kingdom of God. And the only reason why this ocean of difference exists between lovers of truth is, because humility is not a natural conformation of the heart, and they ignore its presence altogether.

I once heard of a man who bore such inveterate animosity against his neighbor, that he unequivocally persisted in wearing a striped shirt, because his neighbor wore a white one. The reason was, he did not want to be in uniform with such a rascal. And this homely illustration is just about as consistent a reason for a plurality of creeds, as anything in the shape of divine authority.

Aside from any private rights of opinion, a man when he takes up the Bible HONESTLY, knows the light before him is God's law revealed in the flesh. His life is an instinctive one of faith in some proposition, whether formally stated or not, which has for its object the highest good. Now if that man refuses to become convinced of its evidences, he carries the lie of a life-time in his own right hand. He wants to get to heaven, but over a ladder of his own building; and if we cannot all cry shibboleth together, why, we must cry separately, or not cry at all.

If a man gets home to heaven, he has got to get there through a howling wilderness. If it is true that the servant should not be greater than his Lord, then he must be exceedingly poor in heart, and honest in his religious as well as civil relations. And if any man would work the work of Christ, he may expect to hold a position very inferior in men's sight, yet exalted in the sight of God. "He taketh the wise in their own craftiness," and they that handle his word deceitfully.

Another Call for Soldiers.

"Wake up the mighty men let all the men of war draw near."—JOEL 3 9.

O what an age is this in which we live! and yet how plainly was it described by the prophets—those men of God who were permitted to look down the stream of time and read the world's history in prospective. What is the topic of the day in the private dwelling, in the shops, in the public thoroughfare, everywhere? War! war!! to arms! to arms!! money for the volunteers—money to encourage men to enlist for the deadly strife. Even the house of God is not exempt from this cry. There are war sermons and war prayers. Men are encouraged on to the battle field by the professed servants of the Prince of peace. They are told to go and save their country from the spoiler's grasp. I wonder if such teachers never read Zeph. 1: 17, 18; "I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord; and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to save them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy."

Do not our rulers walk like blind men? Let our brave men and gallant sons go to the battle field and pour out their blood like water; will it save us? Let us throw down our silver and gold in heaps; will it save us? Have we not as a nation sinned against the Lord? What then will save us? Look to the next chapter, Zeph. 2: 3. "Seek the Lord all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Ye faithful ones, here is hope for you. Seek righteousness and meekness; seek earnestly. Life is earnest, and we must be in earnest if we would live for God. O for earnest preaching! We want

"The pure testimony put forth in the Spirit,
Which cuts like a two-edged sword."

The soothing syrups that we have had in days past will not answer now in this high fever. A powerful disease requires a mighty antidote. We need a remedy prepared by the great Physician, and dealt out by his own commissioned agents; we must have it or we shall relapse and die. Away with all quack nostrums. Let us have a healing balm right from heaven, imbued with the power of the Holy Ghost; that will invigorate and strengthen us for the warfare before us, and purify and prepare us for the coming of our Lord.

Is it Right?

In reading the questions propounded by Bro. Bellows in the last Crisis, I was led to make the following inquiry: Is it right for our preachers to flock together at the east, and there remain, and leave the flock in other sections of the country to take care of themselves? Undoubtedly, brethren, you get more pay for preaching east, but dare you in the face of what you are preaching make that of the most importance?

There are churches in Western New York that would pay any one well to labor among them. You all seem to have a bad impression of us out this way, by some false statements that have appeared in the papers in regard to the churches. While some have been prospering, they have been published as distracted, divided, and given over to the devil, by those *mis*informed, and the statements have never been corrected. Others will pass through the country like a comet, halting in but few places, and publish that all save these few places are wanting. One Bro. in his account represented that Bro. P. A. Smith of Rochester was the only preacher that was doing any thing worthy of note, while Bro. Burr is laboring hard all the time, and so are several others. Brethren ought to be very careful what they write. There are some as good brethren in this section of country as in any other. Bro. Burr says there are churches that have as much life out here as anywhere east.

Christ says, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Don't all stay in one section and leave other sections not salted at all. You profess to have the cause of Christ nearest your heart. Dare you not "trust in the Lord and do good," and believe the rest, that "verily thou shalt be fed," unless you know where the food is coming from? God is true. Believe him. Take the apostles as examples, and "scatter." Go everywhere preaching the word. Don't all stay east where your appointments conflict with each other. Be more consistent, and the "meal shall not fail."

Brethren, look this matter fair in the face. Is it right for you all to stay where you are, and leave so many others so nearly destitute of preaching? The judgment is near. The Judge standeth at the door. Sinners are perishing. Some might yet be reached. Watchmen, will you do your DUTY? God help you all.

Parables

Are always given to illustrate some doctrine or subject which the speaker wishes to communicate. Christ thus taught his disciples and followers, that their memories might the more easily retain any important truth. A parable rightly applied and clearly understood, gives good instruction, and is a lasting illustration of the truth. But if we apply the parable wrongly, if we put on a false construction, it will serve to lead us into an error, and blind us, instead of producing light. Men often explain by fancy, to suit their own notions without any evidence but their own ingenuity, and by this means there will be as many different explanations as there are ingenious men.

The proper way to explain a parable is, to take the word of God as interpreter. Christ has given us a rule by which to understand parables, explaining some himself. The explanation given by Christ of the parable of the tares and the wheat is a rule that will bear in about all cases. That he has given such a rule is very evident in his answer to the disciples when they asked him concerning his parables. Mark 4: 13. "And he said unto them, know ye not this parable? How then will ye know all parables?" That is, if you understand how I explain this parable, you will know how to explain all others; but if you do not understand how I explain this parable, you cannot explain all others.

There is therefore a perfect rule for the explanation of all parables found in the word of God; and that rule is the word of God itself. Christ, in Matthew, by the parable of the sower shows the sower to mean the Son of man. The good seed the children of the kingdom. Tares, children of the wicked one. Harvest, the end of the world. Reapers, the angels.

A parable is an allegory, or a fable. When Christ spoke in parables he most generally took some familiar object, something that was in every day life, to represent truth.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. I.

"It may be that when I become old, my views will change in relation to these things, but I hope that while young the sun will shine upon the future."

Thus spake a youthful herald of the cross, after portraying in glowing colors the glories of the millennial day—the day when all nations would be christianized, and all governments be founded on the principles of the Bible. In connection with the above remark, he exhorted his hearers to see to it that their hope was based upon the "Rock of Eternal truth."

A lovely scene, a splendid landscape, a glorious sunset, is indeed pleasant to look upon; but if it be presented as a correct view of that which is in truth unlovely; if the landscape is indeed only a barren waste, where no sweet flowers bloom, and through which no meandering rivulet doth gently flow; if the sun sets in dark clouds of storm, and instead of its floods of golden light poured forth on a rejoicing earth, the forked lightnings play through gloom profound, and pealing thunders roar in the terrific tempest, then are we deceived in the picture upon which we so admiringly gaze, and better far would it be for us to behold things as they are, though they may be painful to the eye of sense.

We are not permitted to scan the future for ourselves—our eye may not rest upon the scenes which lie before us, no more than we can individually examine the varied undulations upon the surface of the moon, and accurately describe its hills and valleys—gaze with wondering admiration upon Saturn's rings, or view with distinctness each starry world which forms that bright galaxy, the Milky-Way, when the powerful telescope is beyond our reach.

As we are dependent upon those who have through this instrument of wondrous power explored those airy regions which lie far beyond the ken of natural vision, for any knowledge of what is there to be seen, so with the christian of the present age, whose eye hath not, and cannot behold what lies beyond in the future; he can obtain no truthful information of what is there, only as men of olden time were permitted through the prophetic telescope to scan the vista of coming years, and behold present before their vision events that would transpire in other ages, and with the pen of inspiration recorded them with minute exactness for those not privileged like themselves. Their descriptions can be relied on, for they "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

Some, as they looked through the prophetic telescope, beheld the mighty struggle for conquest among the nations of earth—the overthrow of one empire and the establishment of another, until four universal kingdoms should bear sway, but each successive empire decreasing in glory, in strength, from the golden head of the Babylonian kingdom to the iron legs of Roman rule. The gradations are very expressively marked,—gold, silver, brass and iron. Then comes a division, and subdivision, and the weakness resulting therefrom is correctly symbolized by a mixture of iron and miry clay. Ten kingdoms arise on Roman ground. In the days of these kings, the God of heaven sets up a kingdom "which shall be under the whole heaven," and "stand forever." This is symbolized by a stone cut out of a mountain without hands, which smites the image on his feet, and dashes it to pieces, and like the chaff they are scattered, and driven away by the whirlwind.

Another, as he gazes through the telescope, and views distant events casting their shadows before him, sees one angel succeeding another, sounding with trumpets until seven are sounded. He watches with intense interest their flight, and sketches as he beholds the scenes of woe which follow in their course. Four have sounded, and now a sudden announcement breaks upon his ear! Woe! woe! woe unto the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the three angels that are yet to sound!

Again he seizes the prophetic pencil and records the scenes of carnage and sorrow until he reaches the close of the second trumpet. As its sad notes are lingering in the distance, he is told by a heavenly messenger that the "third woe cometh quickly!" Brief is the intermediate pause. Already the blasts of the seventh, the last trump, are heard—startling, awful are the events now revealed to his exploring vision! Nations are [illegible] come—the day of wrath so long [illegible] has come—the dead awake to life—the

Invocation.

"Why tarry the wheels of thy chariot," Lord?
The signs of thine advent are here;
Thy word has assured us "that scoffers abound"
When the latter-day glory is near.
In the memory of man was there ever a time
When so many did run "to and fro"?
Much "knowledge increases"—no limit is known
Of inventions for weal and for woe.
Thy promise to Israel is hastening on,
To the land of their fathers they turn;
A highway shall be made for thy people of old,
And a remnant thy faithfulness learn.
The "perilous times" have already begun,
Men's hearts are now failing with fear;
The horrors of war are abroad in our land—
May the great "Prince of Peace" soon appear.
O! let us unitedly plead in His name
That "Thy kingdom" may speedily come,
The power of Satan forever o'erthrown,
And the will of the Conqueror done.
How happy if we like "wise virgins" be found,
When "at midnight" the Bridegroom is near;—
With "oil in our lamps," replenished and bright,
We would wait thy blest summons to hear.
Though storms are around us, we'll "lift up our heads,"
With Christ, "our redemption" in view,
We'll hide till these dangers be all overpast,
And our God has made "all things new."

Words of Jesus.—John 15: 14.

The words of our Savior are ever precious to every child of God. They love to read and re-read those words that express thoughts once in his mind, and given to them by his lips.

In this chapter our Savior uses metaphorical language, to teach his disciples the relation they sustain to him. He thus discourses:—

"I am the true vine." It is supposed by many of our Bible scholars, that Jesus when he uttered this language was in the temple, and there, while his disciples were pointing out to him its grandeur, his eye rested upon the golden vine that encircled the spacious inner temple, which we are informed was so placed by individuals who in their religious enthusiasm had seen fit from time to time to lay there—a golden leaf or vine, or cluster; until as a monument of their generosity and devotion to the ceremonies of the temple, the golden vine encircled the whole room.

As I before said, it is the opinion of many that the eyes of our Savior rested upon this golden vine when he used this language,—"I am the true vine." Here you see a vine that is of no value save to gratify your visionary sense—but in me, behold the "true vine, and my Father is the husbandman." "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." This explains to us why those persons whom Christ claims as his friends, or in other words are branches of him, ofttimes seem to suffer deep afflictions: they pass through deep waters that they cannot fathom, and at times feel like distrusting their heavenly Father, forgetting that He purgeth every branch that beareth fruit, "that it may bring forth more fruit"; and again, that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Let us strive to keep the teachings of our Savior ever before us, so that when we feel that God is trimming us too much, when we feel the knife, and a beautiful twig is severed here and there, or possibly half of the branch, we may know that wisdom holds the knife, goodness and mercy strike the blow, and these afflictions will cause the remaining branches to put forth new buds, and the fruit will come to far greater perfection; or, in other words, as in the language of our beloved brother Paul, "These light afflictions . . . will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." And let us, as the poet sings—

"Now thank the eternal powers, convinced
That heaven but tries our virtue by affliction;
That oft the cloud which wraps the present hour,
Serves but to brighten all our future days."

And then let us catch the idea in another's song—

"Like a ball that bounds
According to the force with which 'twas thrown;
So in affliction's violence, he that's wise,
The more he's cast down, will the higher rise."

Again,—"Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing." In this passage we have presented the necessity of abiding in Christ, that we may bring forth much fruit. As the natural, literal branch is dependent upon the vine for its fruitfulness, so we, the metaphorical branches of Christ, must receive through him that strength or grace which will enable us to bring forth fruit. How necessary then that we endeavor by every means to seek new supplies of grace. Let us be prayerful. And when we obtain this grace, let us not seek to appropriate it to our own selfishness, but use it for the glory of the Husbandman; not hide the talent given in a napkin, but improve every grace, every power, every talent to his glory.

Our Savior then continues to show that all those who do not abide in him will be treated in the same manner as a dead or dry branch—cut off,—men, or angels, will in the great day of the Lord gather them and cast them into the unquenchable fire, and there they shall be burned,—not as many would have it, eternally in torments; but, as is stated elsewhere, they shall be burned up "root and branch"; after which God will have a clean universe; wickedness will have come to an end, and all nations will have learned to serve and obey Him whose right it is to reign. God will have become all and in all, and then that vision of John's will be brought to a reality—"Every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

Who can picture the glory of such a state? Sin and wickedness have come to a perpetual end. Sickness and death—that cruel enemy, whom some strive to translate into an angel of mercy sent to call us to the arms of Jesus—will have passed away, every tear wiped from the face of God's saints, sighing ceased, sorrow gone, groaning creation silent, God's glory filling the earth, his knowledge spread from sea to sea, mortality swallowed up of life! O! that some artist possessed the gift of portraying to our eye a vision of that glorious land when the curse shall be removed from the footstool of God, and nature once more left free to follow nature's laws, without coming in contact with the baneful influence of the curse that now sets its seal upon every plant and flower. But, no! Could his imagination be expanded until

"'Mid earthly scenes, forgotten and unknown,
He'd live in ideal worlds, and wander there alone;"

and his artistic skill so trained that he could dip his pencil in the glory of the sun-light, and paint on heavenly canvas; still the glory of that future world would far outshine his best productions, and he be left there in solitude, alone, to mourn his want of skill, and we left without the view. But a vision of that glorious state is still in store for those who through "patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality." Not the glory that comes from mortality, but that glory which comes from immortal beings, those who seek to gain glory to God's name, to those who continue to abide in Christ, and thereby bring forth fruit and glorify our heavenly Father.

But to continue the discourse of our Savior. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." What love do we see displayed in this! These words of our Savior ought to send a thrill of joy through the breast of every true disciple, and paint a blush of shame on every hypocritical cheek,—that they should set aside his love as worthless, when we remember that for us he died. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Let us for a moment pause and consider this solemn thought:—how that love for this uncharitable world, this cold, selfish people, was the motive power that worked in the breast of no less a personage than the Son of God—the Son of that Being from whom this world had gone astray—to bring him here to suffer, bleed and die, that we might become reconciled to God; whose arms of mercy still are pleadingly extended to receive his wayward children.

Reader, are you one of the numerous class who feel that they are far from their Father's house? who feel that they are wanderers in the cold cheerlessness of the desert of forgetfulness, having spent their life's best days without remembering this perfect love? Let me here entreat you to pause. Let this solemn thought find lodgment in your mind—"I am a wanderer—a wanderer from what should be my home; and all who are to dwell there must possess a character of loveliness. Shall I return to my Father's house?" Let God's love and mercy call forth a firm decision—"I will." And should these lines meet the eyes of one whose ears are now open to my pleadings,—who is wandering on the mountains of sin,—O! listen to me while I beseech you, as an ambassador of Christ, to "be reconciled to God." He is ready, he is willing, he is able, doubt no more; and let this firm resolve be fixed in your mind also—"I will arise and go to my Father"; and having once set out to find your Father, do not allow the glitter of the world to draw your attention from the object of your pursuit. Do not let the byways lead you astray; but keep your eyes on the mark of your high calling in Christ Jesus, until you shall see before you the pearly gates, and they lift and you are ushered into those golden streets, no more to be suffered to wander in sin or forgetfulness, but to dwell in those mansions that Christ is now preparing for all those who desire to find a home in the kingdom. There we shall see Jesus! O, what a transporting thought!

"If ye love me, keep my commandments." The requirement is just. It is the only way of saving ourselves from the stigma of falsehood. For is it not written, "He that saith I know him and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar"? and how can we love him if we know him not? He has given the greatest evidence of love for us. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." He has given his life for us; he has done all, and more than we could ask or expect. Then brother, sister, let us love him, and loving him, let us not forget those he associated with himself in the near relation of the vine and its branches; but let us love one another "with a pure heart, fervently," so that the prediction of one writer (Dan. 2: 43) will not be fulfilled in us when he in speaking of the last days says, "They shall not cleave one to another."

The Restitution.

A restitution implies the bringing of a thing to its former state, while it admits of a higher elevation, or the obtaining of an intended state of perfection which it had never reached; as for instance, a man can "restore four-fold," and a "withered hand," which had never reached its perfect state, could be "restored whole, like as the other."

1. Earth's restitution will not bring the earth back merely to its former state,—if it should, it would bring back the tree of "knowledge of good and evil,"—but to the position that it would have occupied at the end of man's trial, if he had not fallen.

2. It includes the "holy city," which Adam never saw. Man's restitution will not bring us back merely to the state from which Adam fell,—if it should, we should still be a "little lower than the angels," and on trial,—but to the state which man would have attained unto if Adam had stood the trial; "live forever," being "equal to the angels," undying. Adam's destined state was an immortal one, if he had stood the trial; and his destined home would have been fully adapted to that state, as there is always a fitness of things in the Divine arrangement: and the restitution will carry us forward to that perfect state, not merely to its former step-stone.

3. The restoring of the kingdom to Israel will not bring that kingdom back to its imperfect state, which was only its incipient stage,—if it should, it would be under a mortal king,—but to its perfect state, under the great "Seed" of David, an immortal King, the "King of saints;" and as there is an advance in the state of the King in this restitution, so there will be in the state of the subjects, as there must be an adaptation of things,—thus the immortal "King of Israel" will reign over the immortal "children of Israel," together with the engrafted Gentiles, who will also be immortal; "and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

The "second Adam" has already had his trial, and has obtained an "endless life," and we are now on trial for eternal life; hence, when the restitution under the "second Adam" takes place, we are at once placed forward to the perfect state which would have succeeded Adam's trial, if he had not fallen. Doubtless all the propagation of the human species which God designed to have taken place, was to have preceded the close of Adam's trial, as at the close of his trial he would have been in a condition to "live forever," and the Savior in describing that deathless state, says, "They neither marry, nor are given in marriage." If such is the case in our deathless state, such would have been the case in Adam's deathless state, at the close of his trial; hence, the restitution will place us where there will be no more propagation of the species. How long Adam's trial would have lasted, before reaching the deathless state, we know not; doubtless it was arranged by God, and not left at hap-hazard. Adam was permitted to eat of the tree of life at some time,—not necessarily at any time.

Christ's Commandments.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15: 7.

It is necessary that we should abide in Christ, and that his words should abide in us, if we would claim the promises; for "heaven and earth shall pass away," but my words shall not pass away." We have the assurance that he will hear and answer the prayer of the faithful. Abraham went out not knowing whither he went; but God went with him. His faith was tried when he was commanded to offer up his son for a burnt-offering: but he said, "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt-offering." His prayer was heard; and he beheld a ram caught in a thicket by his horns; and he offered him up in the stead of his son.

If we keep his commandments we have the promise of eternal life, but "the soul that sinneth it shall die." When any are in doubt and temptation, if they keep the commands of God, let them ask him to make the way clear and plain, and it will be done if they are in faith believing. Why is it, when the commands of Christ are so plainly set forth in his Word, that men will go directly against them? "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do, and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5: 19.

But men say we must make exceptions. When Christ says, "Love your enemies," where does he make any exceptions? Nowhere. How utterly inconsistent it is to say we should love our enemies, and at the same time engage in the work of killing them. No murderer hath eternal life. How much better than a murderer is he who goes to kill his fellow men? If a man kills another, he is hung, or put in prison for life; but the more he kills in war the greater hero is he. Nevertheless, it is all the same.

Let us keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and not follow after the traditions of men, but look to Christ for our perfect example. He has promised to be a present help in every time of need. Men make promises, but they do not keep them. Christ's promises never fail. Men say the age of miracles is passed. It is because men do not have the faith which was once delivered to the saints. Faith without works is dead. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

What is Honesty?

To put into a man' pocket more than we take out,—to give ounce for ounce, pound for pound, dollar for dollar,—in fine, to deal justly in this present life with persons and things, is a species of benevolent honesty that largely ingratiates mankind into a close relationship with divine favor; but not so close as to preclude a probable rejection of these observances as actual means of an eternal salvation.

In religion, a christian principle always anticipates temporal justice, in the sense of a revealed law being not an actual law when not comporting favorably with the spirit of Christ and the temper of his commands. Blackstone, that pre-eminent English jurist, says:—"An enactment is not a law when it conflicts with a law of God."

Now taking this christian expose of justice as a basis for honesty, it follows that, while men's opinions may be honest, it is no argument for justification except as they bear the reflex of a higher divine law. What kind of honesty is that which panders to the whims and caprices of a local statute, or has such an exalted idea of justice, mercy and faith as to handle deceitfully the chart of light which has hung out from God's heaven for eighteen hundred years to lure a lost world home? There is no excuse for saying our mental perceptions are so organized that the comprehension of divine things is a speciality.

Evangelists are clamorous to universally concede the fact of Christ's birth; the practicability of his life; and the necessity of his death. But at this juncture, every man departs for his own place. Then commences the war of dogmas. It is just here—at this very point—that Jesus is "wounded in the house of his friends." It is just here where christianity should develop itself in a consolidation of all human proclivities and passions, and converge into one harmonious struggle for everlasting life through the revealed plan of the Savior of this world. But, instead, it is here that fiery faction and sectional strife bellow loudest, and inveterate enmity and animosity erect an impregnable barrier between the people who profess to love Christ better than all the world besides. "He that did eat bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me."

No doubt Jesus prayed with undying solicitude that they (his disciples) might be one, even as he and his Father were one; but I never can believe God will work a miracle that men may consume it upon their lusts. No matter whether such belong to my peculiar faith or not, I believe they are a long way from the kingdom of God. And the only reason why this ocean of difference exists between lovers of truth is, because humility is not a natural conformation of the heart, and they ignore its presence altogether.

I once heard of a man who bore such inveterate animosity against his neighbor, that he unequivocally persisted in wearing a striped shirt, because his neighbor wore a white one. The reason was, he did not want to be in uniform with such a rascal. And this homely illustration is just about as consistent a reason for a plurality of creeds, as anything in the shape of divine authority.

Aside from any private rights of opinion, a man when he takes up the Bible HONESTLY, knows the light before him is God's law revealed in the flesh. His life is an instinctive one of faith in some proposition, whether formally stated or not, which has for its object the highest good. Now if that man refuses to become convinced of its evidences, he carries the lie of a lifetime in his own right hand. He wants to get to heaven, but over a ladder of his own building; and if we cannot all cry shibboleth together, why, we must cry separately, or not cry at all.

If a man gets home to heaven, he has got to get there through a howling wilderness. If it is true that the servant should not be greater than his Lord, then he must be exceedingly poor in heart, and honest in his religious as well as civil relations. And if any man would work the work of Christ, he may expect to hold a position very inferior in men's sight, yet exalted in the sight of God. "He taketh the wise in their own craftiness," and they that handle his word deceitfully.

Another Call for Soldiers.

"Wake up the mighty men: let all the men of war draw near."—JOEL 3: 9.

O what an age is this in which we live! and yet how plainly was it described by the prophets—those men of God who were permitted to look down the stream of time and read the world's history in prospective. What is the topic of the day in the private dwelling, in the shops, in the public thoroughfare, everywhere? War! war!! to arms! to arms!! money for the volunteers—money to encourage men to enlist for the deadly strife. Even the house of God is not exempt from this cry. There are war sermons and war prayers. Men are encouraged on to the battle field by the professed servants of the Prince of peace. They are told to go and save their country from the spoiler's grasp. I wonder if such teachers never read Zeph. 1: 17, 18; "I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord; and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to save them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy."

Do not our rulers walk like blind men? Let our brave men and gallant sons go to the battle field and pour out their blood like water; will it save us? Let us throw down our silver and gold in heaps; will it save us? Have we not as a nation sinned against the Lord? What then will save us? Look to the next chapter, Zeph. 2: 3. "Seek the Lord all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Ye faithful ones, here is hope for you. Seek righteousness and meekness; seek earnestly. Life is earnest, and we must be in earnest if we would live for God. O for earnest preaching! We want

"The pure testimony put forth in the Spirit,
Which cuts like a two-edged sword."

The soothing syrups that we have had in days past will not answer now in this high fever. A powerful disease requires a mighty antidote. We need a remedy prepared by the great Physician, and dealt out by his own commissioned agents; we must have it or we shall relapse and die. Away with all quack nostrums. Let us have a healing balm right from heaven, imbued with the power of the Holy Ghost; that will invigorate and strengthen us for the warfare before us, and purify and prepare us for the coming of our Lord.

Is it Right?

In reading the questions propounded by Bro. Bellows in the last Crisis, I was led to make the following inquiry: Is it right for our preachers to flock together at the east, and there remain, and leave the flock in other sections of the country to take care of themselves? Undoubtedly, brethren, you get more pay for preaching east, but dare you in the face of what you are preaching make that of the most importance?

There are churches in Western New York that would pay any one well to labor among them. You all seem to have a bad impression of us out this way, by some false statements that have appeared in the papers in regard to the churches. While some have been prospering, they have been published as distracted, divided, and given over to the devil, by those *mis*informed, and the statements have never been corrected. Others will pass through the country like a comet, halting in but few places, and publish that all save these few places are wanting. One Bro. in his account represented that Bro. P. A. Smith of Rochester was the only preacher that was doing any thing worthy of note, while Bro. Burr is laboring hard all the time, and so are several others. Brethren ought to be very careful what they write. There are some as good brethren in this section of country as in any other. Bro. Burr says there are churches that have as much life out here as anywhere east.

Christ says, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Don't all stay in one section and leave other sections not salted at all. You profess to have the cause of Christ nearest your heart. Dare you not "trust in the Lord and do good," and believe the rest, that "verily thou shalt be fed," unless you know where the food is coming from? God is true. Believe him. Take the apostles as examples, and "scatter." Go everywhere preaching the word. Don't all stay east where your appointments conflict with each other. Be more consistent, and the "meal shall not fail."

Brethren, look this matter fair in the face. Is it right for you all to stay where you are, and leave so many others so nearly destitute of preaching? The judgment is near. The Judge standeth at the door. Sinners are perishing. Some might yet be reached. Watchmen, will you do your DUTY? God help you all.

Parables

Are always given to illustrate some doctrine or subject which the speaker wishes to communicate. Christ thus taught his disciples and followers, that their memories might the more easily retain any important truth. A parable rightly applied and clearly understood, gives good instruction, and is a lasting illustration of the truth. But if we apply the parable wrongly, if we put on a false construction, it will serve to lead us into an error, and blind us, instead of producing light. Men often explain by fancy, to suit their own notions without any evidence but their own ingenuity, and by this means there will be as many different explanations as there are ingenious men.

The proper way to explain a parable is, to take the word of God as interpreter. Christ has given us a rule by which to understand parables, explaining some himself. The explanation given by Christ of the parable of the tares and the wheat is a rule that will bear in about all cases. That he has given such a rule is very evident in his answer to the disciples when they asked him concerning his parables. Mark 4: 13. "And he said unto them, know ye not this parable? How then will ye know all parables?" That is, if you understand how I explain this parable, you will know how to explain all others; but if you do not understand how I explain this parable, you cannot explain all others.

There is therefore a perfect rule for the explanation of all parables found in the word of God; and that rule is the word of God itself. Christ, in Matthew, by the parable of the sower shows the sower to mean the Son of man. The good seed the children of the kingdom. Tares, children of the wicked one. Harvest, the end of the world. Reapers, the angels.

A parable is an allegory, or a fable. When Christ spoke in parables he most generally took some familiar object, something that was in every day life, to represent truth.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 1.

"It may be that when I become old, my views will change in relation to these things, but I hope that while young the sun will shine upon the future."

Thus spake a youthful herald of the cross, after portraying in glowing colors the glories of the millennial day—the day when all nations would be christianized, and all governments be founded on the principles of the Bible. In connection with the above remark, he exhorted his hearers to see to it that their hope was based upon the "Rock of Eternal truth."

A lovely scene, a splendid landscape, a glorious sunset, is indeed pleasant to look upon; but if it be presented as a correct view of that which is in truth unlovely; if the landscape is indeed only a barren waste, where no sweet flowers bloom, and through which no meandering rivulet doth gently flow; if the sun sets in dark clouds of storm, and instead of its floods of golden light poured forth on a rejoicing earth, the forked lightnings play through gloom profound, and pealing thunders roar in the terrific tempest, then are we deceived in the picture upon which we so admiringly gaze, and better far would it be for us to behold things as they are, though they may be painful to the eye of sense.

We are not permitted to scan the future for ourselves—our eye may not rest upon the scenes which lie before us, no more than we can individually examine the varied undulations upon the surface of the moon, and accurately describe its hills and valleys—gaze with wondering admiration upon Saturn's rings, or view with distinctness each starry world which forms that bright galaxy, the Milky-Way, when the powerful telescope is beyond our reach.

As we are dependent upon those who have through this instrument of wondrous power explored those airy regions which lie far beyond the ken of natural vision, for any knowledge of what is there to be seen, so with the christian of the present age, whose eye hath not, and cannot behold what lies beyond in the future; he can obtain no truthful information of what is there, only as men of olden time were permitted through the prophetic telescope to scan the vista of coming years, and behold present before their vision events that would transpire in other ages, and with the pen of inspiration recorded them with minute exactness for those not privileged like themselves. Their descriptions can be relied on, for they "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

Some, as they looked through the prophetic telescope, beheld the mighty struggle for conquest among the nations of earth—the overthrow of one empire and the establishment of another, until four universal kingdoms should bear sway, but each successive empire decreasing in glory, in strength, from the golden head of the Babylonian kingdom to the iron legs of Roman rule. The gradations are very expressively marked,—gold, silver, brass and iron. Then comes a division, and subdivision, and the weakness resulting therefrom is correctly symbolized by a mixture of iron and miry clay. Ten kingdoms arise on Roman ground. In the days of these kings, the God of heaven sets up a kingdom "which shall be under the whole heaven," and "stand forever." This is symbolized by a stone cut out of a mountain without hands, which smites the image on his feet, and dashes it to pieces, and like the chaff they are scattered, and driven away by the whirlwind.

Another, as he gazes through the telescope, and views distant events casting their shadows before him, sees one angel succeeding another, sounding with trumpets until seven are sounded. He watches with intense interest their flight, and sketches as he beholds the scenes of woe which follow in their course. Four have sounded, and now a sudden announcement breaks upon his ear! Woe! woe! woe unto the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the three angels that are yet to sound!

Again he seizes the prophetic pencil and records the scenes of carnage and sorrow until he reaches the close of the second trumpet. As its sad notes are lingering in the distance, he is told by a heavenly messenger that the "third woe cometh quickly." Brief is the intermediate pause. Already the blasts of the seventh, the last trumpet, are heard—startling, awful are the events now revealed to his exploring vision. Nations [illegible] wrath of God has come—the day of wrath so long heralded has come—the dead awake to life—the prophets who suffered for the truth now receive their reward—yea, all who fear God, both small and great, are now rewarded with glory, honor, immortality and eternal life—while those who corrupted the earth, fall beneath the avenging sword! The Prince of the kings of the earth now takes to himself his great power and reigns a universal conqueror. The inheritance of the heathen long since bequeathed is now received, and their fate long since decreed, is now met. Like a potter's vessel they are dashed into shivers, for thus was he commanded of the Father. And now the shout of triumph goes up before the great white throne: "Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! M. D. W.

A Leaf from Dr. Cox.

"Our precious sister left us on Lord's day: from the sublunary type to the eternal archetype; from serenity and trust, from submission and hope, to the full vision, fruition, perfection of God! She joined the spirits of just men made perfect, in the highest heavens; the general assembly, the church of the first born, who are written, that is, actually, personally, enrolled in the heavens. It is not, as often misquoted, whose NAMES are written there! This is true of all christians before they die; before they are born! Luke 10: 20; Rev. 13: 8, 20: 12, 21: 27. But they are written there—when, instantly at death, they arrive there! That heathenish lie of purgatory, so money-making to its inventors, was never known or heard in the church till Gregory the Great invented it, about the end of the sixth century. So truly now; "Blessed ARE the dead who die in the Lord! That expression, church of the first born, is very glorious! What is thus "dead" among mortals, is "born" among immortals; privation here, is accession there! Beside, all there congregated, since Abel first received in glory the welcome of his Redeemer, are collectively but the first fruits, the heralds, the pledges, of an unspeakably greater and vaster concourse—successively and soon to follow them. They are the first born; the eldest there; the venerable precursors: but how many consecrated millions are yet to be born in glory, till the MILLENNIUM shall have colonized there all its countless hosts, its accomplished multitudes, even to the last born: after the resurrection is complete, after the translations in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, are finished—all! yes! The dead are already the living; the living are alone the dying. Let us be prepared to join that glorious company, congregated in such vastitude, in such blessedness, before the throne; where eternity only can measure the lifetime of their perfection!"

The above is extracted from an obituary of one of my own relatives, quite recently prepared by the Rev. Dr. Cox. Dr. C. is generally considered one of the strongest minded men and greatest Biblical scholars of the day. And yet, with all his learning and talent, with the high sounding words and splendidly formed sentences of this obituary, what utter contradiction of gospel sentiment and perversion of apostolic teaching is manifest. He asserts that "instantly at death they (the saints) arrive in heaven." That all are there, from Abel through the long catalogue of holy men to the end of time. And where can he find proof of such an assertion, except in Pagan lore, the science of Spiritualism, or the vain imagination of a heated brain?

The Bible most certainly represents that "cloud of witnesses" as "sleeping in Jesus," awaiting the last great change, when "this mortal shall put on immortality"—that they "died in faith," not having received the promise (eternal life) because "they without us should not be made perfect." In what way "perfect?" That which the apostle speaks of in Philippians as having "not already attained," but is pressing on, "if by any means (he) might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." According to Scripture, perfection comes at the resurrection, not, as Dr. C. asserts, at the moment of death.

Then look at the fallacy, the rank Spiritualism, of another assertion;—"The dead are already the living, the living are alone the dying." "The act of dying," said A. J. Davis, "is but stepping from the kitchen into the parlor." Death is not death. This is the assertion. And is there not just as much wisdom and truthfulness in asserting that "black is white, and white is black—light is darkness, and darkness is light?" What utter absurdity in such theology! And yet it is believed by a multitude, by a majority of the present day. And if told that death means actual death, and life means life, they greatly wonder, and perhaps denominate such talk as heresy.

Dr. C.'s mental endowments and scholarly attainments are certainly to be admired, and his colloquial eloquence has ever won the admiration and delight of all who have been favored with it. Yet we must protest against these sentiments, and are fully confident, that even a small intellect, which is in harmony with Scripture on the doctrine of Immortality, could easily confute the learned Dr. in his arguments upon that point. A Goliah may stand towering in his pride, but the sling of a ruddy youth which is guided by power from above, may overwhelm him.

Truth is harmonious, glorious, and in perfect keeping with the character of God himself. A. C. JUDSON.

Plainville Campmeeting.

The campmeeting at Plainville was a good one. All expressed the same opinion. The meeting was in a pleasant grove, by the side of the R. R., about eighty rods south of the village. We did not arrive till Friday night, when we listened to a practical discourse from Bro. J. Babcock, from Warehouse Point, Ct.

Saturday, 20th. We had good meetings all day. The writer spoke in the morning, Bro. Hastings in the afternoon, and Bro. Munger in the evening. We noticed here, as in all the meetings we have attended of late, one excellent feature: the children of the Lord are seeking to be wholly his; examining their own lives, instead of sitting in judgment on their neighbors. They act like men and women who expect to see the Savior soon, and purpose to be ready to meet him. On this account, a heavenly spirit pervaded the meeting. Christian kindness and brotherly love shone out with charming effect, convincing the skeptic of the reality of the christian religion, more than the most labored argument, where love is wanting.

Another excellent characteristic of the meeting, which we noticed, was a disposition to confess faults, and forsake them. This result always denotes a genuine work of the Spirit of the Lord, and ever produces good fruits. There were many hearty confessions which made tearful eyes, and rejoicing hearts. When we have departed from right doing, this is the only way by which we can return to the narrow path that leadeth unto life. So long as we are unwilling to confess our faults, we can make no progress in the christian race. We can run no better than a prisoner with cannon balls tied to his feet. We fall at every effort. Confession of wrongs is mortifying; but purifying and elevating. "The old man" sinks, and the new one rises. Sorrow departs, and joy returns. Darkness is turned to day. The cup of remorse is filled with peace. Thus it was, in many cases, at this meeting.

It was a common saying,—"I feel it good to be here." It was often said, "I am glad I came to this meeting." It was a season of happy reunion of many warm hearts, which became more closely united than ever, after mingling their songs and prayers in holy devotion before mercy's throne. Reference was often made to a campmeeting held in this vicinity some nineteen years ago, when the Spirit of the Lord was manifested in a most signal manner, and many were comforted in receiving the "blessed hope" of living to see Jesus come. Though "some are fallen asleep," yet many continue till the present time, who are settled beyond a doubt that their redemption is at hand.

We were pleased to find the same feeling here, among the Lord's children as in other places, that as the perils of these last days increase, and the enemy grows bolder and more daring, so their firmness, confidence in Christ, calmness and evenness of temper, and a willingness to suffer for Jesus grows stronger also. As the storm clouds of war and bloodshed increase, so does their composure of mind. While the men of the world are trembling with increasing fear at the sight of approaching events, the saints are lifting up their heads with more joy than ever, feeling sure of speedy deliverance. Their prospects never looked brighter; while those of the world never appeared darker. As the fiery cloud gave light to Israel's hosts when leaving the land of bondage, but only increased the darkness of their pursuing enemies; so, now, the signs, that give positive evidence to the faithful souls that our Redeemer is about to return to earth again, only serve to blind those who conform to this world, and have turned aside from truth to fables. We had vivid proof of this fact during this meeting. It was heart-rending to see the blindness of many, who once saw the light, but refused to walk in it; and are now left in gloomy night, in the hour of greatest danger. They have chosen their place among "the foolish virgins;" preferring the honors and pleasures of this world, to the glory of the coming One. O that some trumpet might awake them ere the Lord appears in the clouds of heaven, when it will be too late—for ever too late.

Sunday, 21st. The day was fine, and early greeted by many joyful hearts. The weather was delightful during the entire meeting. We had no rain nor chilling winds. It seemed as if heaven smiled upon our tented grove. At eight o'clock, this morning, we assembled for a love-feast, when we enjoyed another of those heavenly scenes of which we have spoken when giving an account of other meetings. Preaching by Brn. Munger and Hastings. Large audiences listened with deep attention to the burning truths presented by the faithful watchmen. It was most clearly shown that the signs of the times indicate that we are very near the end of the present dispensation. It seemed strange to us that any one could resist such an amount of evidence as was laid before the people by Bro. Hastings; but when we remember how the professed church rejected all the signs and wonders connected with the first advent of our Savior; and were not satisfied till he hung upon the cross; and also consider that men are to "wax worse and worse" "in the last days," we then saw we had nothing better to expect than what we now see.

We closed our excellent meeting with the sacrament of the Lord's supper, where we were comforted with the hope of soon being at "the marriage supper of the Lamb," when no idle spectators will crowd to witness the happy scene. We parted with bright hopes of a speedy reunion in "the camp of the saints," where partings are o'er, and sorrows are forever unknown.

Drafting.

We hear of a few of the Lord's children who have been drafted. It seems very wrong to attempt to compel christians to kill their fellow beings, whom Jesus has instructed them to love. We are glad to learn that most of those who are looking for the coming of the Savior are resolved, in his strength, to die for obeying Christ in refusing to use carnal weapons, rather than to please wicked men, disobey the Lord, and lose eternal life. It is evident we have come to a time, when, if we seek to save our lives, we shall lose them. Let us give them up freely for Jesus' sake, and then all will be well. Men can not fight, so long as they are filled with the Spirit of Christ. While we have no sympathy with Southern slavery and secession, and wish they might come to a perpetual end; we have an equal abhorrence of all fighting, and dare not "do evil that good may come;" because the Scriptures say of those who act on this principle, that their "damnation is just." We are to avoid the appearance of evil.

The question is frequently asked, "What shall we do if drafted?"—Obey the Lord. If brought before magistrates, look to the Lord for wisdom to answer wisely, and trust all the consequences in his hands. "Stand up for the right if the heavens fall." It is no time now to be faint-hearted. When we are required to disobey our Captain, and kill our fellow men, let our reply be, we cannot fight. We are true men, and love our country; but love the kingdom of the Lord better; and cannot barter it away to save this short life. We prefer death in its most horrid form, rather than to fight with carnal weapons, and lose eternal life. Hence, if drafted, we must be in subjection to the powers that be, and suffer, like the martyrs, whatever they are pleased to put upon us for refusing to kill our neighbors. Let every soldier of the cross be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Be kind, long-suffering, gentle, but decided. Give up to Jesus, and trust all in his hands, and victory is ours, with eternal life and glory in the everlasting kingdom.

Date of Paper.

We announced that we had concluded to date our paper on Tuesday instead of Wednesday, because we have our business matters so arranged as to have it go to press uniformly on that day. This is what we have been doing for some time in the past. We learn some thought they should receive it one day earlier. We wish to correct that impression. The work at the office is all done the same time as usual, so that there will be no change in the time of mailing. It is well known that it is the practice of many who publish weekly papers, to date them nearly a week in advance, so that a paper dated on Saturday, the 28th, was completed and mailed on Tuesday the 24th. We have concluded to date ours when we stop putting articles into the paper; that is, on Tuesday morning of each week. Consequently you get the news up to that time; and if we should date our paper several days ahead, it would not give you any later news.

Army Chaplains.

We have often thought of the strange position of army chaplains. There are members of the same church in the opposing armies, with their chaplains, praying for the success of their respective regiments. Step into the camps of each on a Sabbath morning, and listen to the frequent prayers of each, as they plead with the meek and lowly Jesus,—the Prince of peace,—entreating him to give success to the embattled hosts during the day. At night, after a drawn battle, in which ten thousand have been slaughtered on each side, hear the hearty thanksgiving in the evening prayers for the success which has attended the day of bloody deeds; and then think of Jesus' instructions to love our enemies, and do good to those who despitefully use us, in connection with his long-suffering, and patient endurance of all the ill treatment of his enemies, even to crucifixion, and remember, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." From the foregoing passage, we are driven to the following conclusion:—Those who fight, or voluntarily aid in sustaining war, prove one of two points; either that Christ's kingdom is "of this world," or else they are not his servants. As Christ positively affirms that his "kingdom is not of this world," then it is settled that those who fight are not his servants. We find the whole New Testament harmonizing with this conclusion. We leave the reader to choose his own position, and trust the Lord will aid him to put on the whole christian armor, and "fight the good fight of faith."

We clipped the following from the New York Sun of Sept. 9th, '62. It is a part of a report of a sermon preached to H. W. Beecher's congregation, the Sunday evening previous, by C. H. Buckley, chaplain to the First Regiment of the "Sickles' Brigade." When speaking of the officers, politicians, the newspapers, and the administration, he says:—

"All are to blame. They do not recognize the hand of God. True, there are chaplains in the army, yet they are but as the fifth wheel to a coach, for they cannot perform their duties to the soldier in active service, or the wounded in hospitals, while they are in the field. Some of them are indifferent to religion, while others are true ministers of God. And thus, though there is an outward show of religion, there is no true recognition of the power of God. No outward religious ceremonies will do; the recognition of God must be in the hearts of all. Some had scoffed at this, like the General who said 'God was on the side of the greatest numbers and the heaviest artillery.' He certainly was not so in the revolution, and he certainly does not appear to be so now. God intends to strip us of our pride, and to crucify us in our wealth. He shows to us that this nation must venerate his name. There is no army in the world where profanity prevails so much as in ours. From morn till night it flows from the lips not only of soldiers but officers—many of these, too, having been members of the church. . .

Drunkenness, too, prevails very much. At the battle of Fair Oaks a distinguished General of Division was so much under the influence of intoxicating drink as to be observed by all. His Adjutant General, too, was so overcome, that, believing him to be wounded, he was placed on a stretcher and carried to the rear, but when the surgeon examined him he was beastly drunk. (Sensation.) His young Aid de Camp, too, who was previously unused to it, was so drunk as to be unable to sit on his horse, 'and,' said the preacher 'I saw him.'"

The President's Proclamation.

The President has just issued an important proclamation. The following extract contains the principal matter of interest. It shows he has finally decided to let the bondman go free, if the Union can be preserved in no other way, as he stated in his letter to Mr. Greely. We apprehend that all efforts to preserve the Union will be like one to save a sinking ship when the water gushes in twice as fast as they can pump it out.

A PROCLAMATION.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22, 1862.

I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America, and Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy thereof, do hereby proclaim and declare that hereafter, as heretofore, the war will be prosecuted for the object of practically restoring the Constitutional relation between the United States and the people thereof in which States that relation is, or may be, suspended or disturbed; that it is my purpose, upon the next meeting of Congress, to again recommend the adoption of a practical measure tendering pecuniary aid to the free acceptance or rejection of all the slave States, so called, the people whereof may not then be in rebellion against the United States, and which States may then have voluntarily adopted or thereafter may voluntarily adopt the immediate or gradual abolishment of slavery within their respective limits; and that the efforts to colonize persons of African descent, with their consent, upon the continent or elsewhere, with the previously obtained consent of the governments existing there, will be continued; that on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty three, all persons held as slaves within any State, or any designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then thenceforward and forever free, and the executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom; that the Executive will, on the first day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof respectively shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof have not been in rebellion against the United States.

To Brn. in Western N. Y. and Pa.

In a few weeks I hope, if the Lord will, to be able to visit you. Will all who have written me, let me know if they have any thing further to say about the arrangement of meetings, etc.? Direct at once to Boston, Mass. My time will be short, but I wish to do all that I can while there. May God guide me in all things.

The Christian Publication Society.

This Society commences operations for another year under hopeful circumstances. Its financial condition is encouraging, and those associated in its administration are united in an earnest desire to do something which will honor God and benefit mankind. After considerable delay, it seems to be decided that the Publication Society is to be a Publication Society, and is to issue tracts and other publications which it is hoped will subserve the cause of truth. Seeing at length good ground to hope that this original intention will be realized, I am glad to give the enterprise my hearty co-operation.

I had some time ago, after several efforts to transfer my tract publishing to the Society, concluded that under present circumstances it was best for me to retain it in my own hands, and I informed the Society that I had no more offers to make in that direction. With this view I removed to Boston with the intention of pushing the matter through to the best of my ability, and working while the day should last. The earnest request of the Society has led me to reconsider my determination, and an agreement has been entered into for the transfer of my entire list of TRACTS into the hands of the Christian Publication Society. This to me has been a matter of indifference, for, situated as I now am, I could carry forward the business much more conveniently than in time past. I have, however, yielded to the desires of the Committee, my own judgment agreeing with theirs, that the interests of the cause of truth might thereby be promoted.

From this time, therefore, I do not expect to issue tracts to any considerable extent, unless circumstances may demand some change in the arrangement. My tracts will be under the control of the Christian Publication Society, and orders for them should be addressed to the agent, at the office of the World's Crisis. This new arrangement will involve increased outlay, but when once the stereotype plates are under the control of the Society, they can issue tracts at prices much less than even the previous very low rates. If the brethren and friends at large will take hold of the matter, the Society may soon be able to announce a full supply of tracts on hand and for sale at prices far lower than ever have been sold in this country. They now furnish 1800 pages for $1.00; they will probably furnish 2,000 to 2,400 pages for $1.00 when they are once fairly under way, provided the brethren and friends rally to the support of the Society, and raise the funds necessary to place the whole upon a stable basis.

There is now a good stock of tracts on hand ready for distribution, and orders for the same are solicited; and while these are being sent out, it is proposed to make immediate efforts to replace them as soon as they are exhausted. The brethren have all done nobly in their efforts to help the work along; but this warfare demands fresh sacrifice, and new efforts from day to day.

At the last meeting of the Christian Publication Society it was voted to raise $1.000 for the purpose of issuing tracts new and old, for general distribution with or without price. All previous subscriptions upon the tract fund of the C. P. S. are requested to be sent in immediately to the agent, Miles Grant. And in addition to these sums already subscribed, we propose to raise $1.000 to carry on this work. I have agreed to superintend the printing and publishing of all tracts which may be needed for the coming year free of charge to the Society. They will therefore be furnished at the actual cost of manufacturing; and then the Society will sell them as cheaply as is consistent with the safe transaction of its business.

The question will arise in some minds, Can we raise $1.000 for this purpose? Of course we can. There are now three thousand or more subscribers to the Crisis. Were they to give one third of a dollar each, the amount would be raised. There are probably, at least ten thousand readers of the Crisis. If these would give ten cents each, the amount would be forth-coming directly. But we do not expect that all will do this. But there are brethren who will esteem it a privilege to take hold of this work heartily. A thousand dollars is a small amount. Many a man has lost as much in some paltry speculation which neither benefitted man nor glorified God. Many thousands of dollars are spent every year in foolish, expensive habits, and for things which minister only to vicious and depraved appetites. There are many men who receive the Crisis who could each give a thousand dollars, and feel and be better off for the gift. They would have less to think of, less to worry over, and less fear of the depreciation of property from the effects of the war. Men are pouring out their treasure like water to carry on the sanguinary contest that prevails; now let the sons of peace be steadfast and diligent in their work, that when their Master appears they may be found faithful. Judging from all the aspects of the age, the signs of these last perilous times, we are nearing that point when all earth's treasures and possessions will perish and pass away. In vain will men seek for comfort in hoarded wealth, or for deliverance from coming ills in the gains which they have acquired. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath.

Many a man can look back upon some speculation, upon some business operation, some swindle by which he has lost his one, five, ten, twenty, or even fifty thousand dollars; and now, when all is gone, he says, "I wish that money was laid up in heaven. I wish it was lent to the Lord. But it is too late: the Devil has got it, and I cannot recover it." Let others who have this world's goods be warned in time; and let us each strive with noble zeal to lay all we have upon the altar of God, and have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done what we could. Men who choose to do so keep their money till the tax-gatherer takes it, and the extortioner catcheth all that they have. But those who are guided by the principles of true prudence will consult the word of God; will lay not up for themselves treasures upon the earth where moth and rust corrupt, where thieves break through and steal, and where earth's final fires shall lick up earth's treasures like the dust. They will sell that they have, and give alms; they will provide bags that wax not old, a treasure in heaven, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. Then, disencumbered from earthly burdens, they will take heed lest at any time their hearts be overcharged with worldly cares; they will stand, having their loins girt about, and their lights burning, and they like unto men that wait for their Lord.

When the last terrible convulsion comes, compared with which all commercial panics, all financial revulsions, all sudden depreciations, shall seem but trifles light as air, when the wealth of the world shall perish, and all the pomp and pride and glory of man shall pass away; when kings and beggars shall stand upon a level, and the miser, going to the judgment seat shall have his coffers unlocked, his gold uncounted; when all that man has coveted shall be torn from his grasp, and all that he has delighted in shall be blighted in his presence, I would in that day have nothing to lose, but everything to gain; I would look upon this ruined world and thank God that my possessions are not here; I would have them safely transferred beyond the terrible scenes of judgment and of wrath, and laid up among those riches of divine blessing which are eternal in the heavens.

May God help us all to do what he would have us in this matter, and bring us at last to know that we have not labored in vain in the Lord. Your brother in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS.

Tracts for Free Distribution.

The Christian Publication Society has now on hand some hundreds of thousands of pages of tracts. These must not be idle. They will be sent to any address at the rate of 1300 pages for $1.00, post-paid. They will be sent by Express 1800 pages for $1.00. Let every one who can, purchase a dollar's worth, or more, of these tracts, and scatter them in their own neighborhoods, or among their friends.

Persons ordering tracts by mail should write their name, Post Office, County and State very plainly, and state about how many tracts they want. Persons ordering by Express should give Post Office, County and State, and also the nearest Express office and depot, that we may know how to send them.

Tracts will also be sent without price to all who are unable to pay for them. Let such feel no hesitancy about sending for them. There are quantities of them which have been purchased expressly for the use of such individuals. There are some brethren who are unable to go out themselves and distribute tracts, but they are willing to give their substance that others may distribute. Some are able to buy more tracts than they have time to distribute, and there are others who have more time to distribute than they have means to buy. The C. P. Society receives the donations of those who are willing to give, and disburses them in the shape of tracts to those who are willing to distribute them. Persons who wish tracts for themselves, or for their friends, or for ministers, can have them sent directly to the parties whom they wish should read them. Persons having friends in the army can order tracts sent directly from the Crisis office to them. In such cases they should give the name plainly; also the company, regiment, and division where their friends are serving. Let no one who wishes tracts, or can use them to advantage, neglect to send for them. They are published for the especial benefit of such persons! and by the time the present stock is gone, we intend to have another abundant supply. Persons who order tracts without sending the money should give such a statement of their condition as will enable us to judge how many it is proper to send them. Persons sometimes write, "Please send me some tracts." The letter comes, no one knows anything about the person writing, and no one can tell how many tracts should be sent. It may be in some locality where a dollar's worth would be all that could be conveniently distributed. On the other hand, the applicant may be a preacher, or a person so situated that they could scatter ten or twenty dollars' worth to great advantage. But it is not to be expected that the Editor or those having charge of the distribution will know all about the circumstances of every person applying. And the only safe rule is for all persons in sending to state as definitely as they can what they desire, and how extensive their opportunities are. In this way we can be the judge what should be done in the case.

Tracts when ordered by mail should be ordered in quantities worth not less than thirty cents, as the expense of sending them is then much smaller. Tracts are sent by mail, in packages of eight ounces, or over, at a half cent per ounce. If sent singly, the postage is one cent for each tract, which is twice or three times as much as when sent in packages. The expense of sending them by mail is probably one or two cents per hundred pages. But to save all perplexity when they are sent by mail, 1300 pages are sent for one dollar. Persons who order three to five or more dollars worth, will find it cheaper to have them come by Express, unless they live at very great distances from Boston, from the fact that by Express they get five hundred pages more for a dollar than when they order them by mail, while, when sent by mail, every additional ounce increases the expense; and on the other hand, when sent by Express, five, or perhaps ten dollars' worth, may be sent for about the same price as one or two dollars' worth. Let us hear without delay from all who desire tracts. Persons wishing tracts which I have heretofore published, will find the Publication Society ready to supply them all at the same rates that I have furnished them. They will therefore direct all their orders to MILES GRANT, Office of World's Crisis, Boston, Mass. I shall still continue to issue works and pamphlets as heretofore; but if the Lord will, I shall transfer the tract work into the hands of the Society as soon as practicable.

A word to the friends of the Crisis.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Now that we have had our desire granted relative to retaining Bro. Grant as Editor, is there not danger of our sitting down with so much ease as measurably to forget wherein our great strength lieth? Has there not been much prayer offered for a few months past, relative to this matter? I know there has been some; I believe (from an array of testimony I cannot doubt) there has been much. This family organ of communication is very dear to us, and we have felt a prayerful anxiety for its useful and peaceful continuance. Word from far, both epistolary and oral, comes to our ears:—"We think much of the Crisis—it is the right kind of a missionary to send round—hope Bro. Grant will continue to be its Editor." I hope so, too, as long as it is so apparent that he is occupying the place assigned him by the Great Shepherd. But, if the time should ever come that this Great Shepherd would make a change, I hope he will step aside with as little regretful envying as John Baptist did when he saw the time had come for him to decrease, while another should increase!

Things now look quite prosperous relative to the financial condition of the paper. Perhaps the Crisis never saw a brighter day than the present. Its subscribers are increasing almost miraculously considering the times: and now is the danger. Danger of what? Of forgetting to pray for the paper and its Editor. Prayer should be offered that the contributors, as well as Editor, may offer proper viands, and especially that discernment may be given the chief servant, if any "wild gourds" should be offered, so that there be no "death in the pot." Yes, pray,—that nothing proper may be lost, overlooked, or ruled out that will benefit the household; and that no poisonous bit may find its way in.

If ever one needed wisdom from above it is an Editor of a religious paper. There is such a variety of tastes to serve; from those whose appetites are sufficiently keen and healthful, by proper exercise as well as wholesome diet, to relish the plain and simple truths of the Bible, to those who have been overfed, observed sedentary habits, and thus become so dyspeptic that they think they must have sweetmeats, to give tone or zest to their appetites.

Yes, pray for our Editor instead of provoking him with complaints. We read in the good book of the meekest man in the world being provoked by God's professed children to speak unadvisedly with his lips. What if not more than half the church in the wilderness had been agreed to pray for their overtaxed leader? Think you not the calamity would have been averted?

At a later period there was a prophet who had his request granted of possessing a double portion of Elijah's spirit, so that he must have been mighty, for Elijah raised the dead and called fire down from heaven and consumed four hundred false prophets at a time!! Well, this great prophet was so urged and teased by some fifty theological students to do what he knew was not best, that he finally gave up to them for once. Perhaps he thought he might appear "illiberal" if he did not give in to those who differed in opinion.

Yes,—however good, however great,—mortals, especially those who deal out food to God's household, need much of God's prophets who suffered for the truth now receive their reward—yea, all who fear God, both small and great, are now rewarded with glory, honor, immortality and eternal life—while those who corrupted the earth, fall beneath the avenging sword! The Prince of the kings of the earth now takes to himself his great power and reigns a universal conqueror. The inheritance of the heathen long since bequeathed is now received, and their fate long since decreed, is now met. Like a potter's vessel they are dashed into shivers, for thus was he commanded of the Father. And now the shout of triumph goes up before the great white throne: "Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! M. D. W.

A Leaf from Dr. Cox.

"Our precious sister left us on Lord's day: from the sublunary type to the eternal archetype; from serenity and trust, from submission and hope, to the full vision, fruition, perfection of God! She joined the spirits of just men made perfect, in the highest heavens; the general assembly, the church of the first born, who are written, that is, actually, personally, enrolled in the heavens. It is not, as often misquoted, whose NAMES are written there! This is true of all christians before they die; before they are born! Luke 10: 20; Rev. 13: 8, 20: 12, 21: 27. But they are written there—when, instantly at death, they arrive there! That heathenish lie of purgatory, so money-making to its inventors, was never known or heard in the church till Gregory the Great invented it, about the end of the sixth century. So truly now; "Blessed ARE the dead who die in the Lord! That expression, church of the first born, is very glorious! What is thus "dead" among mortals, is "born" among immortals; privation here, is accession there! Beside, all there congregated, since Abel first received in glory the welcome of his Redeemer, are collectively but the first fruits, the heralds, the pledges, of an unspeakably greater and vaster concourse—successively and soon to follow them. They are the first born; the eldest there; the venerable precursors: but how many consecrated millions are yet to be born in glory, till the MILLENNIUM shall have colonized there all its countless hosts, its accomplished multitudes, even to the last born: after the resurrection is complete, after the translations in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, are finished—all! yes! The dead are already the living; the living are alone the dying. Let us be prepared to join that glorious company, congregated in such vastitude, in such blessedness, before the throne; where eternity only can measure the lifetime of their perfection!"

The above is extracted from an obituary of one of my own relatives, quite recently prepared by the Rev. Dr. Cox. Dr. C. is generally considered one of the strongest minded men and greatest Biblical scholars of the day. And yet, with all his learning and talent, with the high sounding words and splendidly formed sentences of this obituary, what utter contradiction of gospel sentiment and perversion of apostolic teaching is manifest. He asserts that "instantly at death they (the saints) arrive in heaven." That all are there, from Abel through the long catalogue of holy men to the end of time. And where can he find proof of such an assertion, except in Pagan lore, the science of Spiritualism, or the vain imagination of a heated brain?

The Bible most certainly represents that "cloud of witnesses" as "sleeping in Jesus," awaiting the last great change, when "this mortal shall put on immortality"—that they "died in faith," not having received the promise (eternal life) because "they without us should not be made perfect." In what way "perfect?" That which the apostle speaks of in Philippians as having "not already attained," but is pressing on, "if by any means (he) might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." According to Scripture, perfection comes at the resurrection, not, as Dr. C. asserts, at the moment of death.

Then look at the fallacy, the rank Spiritualism, of another assertion;—"The dead are already the living, the living are alone the dying." "The act of dying," said A. J. Davis, "is but stepping from the kitchen into the parlor." Death is not death. This is the assertion. And is there not just as much wisdom and truthfulness in asserting that "black is white, and white is black—light is darkness, and darkness is light?" What utter absurdity in such theology! And yet it is believed by a multitude, by a majority of the present day. And if told that death means actual death, and life means life, they greatly wonder, and perhaps denominate such talk as heresy.

Dr. C.'s mental endowments and scholarly attainments are certainly to be admired, and his colloquial eloquence has ever won the admiration and delight of all who have been favored with it. Yet we must protest against these sentiments, and are fully confident that even a small intellect, which is in harmony with Scripture on the doctrine of Immortality, could easily confute the learned Dr. in his arguments upon that point. A Goliah may stand towering in his pride, but the sling of a ruddy youth which is guided by power from above, may overwhelm him.

Truth is harmonious, glorious, and in perfect keeping with the character of God himself. A. C. JUDSON.

Plainville Campmeeting.

The campmeeting at Plainville was a good one. All expressed the same opinion. The meeting was in a pleasant grove, by the side of the R. R., about eighty rods south of the village. We did not arrive till Friday night, when we listened to a practical discourse from Bro. J. Babcock, from Warehouse Point, Ct.

Saturday, 20th. We had good meetings all day. The writer spoke in the morning, Bro. Hastings in the afternoon, and Bro. Munger in the evening. We noticed here, as in all the meetings we have attended of late, one excellent feature: the children of the Lord are seeking to be wholly his; examining their own lives, instead of sitting in judgment on their neighbors. They act like men and women who expect to see the Savior soon, and purpose to be ready to meet him. On this account, a heavenly spirit pervaded the meeting. Christian kindness and brotherly love shone out with charming effect, convincing the skeptic of the reality of the christian religion, more than the most labored argument, where love is wanting.

Another excellent characteristic of the meeting, which we noticed, was a disposition to confess faults, and forsake them. This result always denotes a genuine work of the Spirit of the Lord, and ever produces good fruits. There were many hearty confessions which made tearful eyes, and rejoicing hearts. When we have departed from right doing, this is the only way by which we can return to the narrow path that leadeth unto life. So long as we are unwilling to confess our faults, we can make no progress in the christian race. We can run no better than a prisoner with cannon balls tied to his feet. We fall at every effort. Confession of wrongs is mortifying; but purifying and elevating. "The old man" sinks, and the new one rises. Sorrow departs, and joy returns. Darkness is turned to day. The cup of remorse is filled with peace. Thus it was, in many cases, at this meeting.

It was a common saying,—"I feel it good to be here." It was often said, "I am glad I came to this meeting." It was a season of happy reunion of many warm hearts, which became more closely united than ever, after mingling their songs and prayers in holy devotion before mercy's throne. Reference was often made to a campmeeting held in this vicinity some nineteen years ago, when the Spirit of the Lord was manifested in a most signal manner, and many were comforted in receiving the "blessed hope" of living to see Jesus come. Though "some are fallen asleep," yet many continue till the present time, who are settled beyond a doubt that their redemption is at hand.

We were pleased to find the same feeling here, among the Lord's children as in other places, that as the perils of these last days increase, and the enemy grows bolder and more daring, so their firmness, confidence in Christ, calmness and evenness of temper, and a willingness to suffer for Jesus grows stronger also. As the storm clouds of war and bloodshed increase, so does their composure of mind. While the men of the world are trembling with increasing fear at the sight of approaching events, the saints are lifting up their heads with more joy than ever, feeling sure of speedy deliverance. Their prospects never looked brighter; while those of the world never appeared darker. As the fiery cloud gave light to Israel's hosts when leaving the land of bondage, but only increased the darkness of their pursuing enemies; so, now, the signs, that give positive evidence to the faithful souls that our Redeemer is about to return to earth again, only serve to blind those who conform to this world, and have turned aside from truth to fables. We had vivid proof of this fact during this meeting. It was heart-rending to see the blindness of many, who once saw the light, but refused to walk in it; and are now left in gloomy night, in the hour of greatest danger. They have chosen their place among "the foolish virgins;" preferring the honors and pleasures of this world, to the glory of the coming One. O that some trumpet might awake them ere the Lord appears in the clouds of heaven, when it will be too late—for ever too late.

Sunday, 21st. The day was fine, and early greeted by many joyful hearts. The weather was delightful during the entire meeting. We had no rain nor chilling winds. It seemed as if heaven smiled upon our tented grove. At eight o'clock, this morning, we assembled for a love-feast, when we enjoyed another of those heavenly scenes of which we have spoken when giving an account of other meetings. Preaching by Brn. Munger and Hastings. Large audiences listened with deep attention to the burning truths presented by the faithful watchmen. It was most clearly shown that the signs of the times indicate that we are very near, the end of the present dispensation. It seemed strange to us that any one could resist such an amount of evidence as was laid before the people by Bro. Hastings; but when we remember how the professed church rejected all the signs and wonders connected with the first advent of our Savior; and were not satisfied till he hung upon the cross; and also consider that men are to "wax worse and worse" "in the last days," we then saw we had nothing better to expect than what we now see.

We closed our excellent meeting with the sacrament of the Lord's supper, where we were comforted with the hope of soon being at "the marriage supper of the Lamb," when no idle spectators will crowd to witness the happy scene. We parted with bright hopes of a speedy reunion in "the camp of the saints," where partings are o'er, and sorrows are forever unknown.

Drafting.

We hear of a few of the Lord's children who have been drafted. It seems very wrong to attempt to compel christians to kill their fellow beings, whom Jesus has instructed them to love. We are glad to learn that most of those who are looking for the coming of the Savior are resolved, in his strength, to die for obeying Christ in refusing to use carnal weapons, rather than to please wicked men, disobey the Lord, and lose eternal life. It is evident we have come to a time, when, if we seek to save our lives, we shall lose them. Let us give them up freely for Jesus' sake, and then all will be well. Men can not fight, so long as they are filled with the Spirit of Christ. While we have no sympathy with Southern slavery and secession, and wish they might come to a perpetual end; we have an equal abhorrence of all fighting, and dare not "do evil that good may come;" because the Scriptures say of those who act on this principle, that their "damnation is just." We are to avoid the appearance of evil.

The question is frequently asked, "What shall we do if drafted?"—Obey the Lord. If brought before magistrates, look to the Lord for wisdom to answer wisely, and trust all the consequences in his hands. "Stand up for the right if the heavens fall." It is no time now to be faint-hearted. When we are required to disobey our Captain, and kill our fellow men, let our reply be, we cannot fight. We are true men, and love our country; but love the kingdom of the Lord better; and cannot barter it away to save this short life. We prefer death in its most horrid form, rather than to fight with carnal weapons, and lose eternal life. Hence, if drafted, we must be in subjection to the powers that be, and suffer, like the martyrs, whatever they are pleased to put upon us for refusing to kill our neighbors. Let every soldier of the cross be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Be kind, long-suffering, gentle, but decided. Give up to Jesus, and trust all in his hands, and victory is ours, with eternal life and glory in the everlasting kingdom.

Date of Paper.

We announced that we had concluded to date our paper on Tuesday instead of Wednesday, because we have our business matters so arranged as to have it go to press uniformly on that day. This is what we have been doing for some time in the past. We learn some thought they should receive it one day earlier. We wish to correct that impression. The work at the office is all done the same time as usual, so that there will be no change in the time of mailing. It is well known that it is the practice of many who publish weekly papers, to date them nearly a week in advance, so that a paper dated on Saturday, the 28th, was completed and mailed on Tuesday the 24th. We have concluded to date ours when we stop putting articles into the paper; that is, on Tuesday morning of each week. Consequently you get the news up to that time; and if we should date our paper several days ahead, it would not give you any later news.

Army Chaplains.

We have often thought of the strange position of army chaplains. There are members of the same church in the opposing armies, with their chaplains, praying for the success of their respective regiments. Step into the camps of each on a Sabbath morning, and listen to the frequent prayers of each, as they plead with the meek and lowly Jesus,—the Prince of peace,—entreating him to give success to the embattled hosts during the day. At night, after a drawn battle, in which ten thousand have been slaughtered on each side, hear the hearty thanksgiving in the evening prayers for the success which has attended the day of bloody deeds; and then think of Jesus' instructions to love our enemies, and do good to those who despitefully use us, in connection with his long-suffering, and patient endurance of all the ill treatment of his enemies, even to crucifixion, and remember, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." From the foregoing passage, we are driven to the following conclusion:—Those who fight, or voluntarily aid in sustaining war, prove one of two points; either that Christ's kingdom is "of this world," or else they are not his servants. As Christ positively affirms that his "kingdom is not of this world," then it is settled that those who fight are not his servants. We find the whole New Testament harmonizing with this conclusion. We leave the reader to choose his own position, and trust the Lord will aid him to put on the whole christian armor, and "fight the good fight of faith."

We clipped the following from the New York Sun of Sept. 9th, '62. It is a part of a report of a sermon preached to H. W. Beecher's congregation, the Sunday evening previous, by O. H. Buckley, chaplain to the First Regiment of the "Sickles' Brigade." When speaking of the officers, politicians, the newspapers, and the administration, he says:—

"All are to blame. They do not recognize the hand of God. True, there are chaplains in the army, yet they are but as the fifth wheel to a coach, for they cannot perform their duties to the soldier in active service, or the wounded in hospitals, while they are in the field. Some of them are indifferent to religion, while others are true ministers of God. And thus, though there is an outward show of religion, there is no true recognition of the power of God. No outward religious ceremonies will do; the recognition of God must be in the hearts of all. Some had scoffed at this, like the General who said 'God was on the side of the greatest numbers and the heaviest artillery.' He certainly was not so in the revolution, and he certainly does not appear to be so now. God intends to strip us of our pride, and to crucify us in our wealth. He shows to us that this nation must venerate his name. There is no army in the world where profanity prevails so much as in ours. From morn till night it flows from the lips not only of soldiers but officers—many of these, too, having been members of the church. . .

Drunkenness, too, prevails very much. At the battle of Fair Oaks a distinguished General of Division was so much under the influence of intoxicating drink as to be observed by all. His Adjutant General, too, was so overcome, that, believing him to be wounded, he was placed on a stretcher and carried to the rear, but when the surgeon examined him he was beastly drunk. (Sensation.) His young Aid de Camp, too, who was previously unused to it, was so drunk as to be unable to sit on his horse, 'and,' said the preacher 'I saw him.'"

"The Signs of the Times."

☞ Do not fail to get Bro. Hastings' new work,—"The Signs of the Times." This is emphatically a book for the times. It is just the one to lend to your neighbor, if you wish to convince him "the end of all things is at hand."—Price 75 cts., postage 15 cts.

The President's Proclamation.

The President has just issued an important proclamation. The following extract contains the principal matter of interest. It shows he has finally decided to let the bondman go free, if the Union can be preserved in no other way, as he stated in his letter to Mr. Greely. We apprehend that all efforts to preserve the Union will be like one to save a sinking ship when the water gushes in twice as fast as they can pump it out.

A PROCLAMATION.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22, 1862.

I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America, and Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy thereof, do hereby proclaim and declare that hereafter, as heretofore, the war will be prosecuted for the object of practically restoring the Constitutional relation between the United States and the people thereof in which States that relation is, or may be, suspended or disturbed; that it is my purpose, upon the next meeting of Congress, to again recommend the adoption of a practical measure tendering pecuniary aid to the free acceptance or rejection of all the slave States, so called, the people whereof may not then be in rebellion against the United States, and which States may then have voluntarily adopted or thereafter may voluntarily adopt the immediate or gradual abolishment of slavery within their respective limits; and that the efforts to colonize persons of African descent, with their consent, upon the continent or elsewhere, with the previously obtained consent of the governments existing there, will be continued; that on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty three, all persons held as slaves within any State, or any designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then thenceforward and forever free, and the executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom; that the Executive will, on the first day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof respectively shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof have not been in rebellion against the United States.

To Brn. in Western N. Y. and Pa.

In a few weeks I hope, if the Lord will, to be able to visit you. Will all who have written me, let me know if they have any thing further to say about the arrangement of meetings, etc.? Direct at once to Boston, Mass. My time will be short, but I wish to do all that I can while there. May God guide me in all things. H. L. HASTINGS.

The Christian Publication Society.

This Society commences operations for another year under hopeful circumstances. Its financial condition is encouraging, and those associated in its administration are united in an earnest desire to do something which will honor God and benefit mankind. After considerable delay, it seems to be decided that the Publication Society is to be a Publication Society, and is to issue tracts and other publications which it is hoped will subserve the cause of truth. Seeing at length good ground to hope that this original intention will be realized, I am glad to give the enterprise my hearty co-operation.

I had some time ago, after several efforts to transfer my tract publishing to the Society, concluded that under present circumstances it was best for me to retain it in my own hands, and I informed the Society that I had no more offers to make in that direction. With this view I removed to Boston with the intention of pushing the matter through to the best of my ability, and working while the day should last. The earnest request of the Society has led me to reconsider my determination, and an agreement has been entered into for the transfer of my entire list of TRACTS into the hands of the Christian Publication Society. This to me has been a matter of indifference, for, situated as I now am, I could carry forward the business much more conveniently than in time past. I have, however, yielded to the desires of the Committee, my own judgment agreeing with theirs, that the interests of the cause of truth might thereby be promoted.

From this time, therefore, I do not expect to issue tracts to any considerable extent, unless circumstances may demand some change in the arrangement. My tracts will be under the control of the Christian Publication Society, and orders for them should be addressed to the agent, at the office of the World's Crisis. This new arrangement will involve increased outlay, but when once the stereotype plates are under the control of the Society, they can issue tracts at prices much less than even the previous very low rates. If the brethren and friends at large will take hold of the matter, the Society may soon be able to announce a full supply of tracts on hand and for sale at prices far lower than ever have been sold in this country. They now furnish 1800 pages for $1.00; they will probably furnish 2,000 to 2,400 pages for $1.00 when they are once fairly under way, provided the brethren and friends rally to the support of the Society, and raise the funds necessary to place the whole upon a stable basis.

There is now a good stock of tracts on hand ready for distribution, and orders for the same are solicited; and while these are being sent out, it is proposed to make immediate efforts to replace them as soon as they are exhausted. The brethren have all done nobly in their efforts to help the work along; but this warfare demands fresh sacrifice, and new efforts from day to day.

At the last meeting of the Christian Publication Society it was voted to raise $1.000 for the purpose of issuing tracts new and old, for general distribution with or without price. All previous subscriptions upon the tract fund of the C. P. S. are requested to be sent in immediately to the agent, Miles Grant. And in addition to these sums already subscribed, we propose to raise $1.000 to carry on this work. I have agreed to superintend the printing and publishing of all tracts which may be needed for the coming year free of charge to the Society. They will therefore be furnished at the actual cost of manufacturing; and then the Society will sell them as cheaply as is consistent with the safe transaction of its business.

The question will arise in some minds, Can we raise $1.000 for this purpose? Of course we can. There are now three thousand or more subscribers to the Crisis. Were they to give one third of a dollar each, the amount would be raised. There are probably, at least ten thousand readers of the Crisis. If these would give ten cents each, the amount would be forth-coming directly. But we do not expect that all will do this. But there are brethren who will esteem it a privilege to take hold of this work heartily. A thousand dollars is a small amount. Many a man has lost as much in some paltry speculation which neither benefitted man nor glorified God. Many thousands of dollars are spent every year in foolish, expensive habits, and for things which minister only to vicious and depraved appetites. There are many men who receive the Crisis who could each give a thousand dollars, and feel and be better off for the gift. They would have less to think of, less to worry over, and less fear of the depreciation of property from the effects of the war. Men are pouring out their treasure like water to carry on the sanguinary contest that prevails; now let the sons of peace be steadfast and diligent in their work, that when their Master appears they may be found faithful. Judging from all the aspects of the age, the signs of these last perilous times, we are nearing that point when all earth's treasures and possessions will perish and pass away. In vain will men seek for comfort in hoarded wealth, or for deliverance from coming ills in the gains which they have acquired. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath.

Many a man can look back upon some speculation, upon some business operation, some swindle by which he has lost his one, five, ten, twenty, or even fifty thousand dollars; and now, when all is gone, he says, "I wish that money was laid up in heaven. I wish it was lent to the Lord. But it is too late: the Devil has got it, and I cannot recover it." Let others who have this world's goods be warned in time; and let us each strive with noble zeal to lay all we have upon the altar of God, and have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done what we could. Men who choose to do so keep their money till the tax-gatherer takes it, and the extortioner catcheth all that they have. But those who are guided by the principles of true prudence will consult the word of God; will lay not up for themselves treasures upon the earth where moth and rust corrupt, where thieves break through and steal, and where earth's final fires shall lick up earth's treasures like the dust. They will sell that they have, and give alms; they will provide bags that wax not old, a treasure in heaven, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. Then, disencumbered from earthly burdens, they will take heed lest at any time their hearts be overcharged with worldly cares; they will stand, having their loins girt about, and their lights burning, and they like unto men that wait for their Lord.

When the last terrible convulsion comes, compared with which all commercial panics, all financial revulsions, all sudden depreciations, shall seem but trifles light as air, when the wealth of the world shall perish, and all the pomp and pride and glory of man shall pass away; when kings and beggars shall stand upon a level, and the miser, going to the judgment seat shall have his coffers unlocked, his gold uncounted; when all that man has coveted shall be torn from his grasp, and all that he has delighted in shall be blighted in his presence, I would in that day have nothing to lose, but everything to gain; I would look upon this ruined world and thank God that my possessions are not here; I would have them safely transferred beyond the terrible scenes of judgment and of wrath, and laid up among those riches of divine blessing which are eternal in the heavens.

May God help us all to do what he would have us in this matter, and bring us at last to know that we have not labored in vain in the Lord. Your brother in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS.

Tracts for Free Distribution.

The Christian Publication Society has now on hand some hundreds of thousands of pages of tracts. These must not be idle. They will be sent to any address at the rate of 1300 pages for $1.00, post-paid. They will be sent by Express 1800 pages for $1.00. Let every one who can, purchase a dollar's worth, or more, of these tracts, and scatter them in their own neighborhoods, or among their friends.

Persons ordering tracts by mail should write their name, Post Office, County and State very plainly, and state about how many tracts they want. Persons ordering by Express should give Post Office, County and State, and also the nearest Express office and depot, that we may know how to send them.

Tracts will also be sent without price to all who are unable to pay for them. Let such feel no hesitancy about sending for them. There are quantities of them which have been purchased expressly for the use of such individuals. There are some brethren who are unable to go out themselves and distribute tracts, but they are willing to give their substance that others may distribute. Some are able to buy more tracts than they have time to distribute, and there are others who have more time to distribute than they have means to buy. The C. P. Society receives the donations of those who are willing to give, and disburses them in the shape of tracts to those who are willing to distribute them. Persons who wish tracts for themselves, or for their friends, or for ministers, can have them sent directly to the parties whom they wish should read them. Persons having friends in the army can order tracts sent directly from the Crisis office to them. In such cases they should give the name plainly; also the company, regiment, and division where their friends are serving. Let no one who wishes tracts, or can use them to advantage, neglect to send for them. They are published for the especial benefit of such persons! and by the time the present stock is gone, we intend to have another abundant supply. Persons who order tracts without sending the money should give such a statement of their condition as will enable us to judge how many it is proper to send them. Persons sometimes write, "Please send me some tracts." The letter comes, no one knows anything about the person writing, and no one can tell how many tracts should be sent. It may be in some locality where a dollar's worth would be all that could be conveniently distributed. On the other hand, the applicant may be a preacher, or in a position so situated that they could scatter ten or twenty dollars' worth to great advantage. But it is not to be expected that the Editor or those having charge of the distribution will know all about the circumstances of every person applying. And the only safe rule is for all persons in sending to state as definitely as they can what they desire, and how extensive their opportunities are. In this way we can be the judge what should be done in the case.

Tracts when ordered by mail should be ordered in quantities worth not less than thirty cents, as the expense of sending them is then much smaller. Tracts are sent by mail, in packages of eight ounces, or over, at a half cent per ounce. If sent singly, the postage is one cent for each tract, which is twice or three times as much as when sent in packages. The expense of sending them by mail is probably one or two cents per hundred pages. But to save all perplexity when they are sent by mail, 1300 pages are sent for one dollar. Persons who order three to five or more dollars worth, will find it cheaper to have them come by Express, unless they live at very great distances from Boston, from the fact that by Express they get five hundred pages more for a dollar than when they order them by mail, while, when sent by mail, every additional ounce increases the expense; and on the other hand, when sent by Express, five, or perhaps ten dollars' worth, may be sent for about the same price as one or two dollars' worth. Let us hear without delay from all who desire tracts. Persons wishing tracts which I have heretofore published, will find the Publication Society ready to supply them all at the same rates that I have furnished them. They will therefore direct all their orders to MILES GRANT, Office of World's Crisis, Boston, Mass. I shall still continue to issue works and pamphlets as heretofore; but if the Lord will, I shall transfer the tract work into the hands of the Society as soon as practicable.

For the Crisis.

A word to the friends of the Crisis.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Now that we have had our desire granted relative to retaining Bro. Grant as Editor, is there not danger of our sitting down with so much ease as measurably to forget wherein our great strength lieth? Has there not been much prayer offered for a few months past, relative to this matter? I know there has been some; I believe (from an array of testimony I cannot doubt) there has been much. This family organ of communication is very dear to us, and we have felt a prayerful anxiety for its useful and peaceful continuance. Word from far, both epistolary and oral, comes to our ears:—"We think much of the Crisis—it is the right kind of a missionary to send round—hope Bro. Grant will continue to be its Editor." I hope so, too, as long as it is so apparent that he is occupying the place assigned him by the Great Shepherd. But, if the time should ever come that this Great Shepherd would make a change, I hope he will step aside with as little regretful envying as John Baptist did when he saw the time had come for him to decrease, while another should increase!

Things now look quite prosperous relative to the financial condition of the paper. Perhaps the Crisis never saw a brighter day than the present. Its subscribers are increasing almost miraculously considering the times: and now is the danger. Danger of what? Of forgetting to pray for the paper and its Editor. Prayer should be offered that the contributors, as well as Editor, may offer proper viands, and especially that discernment may be given the chief servant, if any "wild gourds" should be offered, so that there be no "death in the pot." Yes, pray,—that nothing proper may be lost, overlooked, or ruled out that will benefit the household; and that no poisonous bit may find its way in.

If ever one needed wisdom from above it is an Editor of a religious paper. There is such a variety of tastes to serve; from those whose appetites are sufficiently keen and healthful, by proper exercise as well as wholesome diet, to relish the plain and simple truths of the Bible, to those who have been overfed, observed sedentary habits, and thus become so dyspeptic that they think they must have sweetmeats, to give tone or zest to their appetites.

Yes, pray for our Editor instead of provoking him with complaints. We read in the good book of the meekest man in the world being provoked by God's professed children to speak unadvisedly with his lips. What if not more than half the church in the wilderness had been agreed to pray for their overtaxed leader? Think you not the calamity would have been averted?

At a later period there was a prophet who had his request granted of possessing a double portion of Elijah's spirit, so that he must have been mighty, for Elijah raised the dead and called fire down from heaven and consumed four hundred false prophets at a time!! Well, this great prophet was so urged and teased by some fifty theological students to do what he knew was not best, that he finally gave up to them for once. Perhaps he thought he might appear "illiberal" if he did not give in to those who differed in opinion.

Yes,—however good, however great,—mortals, especially those who deal out food to God's household, need much of God's wisdom. Human wisdom will not subserve the purpose. Human nature is weak at the best, and if the great Apostle Paul so felt the necessity of prayer being offered that the Word of the Lord might have free course, and take root, it seems to me necessary to pray for the cause as connected with our paper. B. MATHEWSON.

The Sign of the Son of Man.

The first inquiry seems to be, to ascertain who it is that are to witness this sign? If this can be settled, scripturally, then we shall be prepared to decide what that sign shall be, and when it will occur. In the gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke, we have a record of the signs that are to precede the coming of Christ; first in the heavens above, and second in the earth beneath, which signs will be apprehended only by the saints, and not by the wicked. After these signs have all occurred,—even to the shaking of "the powers of heaven," (which I believe is now in progress),—"THEN shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven," "and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." This mourning will be caused by the appearing of this sign. That anything will occur to arouse the dwellers upon earth to a realising sense of their true and lost condition prior to that event, I can find no evidence to justify a belief.

In 1 Thess. 4, we read that the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; the dead saints will be raised, the living changed, and they together caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. The divinely appointed place for the church to meet her returning Lord, is in the "clouds" of heaven, "in the air," just where the wicked tribes are to behold the sign. When this event occurs, then they will know of a certainty what it is that is really coming upon the earth, and awake to their true and sad condition, and will mourn. Then many shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able. Then the Master will have risen up and shut to the door. Then will he laugh at their calamity and will mock when their fear cometh. No saints will be there to mourn with them, or comfort them by pointing them to a way of escape through faith in the name of a crucified and rejected Savior. Their day of grace will have forever ended, and nothing can screen them from the face of Him who sitteth upon the throne and the wrath of the Lamb. O! that men were wise, and would duly consider these things before it is everlastingly too late.

But where will the saints then be? O, they have escaped—they are gone—they are gathered into the secret chambers of the Most High, where they are hid a little season until his indignation is overpast, (Isa. 26 : 20, 21), or, as the Revelator expresses it, standing upon the sea of glass, where they sing first the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, where the marriage and the supper of the Lamb are to be celebrated, etc. In immediate connection with this redemption, the sins of Great Babylon come in remembrance before God. He pours upon her the fierceness of his wrath; she falls—she sinks; the kings of the earth, and the merchants thereof who have enriched themselves in their unholy traffic, standing afar off, beholding the smoke of her torment, will bewail her, and lament and mourn and weep and howl on account of their miseries that have come upon them.

The saints from their secret pavilion will also be witnesses, but not actors in this part of the scene, for it is written, "only with thine eyes shalt thou see and behold the reward of the wicked." As the smoke of her torment ascendeth up before them, again they say "Alleluia!" "for true and righteous are thy judgments," etc. But it is added (Matt. 24), "And they (who saw the sign) shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

By a further reference to Rev. 19th, it will be seen that after the celebration of the marriage and the supper, the Revelator saw the heavens opened; and Christ and his immortal army of glorified saints are represented as sitting upon white horses, he having upon his head "MANY CROWNS" (the insignia of royalty and glory), coming down to the battle of that great day of God Almighty, when the beast and the false prophet, the kings of the earth and their armies, will be cast ALIVE into the lake of fire burning with brimstone, just as Pharaoh and his host were overthrown and perished in the Red Sea. When he thus descends, then "will the tribes of earth see him coming in the clouds with power and great glory." Till he thus descends from the sea of glass, all that the wicked will have seen will be the gathering away of the saints, like Enoch and Elijah, to meet and welcome the return of our long absent Lord in the air, there to celebrate the glorious nuptials of the Bride and the Lamb.

In view of such glory, so soon to be revealed, oh! let his weary Bride cheer up, and put on the whole armor of God, that she may be found spotless and pure in that day. P. ALLING.

Day of Preparation.

We are in the day of God's preparation for the most mighty of mighty revolutions since the day of creation. It cannot be denied, that all the movable elements in the movable world are being stirred. The proclamation has been sounded over earth and ocean, and through heaven, of the coming event of events. The impression—deep, solemn, awful—of its importance and proximity has been made on the intelligent christian mind. Divine wisdom and omnipotence are now strikingly employed to make all righteous arrangements to bring speedily about the sublime consummation.

The armies of earth glittering in their varied uniforms are tramping the martial drill. The defiant navy of iron is lifting its mighty proportions to sight on several sides of the great waters. The most powerful implements of death are being heaped on the camps of death. The spirit of war, confusion, ruin and desolation is almost rampant in the nations. There will yet, doubtless, be a pause;—it will be the brief pause final before creation's change and earth's concluding catastrophe.

The day of vengeance in the great heart of God must be immediately expressed, and the glorious year of his waiting redeemed must come. EDWIN BURNHAM.

"Angels."

Having noticed in the Crisis of Sept. 16th that Bro. Wm. Shepherd intends publishing his work on the above subject—showing the origin, attributes, ranks, titles of angels, and the work assigned them by God in the administration of his divine government as revealed in the Old and New Testament Scriptures, etc.,—I would say, judging from a part of the MSS. which I have read, there is no doubt in my mind that it will be an interesting work,—a work that will meet the wants of the times,—one from which much consolation and comfort will be derived by all who believe in the divine authenticity of the Scriptures.

Come, brethren, shall we have the work published? Will you do something in this direction? We need all the truth the Lord has for us in the store-house in this age of infidelity and apostasy. Come, send in your pledges at once. You will get your money's worth, and more. Remember the address—"Eld. Wm. Shepherd, Newark, N. J." A. W. SIBLEY.

FOREIGN NEWS.

[From Liverpool 13th.]

It is stated that the Queen of England has formally demanded the hand of the Princess Alexandra of Denmark for the Prince of Wales.

There are rumors of plots and threats of the Italian revolutionists very similar to those in the Orsini affair.

It is reported that Victor Emmanuel soon visits France.

Latest reports relative to Garibaldi say that it is all but settled that there will be a general amnesty with Garibaldi and his followers.

A distinguished English physician has been sent to Garibaldi.

SEVEN DAYS LATER.

By the arrival of the Europa, we have advices from Liverpool to the 20th ult., Queenstown 21st.

The stirring news brought by the Europa and subsequent steamers was the theme of universal comment. It was regarded as most disastrous for the North, but the valor of the Federal troops was generally admitted.

The Times Paris correspondent says Napoleon decidedly favors the recognition of the South, and is anxious that the English Government should adopt a similar course.

The Great Exhibition will close on the 1st of November.

It is reported that three of the finest steamers on the Clyde have been sold to the Confederates.

The Liverpool Telegraph says: "Besides the commissions committed to other shipbuilders by the Confederates, which are being forwarded with all possible dispatch, a large iron plated ram is being constructed in the Mersey, without any attempt at concealment. It will be of the most formidable description, and will attempt to run the blockade off Charleston."

La Franca asserts that a majority of the Juarez Government has decided on proposing terms of capitulation to French Commander Forey, on the basis of the surrender of the City of Mexico and Puebla to the French.

ITALY.

The English physician sent to Garibaldi has reported favorably. He declares that the ball never entered, but struck and broke the inner ankle. The wound progresses favorably.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Sept. 22. Information received to-day from a servant who deserted from the rebels shows that their loss in general officers in the late battles was greater than ours.

The residents of this section of Maryland have suffered considerably since its occupation by the two armies. In many cases families which a few days ago were in comfortable circumstances, are now wanting the necessaries of life.

The movements of the rebels are mysterious. The military authorities here feel fully satisfied that the whole rebel army is still on the opposite side of the Potomac, information to that effect having been received to-day. Gen. Lee is also there. Their intentions are not yet fully developed.

An attempt to re-occupy Maryland must be considered impracticable. Without tents, and, in many cases, without shoes or blankets, the present position of the rebel army would be very uncomfortable if a cold rain should occur. With the present weather overcoats and blankets are almost indispensable at night.

Harper's Ferry is in our possession. We stand in a position to check a recrossing to this State to recommence offensive operations.

In the last two battles the wounded have suffered much less from exposure and want of attention than in any previous fight.

Ambulance service was more promptly rendered, and surgeons more energetic and efficient, and hospital supplies more quickly furnished than before.

A ride through the Cumberland valley from Harrisburg to Hagerstown impresses one with the wisdom of the rebels in attempting to bring their famished legion into that land of abundance.

It also suggests the importance of a repulse that kept them out of a region in which they would have found supplies sufficient to feed and recruit their army for months.

The Washington Star says: "The different Federal army corps are within supporting distance of each other, Sumner's and William's (late Banks',) at and about Harper's Ferry, Couch's and Franklin's at Williamsport, and the rest so in position near them as to be instantly available for a movement in any direction.

The enemy are concentrating at Winchester, and every available man in that quarter, from seventeen to sixty-five years old, has been pressed into the service.

The enemy report their loss in Maryland at 15,000, but consider that, with the capture of Harper's Ferry, they are about even since the last battle of Manassas.

The main portion of the rebel army have retired to Winchester. They are disheartened at the reception they met with on their appearance in Maryland, as instead of the 50,000 recruits they expected to receive, only about 2000 were obtained, while their losses from desertion alone were above that number.

Leesburg and vicinity are in possession of our forces.

Residents near the fords over the Potomac at which the rebels crossed, say that 300 or 400 of them got out of their depth and were drowned. They heard their shrieks as they were swept past by the current.

A Washington dispatch says that Surgeon Gen. Lee has returned from the battle-field of Antietam Creek. He thinks the whole number of Union men killed will be within 1200, and estimates the number wounded at about 6000.

The Richmond Inquirer claims the battle of Antietam as a great rebel victory. It was directed by General Lee in person with 60,000 men in his command. Gen. Jackson commanded the left of the rebel line, Gen. Hill the right and Gen. Longstreet the centre. The battle was the most severe of the entire campaign. Two rebel Generals were killed and six wounded.

The Petersburg Express says that all hopes of Maryland uniting her destinies with the South must now be banished. The experiment to rouse her people to follow the fortunes of the rebel army is proclaimed to have been a dead failure, and the devoted adherence of the State Government, the press and the majority of the people to the Federal Government is acknowledged by the Express.

Louisville, Sept. 24. The intense excitement of the last few days has given place to great rejoicings at the immediate proximity of seven divisions of Gen. Buell's army, which are coming up from the direction of Salt river. The enemy seem to be concentrating at Bloomfield.

Louisville is now considered entirely safe. Gen. Nelson is confident that he can hold this position against any odds until the approaching Federal reinforcements shall arrive.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune says:

"Now and then the remark is heard that the President has been driven into the policy of emancipation by outside clamor. A most preposterous statement. For nearly a year Mr Lincoln is known to have had the question of slavery, in its connection with the rebellion, under his most thoughtful and deliberate consideration.

Within the last few months, perceiving the great progress which public opinion was making, he has given still closer attention to the question, has invoked counsel from all directions, and has looked to Providence for guidance to the true solution of the great problem which, as he told the deputation from the religious men of Chicago, was in his thoughts night and day. A number of weeks since, he was, as we telegraphed you a month ago, on the point of issuing a proclamation which fixed the 1st of December as the day of Emancipation, and was only dissuaded at that time from doing so by the strong opposition of two members of his Cabinet. This statement has been denied, but it is substantially true.

The proclamation now issued is an improvement in several material respects upon the rejected one. It was written on Sunday, and was laid before the Cabinet at an extraordinary meeting yesterday. Every member, with perhaps a single exception in the person of Postmaster General Blair, agreed to it, and will give it his hearty support. All accepted it cheerfully as indicating the adoption of a policy which they had long been urging. It is to be added that the proclamation is the President's own work, written without consultation, not altered, or, if altered at all, very slightly, at or after the Cabinet meeting, and published to the world within forty-eight hours of its composition."

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 24. An arrival from St. Cloud reports more murders by the Sioux in the town of Richmond on Monday, and the killing of two children. The inhabitants are fleeing to St. Cloud, leaving the town to the ravages of the Indians.

Sept. 28. A sharp engagement has taken place with the Sioux near Yellow Medicine. About thirty Indians were killed and many wounded. Our loss is five killed, and thirty-four wounded.

Frederick, Md., Figuratively speaking this city is one vast hospital. Every public building, even to the churches, and hundreds of private houses, are in use for hospital purposes. The city hotels have been taken possession of for the use of the wounded. In the hospitals there are at least 3000 patients, an average of six deaths occuring daily.

Over twenty-five thousand stand of arms have been captured by our forces, and the number of field pieces, as yet, has not been fully ascertained. Some twenty are now in camp. The majority of them are English pieces, of the newest and best patterns.

New York, Sept. 27. The Times has news from Winchester to Wednesday. The main body of the rebel army is concentrated there, numbering 75,000 men. They are much demoralized and suffering for want of food. Their loss in Maryland is acknowledged to be terrible.

It is reported that the confederates are buying and building numerous steamers in England, and are also building a Ram in the Mersey.

Washington, Sept. 26, 1862. The cordial endorsement of the President's proclamation by the convention of Governors adds to its popularity here. Gen. McClernald—who is regarded as the leader of the Douglas Democrats—cordially endorses it. A yet unpublished letter from Robert Dale Owen was laid before the President, just before the proclamation appeared, which gave stronger and more urgent reasons for its issue than those previously advanced in his published letter based on European intervention.

New York, Sept. 27. A rumor from Washington says the President contemplates issuing a proclamation making Florida a cotton plantation, inviting laborers, black and white, to settle there for that purpose, who will have ample protection from the army and navy; the State constitution to be put aside temporarily, and Florida reduced to a territorial condition. This movement is said to be preliminary to the policy to be adopted hereafter with the other Southern States.

Cincinnati, Sept. 28. Last night the rebel cavalry captured Augusta, Kentucky, on the Ohio river, forty miles above this city. After robbing the houses they destroyed the place. The citizens fled to the Ohio side as speedily as possible.

Washington, Sept. 29. It is rumored that Gen. Lee has been largely reinforced, and that he is apparently making preparations to re-cross the Potomac into Maryland.

Cincinnati, Sept. 29. Gen. Jeff. C. Davis shot Gen. Nelson at the Galt House, Louisville, this morning, killing him almost instantly.

The Convention of Governors.

The action of the Convention was most loyal. The only act of the meeting was to draw up a brief letter to the President, thanking him for the emancipation proclamation, expressing confidence in his wisdom and discretion, and offering him their warmest co-operation and that of all the States in all measures requisite for carrying on the war to a successful end.

The letter closed by suggesting to the President the propriety of providing for a corps of reserves, not less than 100,000 men, to be under training in camps in the different States, and made ready for use, and proffering their hearty co-operation. All the Governors present signed the letter except Bradford of Maryland.

The address to the President as agreed to was written by Governor Andrew, at the suggestion of the other Governors present.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

I want to dispose of my books, and I am a very poor pedlar, especially of my own productions. I therefore will send a single one to anybody for 50 cents, and pay the postage myself; or, if any one will send me $4 00, I will send them nine books by mail, and that is less than the first cost. But I need the money, and there are brethren enough that want them, if they knew how to get them. You will see the notice of the second edition in the Crisis. I know the receipts in the book are worth more to a family than the cost of the book. One said the receipts was their family doctor, and had saved much expense in doctors' bills, if not the life of one of the family.

If my preaching brethren would name it to their congregations, it would secure the sale of some in nearly every place; and in many places the nine books could be taken at the above reduced price. One Congregationalist Deacon bought six on purpose to send to persons that cared nothing about religion, and he said it was three dollars well spent. Come, brethren, will you help me to dispose of them? I want the money for my family, while I am out preaching the coming of the Lord with but little pay.

Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

My Glorious Home.

BY S. E. BREWER.

I.

We're going home to that land of rest,
Where the saints shall be forever blest,
Where the weeping ones that sorrowed here,
Shall drink from life's pure fountain there;
Where the ransomed throng, in spotless white,
Shall warble and sing with pure delight,
And the angels' choir shall blend their strains,
And roll hosannahs o'er the plains.

CHORUS.—O! my glorious home.

We're going soon to those verdant plains,
Where the King in his beauty ever reigns;
Where ambrosial fruit shall ever grow,
And crystal rills forever flow.
Where the Lamb shall lead his spotless Bride,
Where the flowers grow by the river's side,
And the jubal strains shall ever be
Prolonged in gushing melody.

We're going soon where all shall be
From earth's turmoil forever free;
Where the ransomed host their powers employ,
And join creation's song of joy.
From the mountain top, from the flow'ry dell,
Loud the alleluia chorals swell.
O, the rapturous strain! sweet, seraphic sound!
Unnumbered millions roll it round.

II.

We're going soon where no ties are riv'n,
Where joys are sweet and pure as heaven,
Where saints and angels all unite
In sweetest union with delight;
And sacred pleasures will unfold
In heights and depths that can't be told,
And ever in that sunlit clime
With undim'd lustre they will shine.

We're going soon to that city bright,
Where the glory of God shall give it light,
Where the holy Lamb, his only Son,
Is enshrined in glory on his throne.
'Neath its massive dome, with the spotless band,
Near the gorgeous throne, I hope to stand;
When the holy throng shall praise their King,
Lord, bring us home to help them sing.

The "marriage supper" is prepared,
And soon in glory will be shared,
When the lovely Bride will ever be
At home with Christ eternally;
In the holy city, pure and bright,
Where the Lord their God shall give them light,
Where the saints shall eat of life's fair tree,
Enrobed in IMMORTALITY.

From I. K. Lombard.

BRO. GRANT:—As the busy season is now passed, and the evenings are long enough to hold meetings during the week, I have commenced to labor constantly in new fields. During the summer, with Bro. and Sr. Willard, I have been holding meetings on Sundays here, and in several places near by, but now an opportunity is given to go into the "regions beyond." I have been some ten or twelve miles east of here, and started meetings in two places with good prospects. Also about twelve to fifteen miles west, and started meetings in three places with prospects more encouraging than in the former. I have appointed to visit each place and preach three or four discourses once in four weeks. This will take up most of my time, as long as I continue to visit each place; but I shall probably suspend meetings in some places after a time and enter some new fields.

I find a general interest to hear, especially on the life and death theme. The question of future punishment enlists the interest of a community more readily than anything else I can take up. The truth is, all candid men are getting tired of the doctrine of eternal torment. Their confidence in the Bible has already suffered much in view of its general acceptance, while they have supposed the doctrine taught there. But they find in the doctrine of the destruction of the ungodly, a glad relief from the horrors of eternal misery, and the skepticism naturally arising from it; and feeling that it is a just and Scriptural doctrine, they stand in a salutary fear arising from a consciousness that "God is just."

I find enemies to encounter among those who feel involved when I oppose eternal misery as unjust and unscriptural. They try to hedge up my way as much as possible. They will hinder me from getting an opportunity to preach if they can. If they cannot, they will try to hinder people from coming to hear. They make so much of the dangers likely to arise from such a man's preaching, that people's curiosity cannot generally be satisfied only by hearing for themselves, unless they are subject to the church, whose admonitions in such matters are imperative. I have been questioned somewhat, but it always makes the truth more manifest.

On one occasion a preacher came three miles on purpose to question me. He wished to know about the "transfiguration," "thief on the cross," "rich man and Lazarus," etc. I attended to his queries, but he took exceptions to my treatment of the thief, etc., urging the force of the punctuation as dictating the sense. I reminded him that the punctuation in our Bibles was not by inspiration. He replied that it was "by authority." I asked him if it was divine authority. He admitted that it was not, but urged the ability of "learned men" as "more likely to be correct" than ordinary teachers. I reminded him that "God hath chosen the poor of this world"; and that those whom he has chosen are likely to have a correct view of his word rather than the opposing class; and that since "he hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, and foolish things to confound the wise," etc., I thought it better to allow the evident sense of the passage demanded by the construction and dictated by the teachings of the word in general, rather than set it aside in deference to a punctuation which is without merit, and does such violence to the word in its general teachings. He seemed to be ready to end a controversy which served the cause he was opposing better than it did his own, and so made no further reply. He was quite candid and gentlemanly in his bearing, and our controversy was, on the whole, interesting and profitable to those present. I have frequently, since I came here, answered objections offered after preaching, and I have found it a most decisive way to convince the hearers of the truth of our preaching.

There is quite a region throughout this part of the State where the doctrine of life only through Christ is new. I have found two or three believers in the new places I have entered, and one preaching brother, (Burkitt,) about twenty-two miles west from here, who is making a stir in his region. Several already, where I have labored, seem decided to have the truth, and among them is a licensed exhorter in the Methodist church. He is fully decided. He already declares his Bible a "new book," and is constantly rejoicing over his newly found treasure in his old field. He expects to be dealt with, perhaps "turned out" by the church authorities, but he does not feel at liberty to serve them rather than God.

Hammonton, N. J., Sept. 9th.

From Geo. W. Turner.

BRO. GRANT:—As it may be for the encouragement of Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, I will give you a short account of our second class grove meeting (as Eld. Shears calls it, on account of the absence of Eld. Sheldon on a tour east), which commenced Friday, Sept. 15th, in Senatic, Sauk Co., Wis. Eld. Barnes was on hand with his old battle axe as usual, which did good execution in preaching from John 14: 3, to a small but as needy a company as ever met together. Our hearts were cheered to be again assured that as sure as the Lord went away he would come back again, and that very soon. Met again at one o'clock, P. M., for prayer and conference. Had a refreshing time. At two o'clock we again listened to a stirring discourse by Eld. B., from John 3: 2; "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," etc.

Saturday, after a season of prayer, we listened to a cheering discourse by Eld. Shears, exhorting us to diligence and faithfulness in the cause of the Master. Met again at one o'clock for prayer and conference. This was as heart-searching a meeting as I ever attended. Our hearts were cheered to know that some new recruits were going to join the army. May God help them to put on the whole armor and continue till the war is ended.

Lord's day, met at nine o'clock for love feast. Some twenty-five cheering exhortations were given, while many of the congregation could not refrain from tears of joy in view of the immortal crown so near, and so sure to be given to the faithful. Listened to preaching again at half-past ten o'clock by Eld. B., from Gen. 18: 17. We were shown that the Lord did not hide from Abraham the destruction of the cities of the plain, nor the time when, and also that he would not hide from Abraham's children the great destruction that was coming upon this wicked world, nor the time when. This discourse instructed us that the true seed of Abraham would not come up to the time of judgment, and know nothing about it. After service we proceeded to a place where there was much water, when three were baptized in the likeness of Christ's death by the writer. May the Lord help them to live new lives, having buried the old man.

Preaching at half-past one o'clock by Eld. B., showing us that according to the light of our lamp we were in a circle of six or seven years of the time when the kingdoms of this world would become the kingdom of our Lord.

After a recess of ten minutes, Eld. Shears spoke again by way of exhortation and comfort, following which we surrounded the table of our dying Lord, where we were again forcibly reminded that his body was broken and blood was spilt for us. After singing the hymn—

"When shall we meet again?"

we separated, feeling assured that we should not all meet again before the marriage supper of the Lamb, when it will be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. O! may God keep the lambs of his flock from the death-like spirit of this age, and preserve them blameless unto his heavenly kingdom. Amen. Yours waiting for redemption.

GEO. W. TURNER.

From Sr. E. Slocum.

BRO. GRANT:—When we compare this world with that which is to come, how great is the contrast! Who would not prefer that to this? Can we not pray from the sincere feelings of our heart, Lord, let thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth? I have been homesick ever since I heard of its joys and seen the sorrows of this world. I have been in love with Jesus, ever since I saw we were in a state of mortality. I love life, and I love that blessed Jesus that died to redeem me from that awful state of corruption. I pray that where he is, there I may be also. Here men are perplexed, their hearts failing them for fear of those things that are coming on the earth. It seems to me the "peace and safety" cry is in the past, and the time of sudden destruction is soon to come. Behold the waking up of nations! And John saw in a vision a time when the "nations were angry"; the time when the dead should be judged, and he should "give reward to (his) servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear (his) name, small and great." I see just beyond this that God's everlasting kingdom is to be established under the whole heavens, and the earth is to be filled with his glory. What a blessed state, when all things are made new! My prayer is that we may overcome sin and share in its glories.

From W. M. Carroll.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the privilege of saying through the Crisis, I like the paper much, and prize it next to the Bible. Of all the religious papers I have read, the Crisis is the best. It explains Bible truth so clearly, a child may understand it.

There are but two in this place who are looking for Jesus soon to appear. I am one of them. I enlisted under King Jesus fourteen years ago, to serve through life. I will, by the grace of God assisting me, stand firm to the end, that I may with all who are looking for Jesus be prepared for his coming and kingdom.

Two years ago Bro. C. H. Wyman came to this place, and opened my eyes to the truth, as I had never before seen it in God's word. I thank the Lord I ever saw the light. I pray that all may see the light and flee unto God. Amen.

Woburn, Mass. W. S. CARROLL.

From Mrs. Dr. Andrews.

BRO. GRANT:—Some weeks since, while feeling rather gloomy and sad at heart, I happened to pick up a number of the "Crisis," and was attracted by the words, "Looking for the coming of Christ." It was something entirely new. I have always been taught to look for our dear Savior, but the advent was to be considered as far in the future.

Now I wish to say that I love the paper for the glorious news it brings, and desire to have it continue to cheer my heart by its weekly visits. Yours in hope.

Mission West.

Often we see a communication with a heading that cheers the heart of a lonely pilgrim in the west. We strike into it with interest to devour it, and feast on its contents. We read on, full of hope, till alas! we find this tour to the west, with all its sacrifices foregone for the good of perishing mortals, finally terminates about the interior of York State, or western part of New England. Sometimes they may have reached as far as Michigan. But the west, to say nothing of the "far west," is scarcely thought of. Poor bleeding Kansas, after all she has suffered of sword and famine, shall she be left to famish for the bread of life? Scarce any preaching here, of any kind. Can promise no support to be raised here. But missionaries must be borne here on the wings of Eastern Societies. Settlers are mostly from the east, who, having been ground down by poverty, have come here to get homes for their families; and a large majority of them are on lands entered on time, under heavy interest. It would take something more than ordinary formality to interest them. But we are human; and I suppose that the preaching of the truth with life and power, might raise up active, self-supporting churches.

We know that "beggars should not be choosers," but if you cannot send us talented men, or, if you cannot send educated men, still two things we earnestly ask: that you send us men filled with the Spirit, and good singers. But, if you can send no other preachers, I would say, send tracts, and would have said so long ago, but for want of means to pay postage, which, indeed, I cannot now do. But, may be, the poor will have the gospel preached to them.

God's faithful people were led into a fruitful land, and given the law of the Lord, to the intent that they should so live unto the Lord that the people should not only come from Ethiopia to hear wisdom, but that they should come from all nations to hear the law of the Lord. But when they forsook the Lord and went after idolatry, the Lord would not be frustrated, but sent them as captives among all nations, to carry the law to them. And for their sons sakes, who spake the languages of the lands, they translated the Bible into the languages of the lands. So the people of the nations had the law, as the Lord intended. And his people were made the "light of the world," and the "salt of the earth"; though against their wills.

Again, when our Savior was about to leave his disciples, he said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued." They tarried: the promised aid came on the day of Pentecost. But did they go forth to evangelize the world? Nay, they tarried still. Whereupon God set upon them the wolves of persecution. And "they that were scattered abroad, went every where preaching the word." Yes, they could now go abroad, and every where preach the word. So God will have his work accomplished. If Esther hold her peace, then shall deliverance arise from another place. "Ye are the light of the world." But the lights are not all wanted in one room: a surplus is a waste: and then, you have other rooms in total darkness, and their inmates "in the region and shadow of death."

O ye Bostonians! and Yankees in general of the household of faith; dare you enter the Syrian camp, eat and drink, and lay by treasures, and hold your peace, while the people of the city are famishing within? Dare you tarry at Jerusalem, while the people of Kansas starve and famish for the bread of life?

Our immediate neighborhood is about half German. I loan my papers, and do what I can. Would distribute tracts if I had them. My whereabouts are from Council Grove to Diamond Springs on the Santa Fee road, thence ten miles north-west to head of Lyons Creek, in Dickinson county, Kansas, about one hundred and seventy miles west of Missouri. There's a bright world to come, which is glorious and fair,
'Tis the christian's sweet home which our Lord will prepare;
A world where no sickness or sorrow can come,
Nor death ever enter that fair Eden home.

CHORUS.

My heart mid all changes, wherever I roam,
Ne'er loses its love for the christian's sweet home;
The christian's sweet home, the christian's sweet home,
My heart never changes for the christian's sweet home.

There our Savior will reign ever glorious King;
There music's sweet strain will in harmony ring;
There saints of all ages immortal will roam
Through the evergreen bowers of that fair Eden home.

There the pure crystal stream will eternally flow,
And the tree of life, blooming in beauty, will grow;
There flowers never fade, but delightful will bloom,
And perfume by their fragrance that fair Eden home.

In that bright world to come all the ransomed will dwell,
And the heavenly anthems in concert they'll swell;
Their shouts of salvation will fill the high dome,
And be borne on the breezes of that fair Eden home.

This dark world of woe is no dwelling for me,
A pilgrim and stranger henceforth I must be;
No abiding place here, but I seek one to come
In the new earth, Paradise, my fair Eden home.

Michigan Campmeeting Report.

In the providence of God we convened according to appointment on the campground, Aug. 27th, 2 o'clock, P. M. But in consequence of the inclemency of the weather there was no public service until evening, when Bro. A. N. Seymour spoke from the words, "Quench not the Spirit" (1 Thess. 5: 19), followed by remarks from Bro. A. E. Babcock, etc., when, closing the meeting for the evening, we repaired to our tents and homes, thanking God for his goodness and mercy in permitting us this gathering to exhort and greet each other once more ere the final gathering in the kingdom of God.

Aug. 28th. The clouds that gathered around our sky yesterday and last evening are dispersed and cleared away. Praise the Lord! Met at 10 1-2 A. M., and organized the meeting, re-electing Bro. A. N. Seymour President, Bro. A. E. Babcock Vice President, and the writer Secretary. At the close of the business transactions we enjoyed a social meeting of interest. Preaching at 2 1-2 P. M. by Bro. A. E. Babcock, from Eph. 6: 11–18—remarks from Bro. Seymour and others. Preaching again in the evening by Sr. M. S. Mansfield, from Luke 18: 7, 8. The speaker endeavored to show who the elect are, and that God will avenge speedily his own elect who cry day and night unto him, showing also the necessity and importance of prayer, too much neglected among us.

Aug. 29th. Convened for social meeting at 9 1-2 A. M. Preaching at 10 1-2 by Bro. D. R. Mansfield, from Matt. 13: 24. He endeavored to show that this dispensation ends probation for our fallen race, by an appeal to the parables of this chapter. Bro. O. R. L. Crozier spoke at 2 1-2 P. M, from John 15: 19,—"I have chosen you out of the world." He labored to show the means God has used and is now using for this glorious work, etc. In the evening Sr. Mansfield preached from the words, "Verily there is a reward for the righteous," Ps. 58: 11, illustrating the nature of the reward, and showing when it will be received.

Aug. 30th. Prayer and social meeting as usual. Preaching at 10 1-2 A. M. by Bro. Babcock, from 1 Thess. 5: 1. Preaching again at 2 1-2 P. M. by Sr. Mansfield, on "the signs of the times." At the close of this discourse Bro. Abel E. Babcock, of Jonesville, Mich., was presented for ordination. This worthy Bro. for some time past has felt it his duty to stand out publicly in the proclamation of the gospel, and has been officiating in the capacity of Pastor for the church at Jonesville the past summer. But this capacity did not satisfy his convictions of duty, and hence, after much prayer and reflection, and the advice of the church in J., he has decided to take this step, and the responsible position of a herald of the gospel of Christ. May the Lord be with him in very deed, and give him many souls as stars to deck the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord. After appropriate remarks by Bro. Seymour, our brother was duly set apart to the work of the ministry by the laying on of the hands of the clergy chosen for that purpose. Ordaining prayer, by Bro. A. N. Seymour. Charge, by Bro. D. R. Mansfield. Right hand of fellowship, by Bro. A. F. Servis. In the evening, Bro. Crozier gave a discourse from Luke 22: 28–30. He labored to prove probation in the world to come.

Aug. 31st. Commenced at half-past nine o'clock, A. M., for prayer and social meeting. Public service at half-past ten A. M. Preaching by Bro. Mansfield on "Paradise." He showed the number of times the word occurs in the Scriptures, etc. He then demonstrated where Paradise is not; not in hades, not in heaven, etc. In citing through the Bible the word Paradise, he answered a very popular argument founded on Luke 23: 43, that dead men are conscious. In conclusion, he showed that Paradise will be in the new glorified earth, and the thief will be remembered at its introduction, or at the appearing of Christ. After an intermission of five minutes, Sr. Mansfield addressed the congregation from Matt. 25: 34. The speaker showed the territory of the kingdom is in a ruinous condition; the curse is on it—the devil and wicked men are in it; these must be extirpated ere the saints possess the kingdom. The tares must all be extracted before the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. The speaker also proved very clearly that this earth renewed will be the everlasting and final abode of the saints of the Most High.

The people having obtained refreshment and rest, Bro. A. N. Seymour delivered a very stirring discourse from Matt. 24: 33, on the signs of the present time, illustrating the coming of the Son of man nigh, even at the doors. We felt to respond, amen. Near sunset Bro. A. F. Servis had the pleasure of aiding in the induction of one humble soul into Christ in the act of baptism.

In the evening Sr. Mansfield spoke on "the day of the Lord," and notwithstanding we had quite a shower during the sermon, the congregation remained quiet and gave good attention to the close of the discourse. The speaker labored to show that this dispensation is final, that it ends probation to our fallen world. This service closed the meeting, and the following morning we took the parting hand reluctantly, for our homes and various avocations. On the whole the meeting was a pleasant and profitable one.

The time and place for our next campmeeting is left optional with the brethren in this part of the State.

Conference at Rutland, Ill.

On Tuesday, Sept. 2nd, we pitched the old Mission Tent on the prairie three miles east of New Rutland. As we spread its folds to the breeze, we wondered where the people would come from to the meeting in that new and thinly settled section, not scarcely a fence to be seen for miles around, nothing but corn-fields, with here and there a farm-house. When after a ride of fifty miles over rolling prairies and through miry sloughs, we reached at last that (to us) dreary prairie, our hearts failed us when we thought of holding a meeting there; but, when we received the hearty welcome and heard the kind greeting that passed between the children, comparatively strangers, our courage revived; and when the sun rose clear and beautiful the next morning, we felt that all was right.

Our meeting was opened at two o'clock. During the week there was preaching by Brn. G. Moyer, H. G. McCullock, S. E. Maybe, George Needham, D. S. Clark, H. A. King, A. Royce, and J. Blain. Subjects presented were as follows: 1. Practical danger of being overcharged, and the necessity of watching. 2. Faith, and the necessity of Revelation. 3. Kingdom of God. 4. The promises made to the fathers. 5. Prophecies concerning Christ and his mission. 6. Baptism. 7. New birth and Resurrection. 8. The present trial of the church, and the perils of the last days. 9. The church should understand her position in the world's history. 10. The second of Daniel in connection with the time of trouble which ends Gentile rule and brings us to the establishment of the kingdom of God. 11. History and prophecy compared touching the rise and fall of the Papal power. 12. The final end of evil, by the utter destruction of the wicked. 13. The Melchisedec Priesthood.

These discourses were listened to with attention by good audiences. Much of the preaching was calculated to awaken the sinner to the necessity of preparing to meet the coming King. We know a few and we hope many were persuaded to break off their sins by righteousness and their iniquities by turning to God; but it was sometimes difficult to concentrate the minds of the people on the great truths of the gospel. A terrible battle was being fought near the Capitol and many were the anxious thoughts turned in that direction. Sons and brothers were leaving for the field of blood and strife; and it seemed almost impossible to induce men to think of religion. Some did stop to listen to the last call of mercy, as it spoke liberty to the captive soul and bade the ransomed one go free. It made our hearts rejoice to hear them tell what Christ had done for them, and exhort their friends to repent ere the last note of mercy sounded in the ears of a ruined world.

Friday morning. After singing and prayer, the Minutes were read and accepted. Ministers and brethren present not connected with the Conference were invited to a seat with us. After an examination, Bro. George Needham, of Bulkley, Iroquois Co., was received into the Conference. Reports were then heard from the following churches: Shabbona Grove, Paw Paw, Earlville, Amboy, Deer Park, Long Point, New Rutland, Millroy, Ionia, Indian Grove, Henderson. Reports from these churches were generally encouraging, but their state is more or less affected by the exciting scenes through which we are at present passing. But all are looking for deliverance soon to come.

After discussing various points touching the prosperity of our Master's cause, the Conference adjourned to meet again at Deer Park, at the call of the officers of the conference.

Sunday morning we assembled as usual for a love-feast, and many were the heart-cheering exhortations from the pilgrims scattered over these rich prairies. After the morning service one was baptized. Following the evening service, seventy-one sat down to the table of the Lord.

Many will remember with pleasure the tent meeting on the prairie, and thank God they were permitted to be there. New acquaintances were formed, the ties between the children strengthened, our hopes confirmed, and we trust all better prepared to see the King in his beauty. Every thing was done to make our stay pleasant, and it was with sad hearts that we parted with that loved band. And when war and strife are done, and the beautiful banner of peace shall wave in triumph o'er the world, may we meet with parted friends and all the ransomed host. Amen.

Letter from E. A. Annable.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I am pleased to see you so bravely rallying around the standard of Temperance. Be sure you faithfully keep your pledge. I hope every one of you will elect the Lord Jesus Christ for the Captain of your TRY COMPANY.

I am gratified at your prompt and correct answers to the questions proposed. Do not forget them, dear children, for this is heavenly wisdom, of which Solomon says:—"She is more precious than rubies: and all things thou canst desire, are not to be compared unto her."

Will some of the Try Company give the eight sentences uttered by the Savior on the cross, in the order in which they were probably spoken?

Your affec. friend, E. A. ANNABLE.

Answers and Questions.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to answer a few questions asked in the Crisis of Aug. 27th. Question 1. All the first-born in the land of Egypt should die.—Ex. 11: 5. 2. Manasseh was buried in his own house.—2 Chron. 33: 20. 3. Samson carried the doors and posts of the gate of the city of Gaza to the top of an hill that is before Hebron.—Judges 16: 3. 4. Samson was buried between Zorah and Esthaol, in the burying place of Manoah his father.—Judges 16: 31.

I wish to ask a few questions. 1. Where did the Israelites go to sharpen their axes? 2. What was king Solomon's throne made of? 3. What king fell through a lattice? 4. What captain had a nail driven in his temple? 5. Who fell out of a window when Paul was preaching?

Prov., R. I. JANE F. MUNROE.

"Baby, come forth."

A very young child was taken to the obsequies of a neighboring child. He had never seen the work of death, and looked long and earnestly at the beautiful infant, lying like polished marble in its dark coffin. At his return his mother placed him by the window, that he might see the procession pass. He regarded it with fixed attention. At length he turned to his mother, his face beaming with animation, and said:—

"Oh! how beautiful it will be when the Savior says, 'Baby, come forth!'"

It is probable that in those readings of Scripture that accompanied the devotions of a pious household, he had listened to the recital of the Redeemer calling Lazarus from the grave, and he had made a happy application of the sublime doctrine of the resurrection. Who can say how early the minds of our little ones may gather the dew-drops of divine truth, and be made wise unto salvation?—Ladies' Repository.

A bishop once said to a little child, "If you will tell me where God is, I will give you an orange." "If you will tell me where he is not, I will give you two," was the child's answer.

A Loving Mother.

Children, look in those eyes, listen to that dear voice, notice the feeling of even a single touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand! Make much of it while yet you have that most precious of all gifts—a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love of those eyes; the kind anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after life, you may have friends—fond, dear, kind friends—but never will you have again the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you which none but a mother can bestow. Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard, uncaring world, for the sweet, deep security I felt, when on an evening, nestling to her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale suitable to my age, read in her tender and untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared to sleep; never her kiss of peace at night! Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the old church-yard; yet still her voice whispered from the grave, and her eyes watch over me when I visit the spots long since hallowed to the memory of my mother.—Macauly.

GOD WILL KNOW IT.—A mother once told her little son to go to a carpenter's shop and get some chips. "But," said the boy, "the man is not there." "Never mind that," said the mother; "if he was there he would let you have them, and as he is not there, he will not know it." "But," said the little boy, "God will know it."

Never forget that God knows what you do.

"Forever with the Lord."

"Forever with the Lord!"
Oh! what a word is this!
"Forever" saved from grief and sin,
Forever filled with bliss!

"Forever with the Lord!"
Made for his presence meet,
Caught through the yielding air we'll go,
Our smiling King to greet!

"Forever!" how exults my soul
The promise to repeat;
"Forever" near my Savior's throne,
"Forever" at his feet!

"Forever" gained the shore
Where mortal conflicts cease;
"Forever" ending toil and care
In endless rest and peace!

"Forever" with the Lord,
Where praise employs each breath;
"Forever" wearing life's bright crown,
A victor over death.

"Forever!" Master, King!
Fulfill that word to me;
When nations own thy scepter's sway,
Let me thy glory see!

The World to Come.—Heb. 2: 5.

NUMBER ONE.

Rabbinical notions—the days of the Messiah—the dominion of death—the nature of man—the Spirit land—the world of fact vs. the world of fancy—modern ideas—the restitution—the age to come—the christian's hope—the kingdom of Christ—the incentive to godliness—the coming of Christ.

There have been and still are some curious notions in the world in relation to the world to come. The Jewish rabbis claim, first, "That the Bible history of the creation begins with the letter beth; because two worlds were created; this world and the world to come. Secondly, That the phrase—the world to come—hints at or points out the days or times of the Messiah. Thirdly, That the world to come is the state after death. Fourthly, That it means only the future, or age to come; hence, when the Pharisees said at the end of their prayers in the temple, ad-olam—forever, the Sadducees interrupted, saying there was no age but one, i. e., this age. Then it was appointed that the service should be concluded with, min-ha-olam, vead-ha-olam, i. e., forever and ever; or, both in this age and in the age to come.—Bab. Beracoth," fol. 54. "The distinction of olam-hazeh, this world, and olam-ha-bah, the world to come, may be found almost in every page of the rabbins."—A. Clarke's com. on N. T., p. 122. But among the Hebrews, as among the Gentiles, it seems there were various opinions on this subject, some of which without doubt were derived from the Gentiles during the term of Jewish captivity at Babylon.

Of the afore named opinions the second and fourth may be merged in one, for they are the same in fact, being only expressed in different terms. One thing however is admitted here and settled beyond controversy, even by Adam Clarke himself, and that is, the same word rendered world is also rendered age, and in the quotation before us they are used as synonymous. This is an important item in the consideration of this subject, for it destroys the philological argument, so much relied upon by many, that by the term world is necessarily implied another sphere than the one we now inhabit and running parallel with it.

On the same page the same learned author also admits that Paul, in the language of our text, uses the phrase "world to come" as referring to the days of the Messiah. In Matt. 12: 32, speaking of the sin against the Holy Spirit not being forgiven in this world neither in the world to come, he says it should be "dispensation." Now the reason for this declaration is apparent, for if the world to come be another sphere, running parallel with our earth-habitation, into which we enter at death, as an abode during another state of existence, and the present translation be allowed to stand as rendered in the text, then by the law of language it inevitably follows that the doctrine of a future probation and a possible restoration from all other sins save that against the Holy Spirit, may obtain; for so much as this is clearly implied in the text as it now stands: therefore rather than the sectarian doctrine of eternal conscious torment in misery should fail, and the poor sinner have another chance of escaping such a dire calamity by another trial, the admission prevails, though it be at the risk of exposing to the common people the great truth that the "world to come" is only the "age to come," when all things shall have been subdued unto Christ. So again in Eph. 1: 10, "fulness of times," "dispensation"; and in 2: 7, it is rendered "ages to come." In 1 Cor. 10: 11, "ends of the ages." Hebrews 9: 26, "conclusion of the ages," etc.

The first notion—creation of two worlds, indicated by the Bible history beginning with the letter beth, is simply ridiculous, for we all know by that same history (and so might these rabbins) that not only were two worlds created, but a universe of worlds was formed.

The third rabbinical notion—"the state after death"—corresponds with the more modern and still prevailing phrase and idea of "spirit-land," being universally adopted and believed in by the Romanists and Greek Catholics, Mohammedans and Mormons, modern Spiritualists and shaking Quakers, Indians, Africans, Asiatics, and all other heathen idol worshipers, besides numerous self-styled, and sometimes so-called Orthodox, Evangelical, Protestant-Christian denominations.

Of these—the first and third notions—I do not intend taking further notice, except by way of contrast in considering the second and fourth rabbinical ideas, called "the days of the Messiah and the future age, or age to come." These ideas seem to have been founded on a knowledge of the word of God; to have been received by revelation and not by tradition.

In the Bible examination of this subject it will probably be found that this second and fourth idea of the rabbins corresponds precisely with the teachings of the prophets, who in times past spake unto the fathers, and of the Son who in the last days spake unto us. It is also apparent that the apostles in adding their testimony as witnesses were influenced by the same spirit, for there is (but) one God and Father, one baptism, one faith, one Lord, one Spirit and one body,—and there is u-ni-formity in their teachings; hence Paul's idea in our text agrees exactly, as will be found—with that of the rabbis (second and fourth) drawn from the book of Moses; "For," says the apostle, "unto the angels hath he (the Father) not put in subjection the world (or age) to come, whereof we speak. But one in a certain place (Ps. 8: 4, 5) testified, saying, 'What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the Son of man (Christ Jesus) that thou visitest him? Thou madest him (Christ) a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him (in the time of visitation) with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him (Christ), he (the Father) left nothing (i. e., all sheep and oxen, beasts of the field, fowls of the air, fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea,—see Ps. 8,) that is not put under him" (Christ).

This is the testimony of one of the old prophets (David), spoken beforehand of the glory that should follow the sufferings of Christ. But it seems from 2 Cor. 4: 5–7, Col. 1: 24, and some other scriptures, that the sufferings of Christ are not yet ended, for there is a filling "up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ . . . for his body's sake, which is the church." And this view of the case was held by the apostle; for having quoted the Psalmist to sustain his position in verses 5 and 6, he by the same Spirit adds his own testimony in corroboration of the former witness, when he says, "But now (in Paul's time) we see not yet all things put under him" (Christ). Then it was still future in Paul's time, and remains so in ours. "But (with Paul) we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death (that he might suffer), crowned with glory and honor (that is the extent as yet), that he by the grace (favor) of God should taste death for every man."

We here discover perfect concord between the prophet and apostle, only Paul says explicitly Christ's reign is over "the age to come." G. W. STETSON.

Proof that the Wicked Dead will be Raised.

PROOF 1.—The Bible teaches that the wicked will suffer the "second death." Now, if the wicked are not to be raised, how can they, any of them, suffer such a death? The wicked who are now already dead have died the first death only; and if they die not again there is no "second death" to that class of them. The wicked who live at the time of Christ's second advent will be slain by the judgments of God, and that is their first death; and if they be not raised there is no "second death" to them. Some must be "hurt with the second death." To be "hurt" means to suffer. Now if, as it is contended, the wicked in death are unconscious, and never again will be made conscious by a resurrection, where, what, how is their punishment? The first death is not a punishment at all, but simply a consequence of the sin of Adam. The first death good people suffer also. It must be seen that if the wicked dead are not raised and punished, they escape any suffering for their own individual sins outright. To say that "their punishment consists in their remaining dead after they are dead," is to say that they suffer nothing.

PROOF 2.—All the punishment God has, in the past history of man, inflicted on the wicked has been judicially temporal. He inflicted the same evil on babes and animals in the overthrow of the old world that was inflicted on criminals; and shall he never make a distinction? Under the Jewish economy both criminals and innocent beasts were stoned to death. Could such an indiscriminate infliction be final? All moral intelligence must, it seems to me, revolt at the idea. The same may be said of Babylon, Rome, and other nations, peoples and communities, where sinners, babes and animals suffered in common.

PROOF 3.—The Bible teaches most plainly that God "knoweth how to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." It follows, then, that the unjust are not punished until the day of judgment—not when they die. It is not here stated that He "knoweth how to reserve a part or portion of the unjust unto the day of judgment," but the unjust as such, in contrast to the godly that He knoweth how to deliver out of temptation.

PROOF 4.—The Bible teaches that they who did pierce the Lord Jesus Christ shall be concerned with his second coming. "Behold He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." It is in vain to say, it means "they also which virtually pierced him." We may as well say, "Behold he virtually cometh with virtual clouds." Nonsense! How can they who pierced him also see him if they be not raised? Is there any real proof they ever became christians? More when needed.

Our Banner.

BY E. THAYER.

The question having been propounded to some of our friends concerning ourself,—"IS HE LOYAL?"—to define our position, and thus gratify such as desire to know what it is, we have prepared a "banner," which we design to bear through the terrible struggle for life in which our "dear native land" is now involved. Upon its pure folds we have inscribed the following beautiful sentiments:—

"In the name of our God we will set up our banners."—Ps. 20: 5. "Ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world."—JESUS CHRIST.—John 15: 19. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; THAT YE MAY BE THE CHILDREN OF YOUR FATHER WHICH IS IN HEAVEN."—Matt. 5: 44, 45. "Blessed are the PEACEMAKERS: FOR THEY SHALL BE CALLED THE CHILDREN OF GOD."—Matt. 5: 9. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do."—Luke 12: 4. "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."—Prov. 16: 7. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar, and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."—Ps. 46: 1–3. "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"—Ps. 27: 1. "Say ye not, a confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, a confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. AND HE SHALL BE FOR A SANCTUARY."—Isa. 8: 12–14. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee: BECAUSE HE TRUSTETH IN THEE."—Isa. 26: 3. "He that overcometh (the world) AND KEEPETH MY WORKS UNTO THE END, TO HIM WILL I GIVE POWER OVER THE NATIONS."—Rev. 2: 26.

Pray more than ever!

I feel like saying this to every christian I meet, especially those who are looking for the appearing of the heavenly Bridegroom.

Continual prayer works wonders. See it in the healing of breaches, whether personal, family, church, or among brethren generally. Continual prayer must and does prevail. Bless the Lord!

"But," says a brother or sister, "my case is peculiarly hard." Is it indeed? Just the one to begin with,—bring it along. Is any thing too hard for the Lord? Gen. 18: 14. Prayer takes hold of God, attracts his attention, secures his aid; and as sure as you are a living person, God is on your side if you pray continually.

"But,"— No buts, if you please. "But, do let me have one!" Well, be short,—what is it? "O! I am such a poor creature!" Bless the Lord that you have found it out. God knew it all the time. I tell you, pray on. "O, how bad I feel!" Hallelujah! it works beautifully,—pray on. You may have to feel worse than that,—but pray on. Jesus has taken your case in hand! Pray on. Now the Father and the Son are engaged with your case,—pray on. O how the light shines! Pray on. it will shine brighter yet. "If any body had told me I could have got so near the Lord, and not be shouting happy, I could hardly have believed it." All right, pray on; now is the time to get into God's order; you will shout by and by. Let us have a little light from the blessed Word. "For behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge."—2 Cor. 7: 11. Now pray for the Spirit's application; believe the intercessions of Jesus prevail; believe the Father accepts you; and as the Lord liveth he will make a perfect cure. "I believe it." Amen! "Jesus saves." Amen! "He saves me now." Amen!

"God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Now while you keep in fellowship with the Father and the Son, all is well. This is the place for shouting. "Let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains."—Isa. 42: 11.

Now, my dear brother or sister, whoever you are, you see there is nothing too hard for the Lord. And having sanctified you wholly, "I pray God, your whole spirit, and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Miscellaneous Items.—No. 1.

1.—IMMORTALITY.

As there can be no effect without a cause, and as a stream cannot rise higher than the fountain from which it proceeds, neither can mortality transmit immortality, or corruptibility transmit incorruptibility: hence, if the human soul is immortal, the soul must propagate its species, or God must directly create a soul for every human offspring,—not excepting illegitimates. This last position would be a blasphemous slander against Jehovah!

But if the soul can propagate its species while connected with the body, why not subsequent to its separation, and thus have the "spirit land" filled with soul-infants, or immaterial children? Furthermore, if the soul can propagate its species, why was it ever encumbered with a body, or shut up in a prison-house, and left to raise a boundless generation of immaterial bondmen? The following facts are obvious:—

1st. The material part of man can transmit only materiality; hence, if the soul is immaterial, its origin is distinct from a propagation of the human species, unless souls propagate their species in concert with the body, yet distinct therefrom. Immortality is not the offspring of mortality.

2nd. Unless immortal souls propagate their species, where can we find the origin of such souls? Is God constantly creating such deathless entities to imprison in tenements of clay? Where is the proof that God thus directly helps along the great sin which he has so severely denounced, by manufacturing souls for even illegitimates?

3d. Thus, unless immortality can transmit immortality, and thus propagate its species, or, unless God creates a soul separate from the body, to infuse into each body, man is certainly destitute of an immortal soul. If immortality can transmit immortality, while dwelling in mortality, it can continue to do so when separate from the body, and thus an endless propagation of deathless entities would be the result.

4th. The nature of the human soul is determined by a Bible decision of its origin. "All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls."—Ex. 1: 5. As the soul is transmitted by material man, it is mortal. as mortality cannot transmit immortality! W. SHELDON.

Daybreak.—8s. and 7s.

Watchman, tell me does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?
Have the signs which mark its coming
Yet upon my pathway shone?
Pilgrim, yes, arise, look round thee,
Light is breaking in the skies;
Gird thy bridal robes around thee;
Morning dawns! arise, arise!

Watchman, see! the light is beaming
Brighter still upon the way;
Signs through all the earth are gleaming—
Omens of the coming day,
When the Jubal trumpet sounding,
Shall awake from earth and sea
All the saints of God now sleeping,
Clad in immortality.

Watchman, hail the light ascending
Of the grand Sabbatic year;
All with voices loud proclaiming
That the Kingdom's very near.
Pilgrims, yes, I see just yonder
Canaan's glorious height arise;
Salem, too, appears in grandeur,
Towering 'neath its sunlit skies.

Watchman, in that golden city,
Seated on his jasper throne,
Zion's King, enthroned in beauty,
Reins in peace from zone to zone.
There on sunlit hills and mountains,
Golden beams serenely glow;
Purling streams and crystal fountains,
On whose banks sweet flow'rets blow.

Watchman, see! the land is nearing,
With its vernal fruits and flowers,
On, just yonder—O, how cheering,
Bloom forever Eden's bowers!
Hark! the choral strains there ringing,
Wafted on the balmy air,
See the millions; hear them singing—
Soon the pilgrims will be there!

A Jewel to my own Soul.

From "Muller's Life of Trust."

[Presented to me by Sr. M. A. Georgia Otis in the sacred camp, Wilbraham, Aug. 29th, 1862. The Lord reward her.] It is a jewel that I have had several glimpses of during the past year, but never could make it mine until it was so beautifully set before my ravished eyes by this holy man of God.

"The point is this: I saw more clearly than ever that the first great and primary business to which I ought to attend to was, to have my soul happy in the Lord. The first thing to be concerned about was not how much I might serve the Lord, how I might glorify the Lord; but how I might get my soul into a happy state, and how my inner man might be nourished. For I might seek to set the truth before the unconverted, I might seek to benefit believers, I might seek to relieve the distressed, I might in other ways seek to behave myself as a child of God in this world; and yet, not being happy in the Lord, and not being nourished and strengthened in my inner man day by day, all this might not be attended to in a right spirit. Before this time my practice had been, at least for ten years previously, as an habitual thing to give myself to prayer, after having dressed myself in the morning

Now I saw that the most important thing I had to do was to give myself to the reading of the word of God, and to meditate on it, that thus my heart might be comforted, encouraged, warned, reproved, instructed, and that thus, by means of the word of God, whilst meditating on it my heart might be brought into experimental communication with the Lord.

I began, therefore, to meditate on the New Testament from the beginning, early in the morning. The first thing I did, after having asked in a few words the Lord's blessing upon his precious word, was, to begin to meditate on the word of God, searching as it were into every verse, to get blessing out of it; not for the sake of the public ministry of the word, not for the sake of preaching on what I had meditated upon, but for the sake of obtaining food for my own soul. The result I have found to be almost invariably this, that after a very few minutes my soul has been led to confession, or to thanksgiving, or to intercession, or to supplication; so that, though I did not, as it were, give myself to prayer, but to meditation, yet it turned almost immediately more or less into prayer. When thus I have been for awhile making confession, or intercession, or supplication, or have given thanks, I go to the next words or verse, turning all, as I go on, into prayer for myself or others, as the word may lead to it, but still continually keeping before me that food for my own soul is the object of my meditation. The result of this is, that there is always a good deal of confession, thanksgiving, supplication, or intercession mingled with my meditation, and that my inner man is sensibly nourished and strengthened, and that by breakfast time, with rare exceptions, I am in a peaceful if not happy state of heart. Thus also the Lord is pleased to communicate unto me that which, either very soon after or at a later time, I have found to become food for other believers, [how I love this name for the children of God. E. S. W.] though it was not for the sake of the public ministry of the word that I gave myself to meditation, but for the profit of my own inner man. . . .

It often now astonishes me that I did not sooner see this point. In no book did I ever read about it. No public ministry ever brought the matter before me. No private intercourse with a brother stirred me up to this matter. And yet now, since God has taught me this point, it is as plain to me as any thing, that the first thing the child of God has to do morning by morning is, to obtain food for his inner man. As the outward man is not fit for work for any length of time except we take food, and as this is one of the first things we do in the morning, so it should be with the inner man. Now what is the food for the inner man? Not prayer, but the word of God; and here again, not the simple reading of the word of God, so that it only passes through our minds, just as water runs through a pipe, but considering what we read, pondering over it, and applying it to our hearts. When we pray we speak to God. Now prayer, in order to be continued for any length of time in any other way than a formal manner, requires, generally speaking, a measure of strength or godly desire; and the season, therefore, when this exercise of the soul can be most effectually performed, is after the inner man has been nourished by meditation on the word of God, where we find our Father speaking to us, to encourage us, to comfort us, to instruct us, to humble us, to reproach us. We may, therefore, profitably meditate with God's blessing, though we are ever so weak spiritually; nay, the weaker we are, the more we need meditation for the strengthening of our inner man. There is thus far less to be feared from wandering of mind than if we give ourselves to prayer without having had previously time for meditation.

I dwell so particularly on this point because of the immense spiritual profit and refreshment I am conscious of having derived from it myself, and I affectionately and solemnly beseech all my fellow believers to ponder this matter. By the blessing of God I ascribe to this mode the help and strength which I have had from God to pass in peace through deeper trials, in various ways, than I had ever had before; and after having now above fourteen years tried this way, I can most fully, in the fear of God, commend it."

Let me, unworthy as I am, take up the exhortation of our brother across the waters, and encourage my "fellow believers" with me to commence this work, those of them who have not already done so; and especially would I entreat the dear lambs of the flock who owned their Lord and Master at our late meeting at Wilbraham, to profit by the experience of this eminent man of God, that, with God's blessing, like him they may become strong in the Lord, even in the days of their youth. So prays your Sister, E. S. WILLARD.

A Thought.

As the heavenly signs that were to herald forth the coming of Christ were seen more prominently in these United States, where the light and liberty of the gospel was enjoyed more than elsewhere, are we not justified in believing that those signs to occur "on the earth beneath" will also occur here? I think we are; and that the present distress and perplexity this nation is passing through is in exact harmony with the prophetic Scriptures; and with God's uniform mode of dealing with nations, as well as with individuals, viz., "to whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required";—those who sin against much light and knowledge "shall be beaten with many stripes."

This is the last great nation of earth, occupying a territory in extent that few others ever attained, and blessed with the combined knowledge of all ages past; of God's dispensational blessings towards those nations that hearkened to the voice of his word, and repented when his admonitions of impending judgment were proclaimed, like Nineveh of old, and of his wrath, and of his utter overthrow of those who heeded not his warnings. And then last of all, favored above all other nations in beholding all those signs, both "in the heavens above and in the earth beneath," that were to precede the judgment. I say, can such mercies be rejected with impunity? They certainly cannot, if God's word is to stand.

Judgment must and will begin where the mercies of God were last and most signally conferred; for it is written, "the last shall be first, and the first last." This is the exact order of breaking the nations, as taught in the 2nd chap. of Daniel. The stone smites the image on the feet, part of iron and part of clay, which are first broken.

Judgment begins where rejected mercies end. The Jews rejected Christ and were broken—the Gentiles reject his return to reign, and must be ground to powder. The breaking is first; and begins outside of the prophetic world, where the greatest light has been conferred. P. ALLING.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 2.

Through scenes of carnage and woe, extending unto the events ushered in by the blast of the seventh angel's trump, which awakes the slumbering dead, we are brought to the close of time; the mystery of God is finished, and the reign of glory begins. Not until then is there any bright picture presented before us; all preceding is darkness and gloom, and only upon an immortal Paradise does the sun shine with unclouded splendor.

But we will turn our eye away from this view, to another drawn with artistic skill by one who gazed upon the scene as it passed before his telescopic vision. It was given unto him to trace the onward march of the church even to the end of her pilgrimage and entrance into the golden city. He first beholds her trampled in the dust, worn out with racks, dungeons, and faggot fires, and fleeing into the wilderness for safety; then he beholds her coming forth from the wilderness, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. Earthly monarchs sway the scepter of christianity—worldly emoluments are awarded her—the wealth and honors of the world are laid at her feet.

Time rolls on—the "last days" behold her exalted position—the mountain of the Lord's house is established in the tops of the mountains, or in other words, the government of the church is established by earthly governments, and all nations are flowing unto her. As he gazes upon the throng he hears them speak, and their language is an invitation for others to go with them to the house of the Lord, assuring them of a good time coming, when the law would go forth from Jerusalem, when he should judge among the nations, and they should beat their swords into plow shares, and their spears into pruning hooks, when nations would learn war no more. After the prophet hears the sayings of the people who are flowing to the house of the Lord, he is made to understand "the word of the Lord." The Lord declares that in the day when those things are said, he will assemble her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out, and make of her a strong nation, and reign over them in Mt. Zion forever.

He describes the "many nations" as being proud and idolaters, and says they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand his counsel, and declares that they shall be beaten into pieces and their gain be consecrated unto the Lord. He describes the day when he shall do this as one of terror, when the earth would be terribly shaken, and those of lofty looks shall flee for shelter to the rocks, and hide themselves in their clefts for fear of the Lord, and the glory of his majesty. (Isa. 2. Micah. 4.)

Another, as he gazes into futurity, beholds the increase of infidelity as a marked characteristic of "the last days," and writes it out for a way mark. Unable to endure sound doctrine, they "shall be turned unto fables."

He is permitted also to see the great agency which effects this apostasy from the truth, and declares that the spirit speaketh expressly, with clearness and certainty that "seducing spirits," teaching the doctrines of devils, speaking lies hypocritically, will entice men away from the truth and faith of the gospel. Very distinct before the eye of the seer was the picture of the professed church in "the last days," and he briefly describes the sins of which they who bear the christian name would be guilty. "Lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, breakers, false accusers, . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3.

Such is the character of the church in "the last days," as seen by prophetic eye, and written by an inspired pen; and well might the observer exclaim in view of such a condition, "Perilous times shall come!" When? "In the last days." "The last days" spoken of by Isaiah when multitudes were to flow to the house of the Lord, when the great man would bow down and the mean man together in mock worship; else why does the prophet say to the Lord, "therefore forgive them not." "The last days," when the land was to be full of silver and gold and horses and chariots. Isa. 2. "The last days" when scoffers would come, walking after their own lusts, and saying, "where is the promise of his coming?" Scoffers, who would deny the past destruction of an ungodly world by water, and its future baptism of fire. Scoffers, who in their chosen ignorance declare that there has been no change since the creation, but all things continue as they were. [illegible]

Two Days at Plainville Campmeeting.

Only two days, yet it was to me a great feast, and having got safely home, I want to tell our brethren and sisters that were not there, some of the good things we had. Don't you know it is said that choice goods are put up in small parcels? It does not take a very large lump of gold to make a hundred dollars; but for that hundred dollars you can get quite a little farm. Now it was something so with our meeting. It was small compared with our great family gatherings at Wilbraham, but it was choice as gold. There was a unity of spirit that I have not seen before for some time. No heated discussions on points of doctrine, but the peaceable fruits of righteousness were everywhere manifest. This was good.

Then another good thing was a discourse from Matt. 18: 35, by Bro. Grant. I wish that all my brethren, yea, the whole world, might have heard it; for I know it would have done them good. There is no question but there must be a preparation of the heart, as well as a regulation of the head, in order to have an abundant entrance administered unto us into the everlasting kingdom. Following the sermon were some confessions. That text was most too strait for past life, and good resolutions were formed to abide by God's whole truth for time to come.

After dinner and a season for prayer in the tents, came a soul-cheering discourse by H. L. Hastings, from 1 John 3: 13, showing the love of God, the importance of the message of love to man, and the purity of person necessary to be like him and to see him as he is when he doth appear. In the evening quite a large and attentive audience (as many came upon the ground from the immediate vicinity that were not there during the day) listened to Bro. Munger, from Acts 3: 19–21. First, showing repentance necessary to conversion. Second, repentance and conversion necessary to the blotting out of sins. Third, the time of blotting, when He shall send Jesus, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution. Fourth, the things restituted. Fifth, proof found spoken by all the prophets.

Sunday morning our first meeting at the stand was for love feast. From the evidence given in, some had meat to eat the world knew not of. The weather being fine, the people began to come together from all directions, so that when the hour for preaching arrived our little camp was well filled. Listened again to Bro. Munger from John 5: 39, 40, followed by Bro. Hastings in a few remarks upon the same point. Think that the whole had a salutary effect, though to some it was evidently strong meat, yet it opened the eyes of others. In the afternoon Bro. Hastings preached on the signs of the times, from 2 Thess. 5: 4. First, showing what day was here spoken of. Second, that some were in darkness concerning it. Third, reason why all were not, some had taken heed to the sure word of prophecy. Fourth, an enumeration of the things prophesied to come to pass in the last days, showing their fulfillment, according to the word, in this our day, coming to the point where it is said that men should be lovers of pleasure more than of God. After the closing of this discourse and an intermission of about twenty minutes, Bro. Hastings took the stand again and gave us a war sermon, showing us what God had said in regard to war in these last days, giving the people to understand that there had been going on against the government of God a rebellion more heinous than that of the south, which could only be quelled by his rising up in judgment against it, and that he was thus doing it by giving the nations to the sword, and that he would finally accomplish it by the entire overthrow of the nations of earth and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom. Thus ended the preaching of the word; with what effect the judgment alone will make manifest. That it was salutary for the time upon the minds and consciences of some was quite evident; but whether it shall prove a source of life unto life or death unto death, the judgment will determine.

I left the ground feeling more than ever that the position we occupied was true; that the pure in heart only would see God; that the meek alone should finally inherit the earth,—and asking myself the question, how many of this company will meet at the marriage supper of the Lamb? I left it with a prayer ascending to Him "who inhabiteth eternity" that his grace might be sufficient for me, and feeling that perhaps it was the last time I should ever have the opportunity of attending campmeeting. May God help us so "to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." Yours, HENRY T. HART.

Sandisfield Campmeeting.

Our campmeeting at Sandisfield, Mass., enjoyed a special blessing from the Lord. It was on the ground occupied last year for the same purpose. The place is ten miles north from Winsted, Ct. We labored in this section nine years since, but met with much prejudice from professors of religion. Since that time, Bro. Wm. Fenn has bestowed considerable faithful labor in this field, and has seen good fruit result from his efforts. When we arrived in the place, on Tuesday evening, we received a hearty welcome from Dea. Webster, who would not come to hear us nine years ago; but is now rejoicing in the same blessed hope, and wondering why he did not see it before. His is a pilgrim's home, where the saints meet with a kind reception.

We found the people anxious to hear and know the truth. They have become dissatisfied with the popular, half-hearted religion of the day, as well as tired of hearing war sermons. They are starving for want of "the sincere milk of the word." They have been fed with fables till they are nearly famished, and some have consented to feed on husks, and like drunkards, their appetites have become so corrupted that they actually crave the fabled preaching of these last days, instead of the simple truth of the Bible. They wish for intellectual entertainment, instead of the pointed preaching that disturbs their unrighteousness and semi-infidel sentiments. Their theology is but a modification of Swedenborgianism and Spiritualism, which are really but one and the same thing. The plain teaching of the Bible is twisted and turned till it is made to teach every thing but the truth; and many have become so bewildered in the labyrinths of popular theology, that they have turned away with disgust from every thing of a doctrinal character, and are like a ship in the storm with no helm or compass. They are in the whirlpool of uncertainty; and while they think they are coming out gloriously somewhere, they are only rushing to certain ruin.

During our meeting, a great amount of prejudice was removed, and many saw their perilous situation, and decided to take the Bible as their guide, and go to Jesus for instruction. They had been like shipwrecked mariners on a lone island, who had given up all hope of rescue; but are now rejoicing at the approach of the lifeboat, with a fair prospect of being taken on board. It was cheering to find so many willing to exchange fables for the word of truth. We trust many will ever thank the Lord for the Sandisfield campmeeting.

The preaching was by Brn. S. B. Munn, Geo. L. Teeple, Chas. Goodrich, H. Pratt, Wm. Fenn, C. Gardner, B. St. John, and M. Grant. Several were converted during the meeting; backsliders started again for the kingdom, and the saints were greatly strengthened. We met many of the Lord's children, whom we had not seen for years. It was very refreshing to talk over the blessed seasons we had enjoyed in days bygone, and still more so to look forward to those about to open upon our astonished vision. We were rejoiced to find that they all belong to the army of peacemakers, that has no use for carnal weapons. Their Captain is called "the Prince of peace." We found them disposed to obey the orders of their Leader, that they may "be called the children of God." They are expecting victory soon, and a triumphant entrance into the lovely bowers of their happy Eden home, where no rumor of war will ever be heard during the boundless duration of the everlasting kingdom.

We had a heavenly love-feast on Lord's day morning. In one hour, over one hundred witnesses testified to the value of the christian religion, and their determination to endure to the end. Old men almost felt young again, on account of the joy and peace that triumphed in their hearts, while listening to the stirring testimonials of Zion's pilgrims. One who had been a Methodist for many years, and enjoyed their refreshing love-feasts, in their palmy days, said, "This seems like an old-fashioned Methodist meeting." One remarked, "This is a supplement to Methodism." Another said, "The supplement is expected to contain something extra." We can speak from experience on this point, and say this "supplement" is the best of the whole. Without this, there would be a great deficiency. Methodism was good, but who can estimate the value of this supplement? Praise the Lord, we ever embraced it. Take this away, and we should be like the children of Israel returning from Canaan to Egypt. This blessed expectation of the coming of Jesus is the key-stone of the christian's hope. Take this out, and the whole falls to the ground. And, what is better still, we have the best of reasons for expecting him very soon. We parted at the Sandisfield campmeeting, in the sweet hope of an early union in the "camp of the saints," where there will never be an occasion to speak again of sorrow, pain, sickness or death.

Fighting Christians.

As we understand the Scriptures, "fighting christians," swearing christians, lying christians, and licentious christians, belong to the same company, and receive the same reward—a portion "in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." We see no ground for such to hope for salvation; and yet there are professed ministers of the gospel, who hold up the idea, as did Mahomet, that those who die on the battle-field, in the defence of their country and religion, will receive a crown of glory in the world to come.

We wish to introduce to the reader a few testimonies from primitive christians, in the first and second centuries, in order that it may be seen how far the present generation of professors have departed from the Lord, and the standard set up by Christ.

Turtullian says:—"Though the soldiers came to John, and received a certain form to be observed, and though the centurion believed, yet Jesus Christ, by disarming Peter, disarmed every soldier afterward; for custom never sanctions an unlawful act." "Can a soldier's life be lawful, when Christ has pronounced, that he who lives by the sword, shall perish by the sword? Can one who professes the peaceable doctrines of the gospel, be a soldier, when it is duty not so much as to go to law? And shall he who is not to revenge his own wrongs, be instrumental in bringing others into chains, imprisonment, torment, death?"

Lactantius says:—"It can never be lawful for a righteous man to go to war."

Irenæus says, about A. D. 180:—"For the christians have changed their swords and lances into instruments of peace, and they know not how to fight."

Marcellus, who was a centurion in the Trajana Legion, became a christian, threw down his military belt, saying, "It is not lawful for a christian to bear arms, for any earthly consideration."

Take another case. Martin, who was bred to the profession of arms, was converted to christianity, and in his answer to Julian the Apostate, he says, "I am a christian, and therefore I cannot fight."

Justin Martyr says:—"We who in times past killed one another, do not now fight with our enemies."

History affirms, "That for nearly the first two centuries, no christians would either take upon themselves or continue the profession of soldiers." "Every christian writer of the second century, who notices the subject, makes it unlawful for christians to bear arms."

The following example shows how early christians looked upon war. Maximilian was brought before the tribunal to be enrolled as a soldier; and when Dion, the Proconsul, asked him his name, he replied, "Why wouldst thou know my name? I am a christian, and cannot fight." Dion replied, "Bear arms, or thou shalt die." Maximilian answered, "I cannot fight, if I die; I am not a soldier of the world, but a soldier of God." Dion replied, "Take thy arms, and receive the mark." Said Maximilian, "I can receive no such mark, I have already the mark of Christ." Dion then directed the officer to mark him. Maximilian replied, "I cannot receive the mark of this world; and, if thou shouldst give me the mark, I will destroy it. It will avail nothing. I am a christian; and it is not lawful for me to wear such a mark about my neck, when I have received the saving mark of the Lord Jesus, the Son of the living God, whom thou knowest not, who died to give us life. Him all we obey, and follow, as the Restorer of our life, and the Author of our salvation." Dion immediately replied, "Take thy arms, and receive thy mark, or thou shalt suffer a miserable death." "But I shall not perish," said Maximilian; "my name is already enrolled with Christ;—I cannot fight." When Dion found he could not persuade Maximilian to take carnal weapons and fight, he pronounced the following sentence: "Maximilian, because thou hast, with a rebellious spirit, refused to bear arms, thou art to die by the sword." Maximilian replied, "Thanks be to God."

This noble christian was only a little over twenty years of age. Are there not some in our day, who will stand as firmly for the principles of Christ as did this young man? We think there may yet be an opportunity.

"Powder and Providence."

The above is the heading of an interesting article in the Springfield Republican, (Mass.) which is one of the most able and reliable newspapers in our country. There are but few closer, and more candid observers of our national affairs than its distinguished editors. There is so much truth in the following extract from the article on "Powder and Providence," that we think our readers will be well paid for a perusal. The writer says:—

"It is an unpleasant truth to state—but it is a truth—that we had become a Godless and a Christless nation. Where, in the suffrages of the people or in the doings of legislative assemblages, was religion honored? Who have been elected to make laws but those, very largely, who were most ready to break them? The men whom a professedly christian nation has sent to Washington to legislate for thirty millions of people are those who have made Washington one of the most vicious and corrupt places on the face of the earth. A lobbyer grows fat there with the spoils of an office based upon the well known corruptions of congress. The gambler has his most gorgeous hells there. The courtezans of costliest habits thrive there. And, in the halls devoted to the momentous work of legislation, there are whole parties that have laughed to scorn the idea that there is a higher law existing than the country's constitution. . . .

Nay, there has been something worse, if possible, than all this. It has been deemed, to a certain extent, a disqualification for public office to be a christian. The highest social life, not only in Washington, but in the nation at large, has been a life divorced from a pious regard for the Supreme, and a practical faith in the Savior of mankind. To secure even a nomination for office, men have been, as a general thing, obliged to do things that christian men would be ashamed of. Vice has been patronized because it had votes to give. Intemperance has been fostered because it had power at the ballot-box. Men have been laughed at and scoffed and contemned,—nay, they have been politically proscribed—because they would not pay for votes, either directly, or indirectly, to secure their own election to office. The politics of the nation have been in the hands of unprincipled men, and a political campaign, managed in strict accordance with christian principle, is not remembered, we presume, by any one who reads this article. The question is never asked concerning a candidate for office as to whether he is a christian or not. While this is true, and while it is true that in multitudes of places a reputation for active christian life would harm rather than help a political man who desired office, it is also true that earnest christian men, or those who seem such, vote for men who are notorious for gambling, tippling and licentiousness. . . .

The politics of this nation had become practical infidelity, and they were growing worse every day. We had become so deeply debased that we were surprised at nothing; and we easily and immediately adapted ourselves to any outrage upon humanity, christianity or common decency. . . .

With such privileges as this nation enjoys, and such light as fills it, shining from the universally diffused pages of Revelation and the pages of its own history, we shall be allowed to have no firm and long continued peace until, alike in the capitol and the President's mansion, there is an honest recognition of the grand, over-ruling Power who holds the affairs of the nation in his hand. There ought to be no peace until christian principle is recognized as the only legitimate basis of political as well as private action,—until, in the high places of the nation, God shall be recognized as governor, and the great fact practically admitted that only in the line of divine law and order can a nation be powerful and prosperous. We are having this great lesson drilled into us to-day by balls and bayonets. Not a shell screams through the air but is aimed by God's eye and hand at the intrenchments of national infidelity. Let us accept the lesson, and pray heaven that we may never forget it."

Getting Ready.

We are rejoiced to find that the children of the Lord are beginning to feel the importance of being ready for the coming of the Son of man. The last work of the church, according to the Scriptures, is to prepare for "the marriage supper of the Lamb." For some time past, many of the saints have been too much taken up with the things of this world; and, as a results have become inactive in the vineyard of the Lord. They now begin to realize the need of entire consecration, in order to be "ready" to meet the coming Bridegroom; who wishes to have his bride without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." If ready, she must "be holy and without blemish." We shall expect to see the good work progressing in all directions. Come, "let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

Prosperity of The Crisis.

The prosperity of The Crisis as a subscription paper, was never greater than it is to-day. While other papers are suffering and dying out, from hardness of the times and from other causes, God is blessing us more abundantly than ever before.

The rapid increase of its subscription list, for the few months past, is remarkable. Since the 1st of June, now (Sept 30th) four months, we have received 409 new subscribers; in June 78, in July 86, in August 103, and in September 142,—showing a considerable advancement of each month beyond its predecessor. Stoppages, 159; nett gain, 250. This is doing well; and we thank God and take courage to push the battle with new vigor. The Lord is on our side, and we feel happy in the assurance that the course taken by The Crisis is receiving the approval of God and the brethren.

Perhaps no other religious paper in the country has proportionably increased, during the same period,—all things considered,—in a larger ratio than ours. Should we increase in the same proportion through the year to come, we shall have, at the close of 1863, a subscription list of 5000 subscribers.

And why may it not be done? It can be done; all it needs is—will, and work. And if our preaching brethren, and all who love the precious truths peculiar to its columns, will take hold of the work in earnest, as, for example, Bro. Grant does, it will be done. A very large proportion of our new subscribers, is the immediate result of his own preaching and personal labors from week to week. He goes down, for instance, to the Corinna campmeeting, and—without percentage or remuneration—collects $110 on Crisis accounts, and gets 27 new subscribers; from the Sandisfield and Plainville campmeetings, he brings home $75, and 14 new subscribers; at Camp Wilbraham, with the clerk, collects about $300, and obtains about 50 new subscribers; and in like manner at his various appointments from week to week.

And now, brother reader, what will you do, in this direction? You can do something. The times are favorable. Omens of coming judgment multiply. Men are anxiously looking, and inquiring,—"What is coming on the earth?" They want light. You can put them in the way of getting it. Will you?

Work! while the day lasts; the night is coming soon! W. B. H.

How Much is a Billion?

A correspondent, writing from Philadelphia, criticises Bro. Mansfield's calculation in his article, "Not Room Enough," in the Crisis for Sept. 16th, and remarks:—

"Some of our brethren seem to labor under the mistake, that a thousand millions is equal to a billion; but this is not so. It requires ten hundred thousand millions (13 figures) to make one billion—1,000000,000000; and ten hundred thousand billions (19 figures) to make one trillion—1,000000,000000,000000."

Our correspondent "labors under a mistake" in supposing that the English notation, which gives six places to each period, and requires 13 figures, or a million of millions to make a billion, is in use in this country. This is not so. The English method was found to produce great irregularity in the notation, giving three places for the units of the first two periods (viz: units and thousands) and six places to each of the others, and hence it was discarded in America and on the continent of Europe, and the French method, which gives three places to each period, adopted in its stead. Our brother will therefore see that, while it requires a million of millions to make an English billion, it requires only one thousand millions (1,000 000,000) to equal a French billion, and hence that Bro. Mansfield's notation is in accordance with the method in use in this country. An English billion and a French trillion are equal. W. B. H.

Please send the Money.

We wish all who have not paid their subscriptions for the last year's mission, would forward it to me immediately, as I have paid out the money on the expectation that they would soon pay it. Let us keep our covenants, and do all our duty to God and man. I hope you will see the importance also of keeping up the missionary work, and renew your subscriptions for the coming year.

We have engaged Bro. R. R. York to travel as missionary, who will visit your various places, and labor as he has means of learning your locations and wants. He will do you good in the name of the Lord. Please write to him or me, you who wish his labors, and make arrangements for meetings in your vicinities.

We have also engaged Bro. Thos. Smith, of Bangor, as missionary. He also will go to new and old fields, and preach the word as opportunity offers. Let us do all we can for the salvation of men now.

The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance.

This book is the best book in the world for a student of the Old Testament, whether he knows Hebrew wholly, partly, or not at all. Any person with a good English education can use it, and find out the Hebrew words used in any passage in the Old Testament. The work was prepared at great expense under the superintendence of a christian brother in England, George V. Wigram, into whose heart God put the disposition to use his wealth in enabling others to understand the living oracles. The Concordance gives all the Hebrew words, and all instances where each one occurs, and the various ways in which it is translated in the English Bible. The manner of its construction is this: first, the Hebrew word is set at the top in Hebrew letters; it is also spelled out in English as accurately as it can be. Then underneath it are placed all the quotations from the English Bible in which that Hebrew word is translated; and in those quotations the English words which represent that Hebrew word are italicised, so that at a glance a person may see the entire Hebrew usage of any word.

There is also an index at the end, by which a passage may be found with very little trouble, even if the person does not know a letter in the Hebrew alphabet. By the aid of the two indexes and the Concordance, a person may find all the Hebrew words which may be translated from one and the same Hebrew word. It is on precisely the same principle as the "Englishman's Greek Concordance," which was made under the supervision of the same brother. As for example: in the Greek Concordance the English word Hell is translated from three Greek words—Hades, Gehenna, and Tartarus. Looking at the index we learn this fact; and by turning to Gehenna we find the various places where this word is translated hell, while by turning to another page, we find the word hades occurring, which is not only translated hell, but also grave; and all the instances where the word occurs are there given. Turning still to another passage, we find the word Tartarus, and the place where it occurs.

The Englishman's Greek Concordance has been re-published in this country. The price of it is but $4 00; and a person who wishes to understand the New Testament can find no better book to aid him. The Hebrew Concordance has never been published in this country. The two together cost, when imported from England, about $30; probably a little more at present. For some time past the Hebrew Concordance could not be purchased in this country for less than about $22, at wholesale. At present the price must be even higher than that, from the fact that everything imported from England has to be paid for in gold or its equivalent; and this would bring the cost of the book to about $25. The duties now raised from eight to twenty per cent, must add materially to the price. The book is bound in two pretty thick volumes.

Several brethren have spoken to me about getting this work, but have been unable to pay the large price, and unwilling to do without it if it could be obtained. For the benefit of such, I addressed a letter a few months since to the author of the book, stating my circumstances, and my desire to get some copies of it, cheap if possible, for the benefit of poor brethren who were preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. He referred the matter to his publishers, as the work is now under their control instead of his own; and I have just received his and their answer. By their kindness and liberality I shall be able to obtain copies of the book at prices much less than any bookseller in the country can obtain them. By ordering at least ten copies at a time, I shall get them so that I think they will not cost when delivered here more than $15 or $16. I cannot tell exactly, as the price of gold is constantly changing, and I am not fully acquainted with the expense of transportation.

Now if there are ten brethren who wish for copies of this book, I will engage to furnish them for the cash at a price not exceeding about $15. I presume no opportunity has been, or will be again offered to obtain them so cheaply as under this arrangement. It will require some three months, I suppose, to send and obtain them. If I get them, I may have some of them bound in this country in one volume. Ordinarily they are bound in two volumes. But this I am not certain of. I wish now to hear immediately from every one who wants a copy. And if they are unable to raise the $15 at this moment, they may still send their names, agreeing to take one and pay for it on its arrival, probably about Jan. 1st, 1863, and they shall be remembered and provided with copies in case enough are sent for to warrant my sending for them. I hope every brother who possibly can do so, will obtain a copy of this book. All preachers who desire rightly to divide the word of truth, and be able ministers of the New Testament, should have both this and the Englishman's Greek Concordance. Well used, they will be of priceless value to any believer.

Cannot some of our brethren who have this world's goods, please God and themselves also by purchasing a copy of this book and giving it to some poor preacher? There are plenty of preachers who need, and yet are unable to purchase such a book as this; but let them have such books as they need, and their dry and barren sermons will soon show the effect of "top-dressing." Let those who grumble at the dull preaching give the preacher something to fertilize his mind, and not think they can tap a man's brains from three to six times every week, and still have his mind full and gushing without some effort to replace that which is drawn out.

I wait to hear from all concerned in the matter IMMEDIATELY, for I wish to move at once in the matter. Write me at Boston, Mass. I do this for the benefit of the brethren; I myself am provided with a copy, having paid a larger price for it years ago than these will cost. Yours,

H. L. HASTINGS.

About the Hymn Book.

There is a general aversion to having a new kind of hymn book introduced, as many of us are too poor to change our hymn book every time the moon changes; yet it is extensively felt that our present collection is faulty, and erroneous in its doctrines. It occurs to me that the matter can be made all right without plunging every thing into confusion.

1. Retain the Lyre, which is already in general use, the greater part of it being correct.

2. Subtract every page of incorrect matter, and substitute that which is right, leaving the other pages unaltered through the book, so that those who can not yet purchase a new book, will not be much disturbed. A trifling cost, (stereotyping a score or two of pages,) will make the book perfect in its sentiments.

3. Add a few appropriate hymns, for special occasions, at the close of the book.

4. Then the only new book that we should subsequently need, would be a reprint of the same, in pocket form, without the music. The above is submitted to the consideration of Bro. Himes and the "society," hoping it will meet their approval.

The "Coming Struggle."

Can it be that there is not interest enough among those who profess the truth, and have money too, to put the "Coming Struggle" in the hands of the printer without any more delay? There are a good many works published that are not so much needed as that one now. It is now near a year since pledges have been sent in. Why cannot there be more raised immediately, so that the work can be put forward? Brn. and Srs., you need to wake up and make use of some of the Lord's money, of which you are stewards. The Lord is soon coming. There is not the least shadow of a doubt, only to unbelief, and the sleepy virgins. You had better see that your lamps are trimmed, and that you are ready now; than to wait till it may be too late. Through my feeble efforts, I have lately got one young soldier to enlist for the war, and he is resolved to fight for the kingdom; and we hope others will join the same company. The Captain offers a hundred-fold bounty here, and at the end of the war, all the land that was promised to father Abraham, and eternal life in which to enjoy it. Wake up, ye old soldiers, and put forth every effort to get new volunteers. The war has long been going on, but the victory is sure to be gained soon.

About Bibles and Lexicons.

To C. G. C. Liddell & Scott's Greek Lexicon, (price $5) is the best for the general study of the Greek language, but for the New Testament alone, Robinson's (costing $4) is much more full. For a student of the New Testament, Wm. Greenfield's pocket Greek Lexicon, costing about 75 cents, is the best, price and all considered. The most convenient Greek Testament is the Polymicrian, bound up with this Lexicon, costing from $1.75 to $2.50, according to binding. This can easily be carried in the pocket. There are various others. The best New Testament Lexicon, for beginners, is Bagster's Analytical Greek Lexicon, price $6.25 to $7. This gives the grammatical construction of every word as it stands in the New Testament; and with the Greek Testament and Englishman's Greek Concordance ($4), pretty thoroughly equip a common reader. A Bagster's Bible, middle size, with Greek New Testament interleaved, morocco, costs about $6; with Lexicon, $7; with Old and New Testaments in Greek, $10.75. The English alone, $4.75. There are three sizes of English,—small, middle size, and an 8vo. size, all corresponding with each other page for page, but the various languages only interleave with the middle sized copy. H. L. ### A Correction.

In the article headed "Retribution" and relating to the edition of that work, in the Crisis of September 16th, there occurred a somewhat important inaccuracy which I wish to correct. The writer—H. L. Hastings—says; "The statement quoted in the previous edition, that it would take more than ten thousand million years to judge the world, etc., having been disavowed by the man who made it as an error of his treacherous memory, I am of course very happy to withdraw what was said concerning it."

What I have to say in correction of this remark is, 1. That an intimate acquaintance of more than ten years with Mr. Storrs, who is "the man" alluded to, convinces me that his "memory" is not a "treacherous" but a GOOD one. I think his friends generally, who know him personally, will concede the justice of this estimate. 2. Mr. Storrs has not scandalized his "memory," by calling it "treacherous" as it is claimed he has done. 3. Mr. Storrs has not in the manner above specified "disavowed" the error contained in his "ten thousand million years" statement (which, by the way, was intended to be "ten million years"—the mistake being in the interpolation of the word "thousand"). His "Explanation and Correction" was published (by me) in the Crisis of Oct. 2, 1861, and in his article he said: "In 1855, in a reply to H. Grew, on life from the dead, I quoted from recollection, trusting too much to memory, or else miswrote the idea by inserting the word 'thousand' after 'ten.' Whether such were the fact, or whether it crept in in going through the compositor's hands, is impossible for me to tell. Certain it is, it was not in my 'mathematical' calculation, and was no error of mine in that respect."

It thus appears that "the man who made" the error suggested three ways in which it might have happened, and declared that it was "impossible" for him "to tell" which of them was the real one. The imputation of a "treacherous memory" is a fourth suggestion, but it is not his. A man may be led into a blunder by "trusting too much" even to a most excellent memory.

RUFUS WENDELL.

Salem, Mass., Oct. 3, 1862.

P. S.—In the Crisis of Sept. 18, 1861, I suggested that the mistake of Mr. Storrs "was simply the result of a treacherous memory at the time of replying to Bro. Grew." I knew nothing then of the explanation Mr. S. would give of the matter, and the qualifying words "at the time" were intended to preclude the idea that I regarded his "memory" as not in general a good one. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES, by H. L. Hastings. A volume of 320 pages, elegantly bound, price 75 cts.

Eld. M. Batchelor writes:—

"I feel that the church ought to be doing something to help you circulate that work. What awful times we are living in! Lord help us to be doing the will of God, and be ready to meet the Son of man at his appearance."

Eld. J. A. Libby writes:—

"'The Signs of the Times' went like 'hot cakes.' Gave it a hasty reading, and am well pleased with its matter. I think it well calculated to awaken new trains of thought throughout the church, and among all, if generally read."

Retribution.—A Correction.

On pages 134–135 of the second edition of this work, there is a note. A statement which I there quote from another writer, was made by him through a misunderstanding of the language upon which he commented, and hence an unintentional injustice was thus done to the Reviewer there alluded to. I wish the few persons who have copies of the "second edition" of "Retribution" would expunge the entire NOTE at the bottom of pp. 134, 135, or if they will cut both the leaves out and let me know it, I will send them two others to paste in their places; or they can paste blank paper neatly over the note. The note is of no importance to the argument on either side, but the quotation in it was based upon a wrong understanding of the matter referred to, and should be corrected.

Sufferings of Christ.

How did Christ suffer? Meekly, as a lamb he is led to the slaughter. Who ever saw a lamb fighting its slayer? But when the "fiery trial" comes, we are to "rejoice" because we are "partakers of Christ's sufferings," that when his glory shall be revealed, we may "be glad also with exceeding joy." He suffered even unto death, and by the "authority of the rulers," and if we are to be partakers of his sufferings, some of us may have to lay down our lives. See Isa. 51: 13, also Rev. 13: 15.

Evidently the prophet Habakkuk looked at the same time when he said, "I trembled in myself that I might rest in the day of trouble." Also John on the Isle of Patmos doubtless had a view of the scene when he was told to write, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth." But let us remember, "if we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he will also deny us." We need strong faith to stand now, and shall need all the strength that we can gain by past and present trials, to meet the future. Jesus could not pray, "Father, save me from this hour," but, "Father, glorify thy name." So we would not pray, remove it, knowing that is one of the needful steps before the glory. If we pray "thy kingdom come," we pray also for what must necessarily precede its coming. Then let us not faint.

BRO. GRANT:—In my last communication, in requesting any of the Lord's watchmen who might be passing through Michigan on the Central Railroad to call on us, it should have read, our place is four and a half miles south-west of Galesburg, (instead of forty-five miles,) and ten miles from Kalamazoo. We would love to see one whom the Lord sends with a message to us, or the people here. Inquire for David Hastings. L. P. HASTINGS.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Camden, Maine, Sept. 18th, 1862, of liver complaint, Bro. LEWIS O. BLANDIN, aged fifty-four years and about four months.

Bro. B. was sick about two years; not able to do a day's work in a day for about one year; but was confined to the bed only five weeks. I called to see and converse with him twice. He was calm. Told me frankly he was soon to die, but seemed to have quite good expectation that he should soon live again. He told me that sometimes his evidence did not seem so clear as he should like, but still had no fears of being lost.

He was converted in 1842, under the labors of Bro. Wilder Start, and has ever been known (far and near) as a believer in the Advent doctrine. Very many of our brethren and sisters will bear me witness that Bro. and Srs. Blandin's house was the pilgrim's home. They were far from being rich in this world's goods, and as far from being covetous—if acts known were a true index in the case. Sister B. informs me her husband left a bright evidence of being prepared to fall asleep in Jesus.

The funeral was attended by a large number of the citizens with whom the deceased had mingled in life. A Methodist minister officiated, as an Adventist had not arrived at the appointed hour (if I understand) though expected. Bro. N. Bailey had been sent for, and arrived in time to follow the first with a few remarks made in compliance with a special request of sister Blandin's. Bro. Bailey spoke of the faith and hope of the deceased, and also of the signs which indicate the speedy realization of that hope. The remarks are said to have been "the right words, in the right place."

Lincolnville, Me. JOEL S. RICHARDS.

Fell a victim to the destroyer and laid in a soldier's grave, at Beaufort, F. C., Aug. 7th, EDWIN H. ABBOTT, formerly of Hampton, Ct.

As he was a musician, a part of his work was to bind the wounds of his fellow creatures, and assist in stopping the flow of blood, as they were borne from the battle-field. The great day of judgment alone can reveal the fainting spirits he may have revived, or the perishing ones he may have pointed to the Lamb of God, who saves to the uttermost. It will be comforting to his friends to know he retained his integrity to the last. A short time before his death he writes, "always, thus far, when the truths of the gospel have been assailed, I have had strength to stand for God." An officer writes that he exemplified holy principles amid the moral corruptions of camp life; while others strayed from right and plunged into vice and folly, he sustained a character unblemished.

But he quietly sleeps. His heart no longer aches at the existing horrors of war; his cheek once paled at the thought of desolate firesides, and his own once happy home is now blanched in death, and his once loved but now sorrow-stricken companion weeps alone, her offspring fatherless, she a widow,—O, how lone! May the widow's God be her protector and the orphan's portion; that when earth's sorrows are past, its stains erased, its fount of briny tears forever dried, she may exist with her loved ones restored in the kingdom of God. JENNIE E. ROBERTS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship City of Washington, we have news from Liverpool to the 25th ult., Queenstown 25th.

The American Consul at Vienna wrote to Garibaldi, asking, as he had failed in his patriotic efforts in Italy, if he would offer his valiant arm in the American struggle for liberty and unity, promising him an enthusiastic reception. Garibaldi, under date of Sept. 14, replied: "I am a prisoner and dangerously wounded, and it is, consequently, impossible for me to dispose of myself. However, as soon as I am restored to liberty and my wounds are healed, I shall take the first opportunity to satisfy my desire to serve the great American Republic, of which I am a citizen, and which is now fighting for universal liberty."

The above correspondence appears in one of the newspapers of Vienna.

Garibaldi's condition continued to improve, but it was expected that many months would elapse before he could be removed. Rumors of an amnesty are again in circulation.

Business in the French cotton manufacturing districts has not been so dull since the revolution of 1848.

LATER.

The steamship Jura brings one day's later news.

The London Times in an editorial says that after recent events it is not impossible that we may yet see Garibaldi crossing the Atlantic in the assumed character of an American citizen and fighting for the subjugation of a nation struggling to be free.

The Morning Post remarks that to be consistent Garibaldi should go to the other side, where nine millions are fighting for the right of governing themselves.

ITALY.

There is nothing new relative to Garibaldi's health.

At a large Garibaldian meeting on the Stockholm Exchange, an address was enthusiastically voted expressing sympathy with Garibaldi, and urging the speedy evacuation of Rome by the French.

The Times thinks the recent reverses have restored liberty of speech in the North and apparently almost suspended the government at Washington.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 1. Vera Cruz dates of Sept. 19th state that the French had taken possession of a place called La Soledad, situated between Vera Cruz and Orizaba, and had garrisoned it with the 2d corps of Zouaves. The object is to secure communication between the two cities.

Typhoid fever was making dreadful ravages in the ranks of the Mexican army. Gen. Zarragozza had died of the scourge. It is said that his successor would either be Gen. Commonfort or Gen. Ortegas.

General Forey, Commander-in-Chief of the French army, stopped at Martinique on his way to Vera Cruz, and was expected at that city in a day or two on board the frigate Turenne.

The march of the army on the city of Mexico is expected to take place about the middle of October.

New York, Oct. 2. A letter from the Upper Potomac says the rebels have begun demonstrations on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Bridges, culverts and embankments are being destroyed, and the stock and rails carried off.

Washington, Oct. 3. Reliable refugees who have reached this city from various points in Virginia, represent that the rebels are enforcing a general conscription of white men, who are marched off toward Winchester, while all the negroes, bond and free, are sent to Richmond, to get them out of the way of the Union forces. Over six hundred white men have been taken from Fredericksburg to reinforce the rebel armies.

A letter from Newport in the Providence Journal says that a letter received in that town within a few days, from a gentleman of highest character and standing in Louisiana, if published, would be fully conclusive as to the policy and foresight of the emancipation proclamation. This gentleman states it as a fact that the intention of the traitors is to emancipate and arm, if not the whole, at least 400,000 blacks, and use them against the United States Government with a determination to rule or ruin. This has been for some time reported as probable, but the sources from whence this comes renders it no longer doubtful.

Washington, Oct. 6. The following despatch has been received at Head Quarters here:

The rebels under Van Dorn, Price and Lovell, yesterday attacked our forces at Corinth, but were repulsed with great slaughter and retreated, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. Our forces are in full pursuit.

Their loss is very heavy, and ours is also large. The number of killed and wounded on either side is not known. The rebel loss is reported much larger than ours. We have taken between 700 and 1000 prisoners, not including the wounded.

☞ A new planet was discovered by Dr. Robert Luther, Director of the Observatory at Bilk, Germany, on the evening of Aug. 31. It was situated on Right Ascension three degrees, and declination two degrees North. It was equal in brilliancy to a star of the eleventh magnitude.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. Elders Barnes, Turner, Shears, Gibson, and others will please exert themselves to secure a general attendance.
